(c) Each insurance policy issued by the Administrator shall contain a loss-deductible clause relieving him from any liability for paying the first $100 of a proved and approved claim for loss, plus 5 percent of the remainder, or such larger amount or percentage as may be specified by the Administrator upon issuance of the insurance policy, taking into consideration the class of risk involved.

(d) The face amount of insurance policies and reinsurance agreements outstanding at any one time under this act shall not exceed $3 billion (which limit may be increased with the approval of the President by further amounts not to exceed $2 billion in the aggregate if such increase is deemed advisable to effectuate the purposes of this act) minus the aggregate amount of claims proved and approved under insurance policies and reinsurance agreements issued under this act, but plus fees collected hereunder. For the purpose of applying this limitation, the face amount of any policy or agreement shall be deemed to be the original amount minus claims proved and approved thereunder.

REINSURANCE REGULATORY AUTHORITY

SEC. 11. (a) The Administrator is authorized to issue such regulations regarding reinsurance under this act as he deems advisable in order to carry out the purposes of this act.

(b) The premium rate and terms and conditions of any policy reinsured under the provisions of this act shall be subject to approval by the Administrator.

(c) The Administrator shall use his best efforts to encourage private insurance companies to undertake the issuance of insurance policies covering that portion of the loss in excess of the limits specified in section 10 (a) of this act resulting from damage to or destruction of real or personal property due to flood as defined in this act. The Administrator may seek to achieve this end by offering a program of appropriate reinsurance within the authority granted him by this act.

(d) Wherever practicable, the Administrator may encourage, by offering suitable reinsurance subject to the provisions of this act, the issuance by private insurance companies of policies insuring against loss resulting from damage to or destruction of real or personal property due to flood.

NONDUPLICATION OF AVAILABLE INSURANCE

SEC. 12. (a) No insurance or reinsurance, or loan contract, shall be issued under the provisions of this act covering risks against which insurance is available on reasonable terms from other public or private sources.

(b) No insurance or reinsurance shall be issued under the provisions of this act on any property declared by a duly constituted State or local zoning authority, or other authorized public body, to be in violation of State or local flood zoning laws.

(c) After June 30, 1958, no insurance or reinsurance shall be issued under the provisions of this act in any geographical location unless an appropriate public body shall have adopted and shall keep in effect such flood zoning restrictions, if any, as may be deemed necessary by the Administrator to reduce, within practicable limits, damages from flood in such location.

USE OF OTHER PUBLIC AND PRIVATE FACILITIES

SEC. 13. (a) In providing insurance or reinsurance under this act, the Administrator shall use to the maximum practicable extent the facilities and services of private organizations and persons authorized to engage in the insurance business under the laws of any State (including insurance companies, agents, brokers, and adjustment organizations); and the Administrator may arrange for payment of reasonable compensation therefor.

(b) In providing insurance or reinsurance under this act, the Administrator may use the services of other public agencies, and pay reasonable compensation therefor.

(c) The Administrator may supply, receive from and exchange with other agencies of the Federal Government, State, local, and interstate commissions or agencies, and private organizations experienced in the fields of insurance or reinsurance, such information as may be useful in the administration of the programs authorized by this act.

(d) In carrying out the functions authorized in this act, the Administrator may consult with other agencies of the Federal Government and interstate, State, and local public agencies having responsibilities for land use and flood control and for flood zoning and flood-damage prevention in order to assure that the insurance and reinsurance programs are consistent with the programs of such agencies. Where the program of the Administrator may affect existing or proposed flood-control works under the jurisdiction of agencies of the Federal Government these agencies shall cooperate with the Administrator in coordinating their respective programs. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator shall coordinate the administration of their respective programs relating to flood insurance and reinsurance for agricultural commodities.

CLAIMS PAYMENT AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 14.(a) Under such regulations as the Administrator may prescribe, he shall arrange for prompt adjustment and payment of valid claims for losses covered by insurance or reinsurance under this act.

(b) Upon disallowance of any claim against the Administrator under color of any insurance or reinsurance made available under this act, or upon refusal of the claimant to accept the amount allowed upon any such claim, the claimant may institute an action against the Administrator on such claim in the United States district court in which a major portion (in terms of value) of the insured property is located. Any such action must be begun within 1 year after the date upon which the claimant receives from the Administrator written notice of disallowance or partial disallowance of the claim. For the purposes of this section, the Administrator may be sued and he shall appoint one or more agents within the jurisdiction of each United States district court upon whom service of process can be made in any action instituted under this section. Exclusive jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon all United States district courts to hear and determine such actions without regard to the amount in controversy.

FUNDS AND TREASURY BORROWINGS

SEC. 15. (a) To carry out the purposes of this act, the Administrator is authorized to establish three funds to be known as the (1) Disaster Insurance Fund, (2) Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and (3) Disaster Loan Fund.

(b) Into the Disaster Insurance Fund shall be deposited all insurance fees collected by the Administrator for insurance policies issued by him under this act. Into the Disaster Reinsurance Fund shall be deposited all fees collected by the Administrator in connection with reinsurance made available by him under this act. Into the Disaster Loan Fund shall be deposited amounts accruing to the United States in connection with loan contract transactions.

(c) Moneys in each of the funds may be invested in obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States. Such obligations may be sold and the proceeds derived therefrom may be reinvested as above provided if deemed advisable by the Administrator. Income from such investment or reinvestment shall be deposited in the respective fund from which the investment was made.

(d) All salvage proceeds realized by the Administrator in connection with insurance made available under this act shall be deposited in the Disaster Insurance Fund; and all salvage proceeds realized by the Administrator in connection with reinsurance made available under this act shall be deposited in the Disaster Reinsurance Fund.

(e) The Administrator is authorized to issue to the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time and have outstanding at any one time, in an amount not exceeding $500 million (or such greater amount as may be approved by the President) notes or other obligations in such forms and denominations, bearing such maturities, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such notes or other obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations to be issued hereunder and for such purpose he is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of such notes and obligations.

The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated as public debt transactions of the United States. Funds borrowed under this section shall be deposited, in such proportions as the Administrator deems advisable, in the Disaster Insurance Fund, the Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and the Disaster Loan Fund.

(f) Moneys in the Disaster Insurance Fund, the Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and the Disaster Loan Fund may be used for the following purposes as deemed necessary by the Administrator:

(1) To pay from the Disaster Insurance Fund proved and approved claims for loss under, and other nonadministrative expenses arising in connection with, insurance policies issued by the Administrator under this act;

(2) To pay from the Disaster Reinsurance Fund proved and approved claims under, and other nonadministrative expenses arising in connection with, reinsurance agreements entered into by the Administrator under this act;

(3) To pay for the Disaster Loan Fund the amounts of loans made by the Administrator, amounts in payment of guarantees, and other nonadministrative expenses in connection with direct and guaranteed loans under this act; and

(4) To repay to the Secretary of the Treasury sums borrowed from him in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e) of this section.

(g) All administrative expenses of the Federal Government under this act shall be paid from funds appropriated by the Federal Government.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

SEC. 16. In carrying out his functions under this act, the Administrator shall appoint an advisory committee as authorized by section 601 of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended (68 Stat. 590, 645). Such committee shall consist of not less than 3 nor more than 15 persons familiar with the problems of insurance or reinsurance, to advise the Administrator with respect to the formulation of policies and the execution of functions under this act.

STUDIES

SEC. 17. (a) The Administration shall undertake a continuing study of the practicability of extending the coverage of insurance programs similar to those authorized under this act to any one or more natural disaster perils, other than flood, against which, and for the period during which, insurance protection is not generally and practically available in all geographical locations from other public or private sources.

(b) The Administrator shall also undertake a continuing study of participation by private insurance companies in the programs authorized by this act, in order that the protection it authorizes can be provided, whenever practicable, through insurance policies issued by private insurance companies and reinsured with the Administrator, in lieu of providing such protection through insurance policies issued in the name of the Administrator.

(c) The Administrator shall undertake a continuing study of the feasibility of having private insurance companies take over, with or without some form of Federal financial support, the insurance programs authorized by this act.

ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS

SEC. 18. For the purpose of carrying out functions under this act the Administrator may—

(a) sue or be sued:

(b) without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U. S. C. 529 and 41 U. S. C. 5), and section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412, as amended (40 U. S. C. 278a)), enter into and perform contracts, leases, cooperative agreements, or other transactions, on such terms as he may deem appropriate, with any agency or instrumentality of the United States, or with any State or agency or political subdivision thereof, or with any person, firm, association, or corporation and consent to modification thereof, and make advance or progress payments in connection therewith;

(c) without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U. S. C. 529 and 41 U. S. C. 5), and section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412, as amended (40 U. S. C. 278a)), by purchase, lease, or donation acquire such real and personal property and any interest therein, make advance or progress payments in connection therewith, and hold, use, maintain, insure against loss, sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of such real and personal property as the Administrator deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this act;

(d) appoint, pursuant to civil-service laws and regulations, such officers, attorneys, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; fix their compensation in accordance with the provisions of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended; define their authority and duties; provide bonds for such of them as he may deem necessary; and delegate to them, and authorize successive redelegations by them, of such of the powers vested in him by this act as he may determine;

(e) conduct researches, surveys, and investigations relating to flood insurance and reinsurance and assemble data for the purpose of establishing estimated rates, fees, and premiums for flood insurance and reinsurance under this act;

(f) issue such rules and regulations as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; and

(g) exercise all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this act and such incidental powers as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

RESERVATION OF RIGHTS IN REAL ESTATE ACQUIRED

SEC. 19. The acquisition by the Administrator of any real property pursuant to this act shall not deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil or criminal jurisdiction in and over such property or impair the civil rights under the State or local law of the inhabitants on such property.

TAXATION

SEC. 20. Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property, acquired and held by the Administrator in connection with the payment of any claim under this act, from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 21. The annual report made by the the Administrator to the President for submission to the Congress under existing law on all programs provided for under this act shall contain a comprehensive report concerning (1) the operation of insurance, reinsurance, and loan programs authorized under this act, and (2) the status and result of studies authorized under section 17 of this act, together with such recommendations, if any, for legislative changes deemed by the Administrator desirable to improve the operation of programs authorized under this act. The annual report for the calendar year ending December 31, 1961, shall contain an express opinion of the Administrator, supported by pertinent findings, concerning the advisability of withdrawing in whole or in part Federal financial support for insurance policies to be issued at any time after June 30, 1962, offering protection as authorized in this act, taking into consideration the desirability of offering such protection. Such opinion shall be accompanied by recommendations for legislative changes deemed desirable by the Administrator in the event the opinion is to the effect that any such withdrawal of financial support is advisable.

Mr. SPENCE (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read and open for amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that our very able and efficient Clerk may read a telegram, which is on his desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 16, 1956.

Congressman BRENT SPENCE,

Chairman, House Banking and Currency Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We are pleased that your committee has reported favorably a Federal disaster insurance bill. This legislation is tremendously important to our region and to the country. We hope you will continue to help passage of this legislation before adjournment. We are particularly glad your committee eliminated the requirement for States to share the cost and we feel it is important for the House and for the conference committee to concur in this action. The New England Governors Conference meeting in Newport, R. I., today expresses its appreciation for your fine cooperation in advancing this legislation.

Regards.

DENNIS J. ROBERTS,

Chairman, New England Governors Conference.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to speak for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no misunderstanding about the position I take today, or the position I took Saturday, on this bill, I am not asking you to vote "no," and I am not asking you to vote "yes," leaving that to your own decision. I am in favor of insurance for any contingency which may be covered by insurance. I am willing, if necessary, for the United States Government to go into the insurance business to that limited extent necessary in extraordinary situations, or to cover an area into which a private insurance company, or group of companies, may not properly enter. We will have an example of this shortly in a bill which will give the Government the authority to insure against a disaster resulting from some unknown condition which might arise after an atomic reactor is put into operation.

Nobody in this Congress, and certainly no member of a committee familiar with the atomic-energy program familiarly called atoms for peace, has any idea there will be such a disaster. We are dealing with a new industry, based upon an unknown and fearful power. Private insurance companies are willing to go into the field and to insure a private powerplant, using a reactor for the heat unit, to the extent of, say, $65 million. Suppose however, as a remote possibility, something should happen which would cause widespread damage in a congested area. Would $65 million cover it? Who knows? Therefore, the Government is asked to insure above this $65 million limit. This seems reasonable to me.

More important in this discussion, the Department of Agriculture has had long, and at times painful experience, with an effort to put the government into the insurance business, to cover crop failures. When I was on the Committee on Agriculture, the first 4 years I was here, this was an ever-present problem in this committee. Our intentions were excellent; the methods of working out the problem were strictly bureaucratic.

The regulations were so loosely drawn that a farmer could wait, almost until he could foresee failure, through a probable drought or other disaster factor, and then take out the insurance.

It was not necessary for insurance to be taken out widely over a possible disaster area. This is the fundamental concept of all insurance. Insurance requires, to be successful, that a large group of people insure themselves against whatever the hazard may be, at low premiums, so that these premiums are not burdensome on any of them individually, and then when a disaster strikes one of the insured, the entire group is able to carry the loss, and the insurance company is able to stay in business. The only way a Government insurance company can stay in business is to draw on the taxpayers of the entire United States as if they were all policyholders in the company.

Another problem we faced was—and I think this was subsequent to the reorganization of the crop insurance program—the elimination of a disaster area from future insurance. Is this the intent of flood insurance? If, for example, a flood strikes the area of some of my friends from Connecticut, will the Government pay the insurance contracted for under this bill, and then say that the area is barred from future insurance indefinitely, because it happened to have one disaster?

Coming back to the crop insurance program, which is still in operation, it was authorized by an act passed in 1938. The first policies were written for the 1939 crop year. From 1939 to 1947, inclusive, the Government lost $73 million. The program was then revised and limited. Between 1948 and 1955, inclusive, the loss was an additional $11 million. These figures do not include administration costs and I would estimate that such costs, for the 17 years, would come to another $1 million.

When I say "revised," I mean the program was limited to a certain few counties. It was not offered widely, as this flood program will be. Starting in 1948, with only 394 counties, it is now offered in almost 1,000 counties. We are trying here to cover "disaster," from natural causes, unlimited, which is a very different thing from crop failure in designated counties. The crop insurance program has a requirement that 200 farmers, or one-third of the producers, in any county must sign up, before that county is eligible for the insurance protection. It is a continuous contract, subject to cancellation by either party on or before a date specified in the contract.

I suggested on Saturday, Mr. Speaker, that I would try to get together a few questions and submit them to the Banking and Currency Committee, to be answered immediately if that is possible, and certainly to be answered before any program of this kind is offered to the people at large.

Is it the intent of the committee that this program shall be written as if all taxpayers in the United States were policyholders; that is, will the entire body of taxpayers subsidize this program, benefiting a limited few? If so, then we are openly taking the money of a large number of people, for the personal benefit of a few people, many of whom are at least partially responsible for the damages they have suffered, as I will try to explain.

If we are not to consider all taxpayers as premium payers, without benefit, then the presumption is that the premiums charged the policyholders in this program will be adequate to pay all costs and all losses. Is this the intent of the program, and of the committee which brings it to the floor? It is not so in the crop-insurance program.

If the committee says that it is the intent to cover all losses by the premiums collected, as would be necessary in a private insurance company, then does the committee mean that this will also include the overhead costs, or will the taxpayers be expected to set up a new agency, or a section in an existing agency, to carry on this program, without this overhead cost being charged against the fund built up by the premiums? If the Government is to set up such an agency, then I hazard a guess that there will probably be 50 percent more employees in it than would be required to conduct the same operation under private enterprise. Will the taxpayers be expected to pay for this, as they pay for the other operations of bureaucracy?

I am quite sure the Banking and Currency Committee cannot answer the next question, but I will ask it: Will a trained insurance executive be placed in charge of this program? Will actuarial methods be employed in setting it up, and setting the premiums?

Will an entire area be designated in advance as a distress area, and will a minimum number of policyholders be required for the area, in order to make residents eligible for such insurance? In commercial insurance, we apply the risk to an entire group of hazards, for example, automobile accidents, or fires, or deaths, or whatever it may be; in this program, the hazard must necessarily be applied to an area which might be struck by a flood. It is very important to know whether a few individuals will be given insurance in an area which meteorological records indicate is subject to periodic floods? In that case, it would almost be a safe bet that the policyholder would win. The experience of the Department of Agriculture would be helpful here.

Is it the intention to remove a flood area, where losses have been paid? This has been done with crop insurance. What percentage of the probable value, or the probable loss, will the policyholder be required to cover? Will the State, or the county, or the municipality, or any similar governmental agency or division, be required to join in this program, by helping underwrite the losses—for many of which they must take at least partial responsibility—or is this to be entirely a Government subsidized and managed program? To what extent will the people be required to protect themselves, against floods or similar hazards? Out where I live, we form "flood control districts," as the gentleman from California [Mr. McDONOUGH] pointed out on Saturday. We tax ourselves, we underwrite various flood-control projects, quite often with the help of the Army engineers, as well as with the State or county engineers, and we do everything we possibly can to protect ourselves from the losses which will be covered in this sort of insurance. Will the people of other States be required to do the same thing or are they being asked to put their entire faith in a Government which seems to think that a blank check is the sure cure for anything, from international friendship to producing more scientists in our schools?

Will the people be permitted to build, either individual residences and stores, or entire subdivisions, in areas which are known to be flood hazard areas? This is a common practice—human nature being what it is—in regions where floods are intermittent, but which history shows comes along at intervals, with some regularity? If so, what interval will the committee establish for a flood to be considered a disaster, rather than a recurrent problem to be expected according to established statistical tables?

Out where I live, we have rivers, as I said to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND], where, if we fall in them, we get up and dust ourselves off; yet any year, if we have a heavy snow in the mountains, followed by a sudden hot spell and a rain, the waters rush down these rivers, completely filling them, and occasionally washing away heavy bridges the casual observer would never think could be affected. Yet I have seen, time and time again, homes and business properties built in these areas, with the customary optimism of the people of America, calm in the assurance that nothing could happen to them, or perhaps with a synthetic assurance, produced in the last 20 years, that if anything does happen, even if it is their own fault, the Government will take care of it.

As a matter of fact, what is a flood? There was a picture in the paper, Saturday morning, showing the picture of a home in Falls Church, with a flooded cellar. Is that a "flood," eligible for the insurance we are talking about? Certainly the waters that rushed down the streets of another city, to a height which flooded the stores and made it necessary for the police and firemen to check cars to see if there was any loss of life, is definitely a "flood," but how could anyone have known in advance, either that the floods would hit that particular spot or that his home would be the one hit, or that his car would be parked at that particular spot on that particular day? Is he to be permitted to come in after the accident, and take out insurance?

Carrying it a little farther, what about hurricanes, and the floods connected with hurricanes, which are actually not self-starting floods, so to speak, but disasters connected with some greater disaster? Are we to read the fine print on the back of these policies and find out that unless the flood started of its own accord, due to an excess of water, the policy will not pay off? We are not unfamiliar with the fine print on the back of insurance policies.

Will the proposed program retain the features discussed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON]? In the coal areas, where I was born, entire communities are undermined by shafts and tunnels, which are constant hazards to the communities, with or without floods. The people living in these communities have been familiar with this situation, sometimes for three generations. Will they be permitted to shift this known hazard to the Government, or will all the people of the United States be expected to underwrite it, or will you have a situation where one house falls down because water happens to get in an old mine shaft, in which case the Government will call that a flood and pay for the damage, while residences a short distance away will fall down simply because the earth collapsed due to the mining operations underneath, with just as much damage to the property holders, but in that case, the Government will assume no responsibility?

I think I have asked this question by indirection, but I will ask it specifically. Will the United States designate in advance the distress areas where insurance may be written, or will anyone in the United States be permitted to buy the insurance?

Will we now open offices in every State in the United States, and possibly in counties inside the States, even if we have very few policies in force in that State or that county? If that is to be the program, then I suggest that this bill should carry, as its short title, the following: "Congress's Gift to Bureaucracy of 1956."

How long after a storm is reported as heading for Florida, or Connecticut, or Massachusetts, just for example, will a property be allowed to take out this insurance? As I remarked above, we had that little problem during the early days of crop insurance. Has any attempt at all been made to figure out the cost of this program to the American taxpayer? I can assure you that this is not a minor item in setting up this program, nor in passing this bill.

The paragraphs, in both the bill and the accompanying report, concerning which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] and I had some exchange on Saturday, actually do give the Administrator the right to reduce premiums to groups of people who, in the Administrator's personal opinion, cannot afford to pay premiums based on actuarial requirements. This is the first time I have seen this concept of "ability to pay" applied to an entirely statistical program, such as insurance. I would really like to know whose idea that was, and how it got into the bill.

Finally, did anyone consult the Housing and Home Finance Agency, regarding this particular bill, or are we facing here a situation which is not entirely new to the Congress? In this instance, it is known that the idea before us sprung from a casual remark by the President at a Connecticut airport when, startled by the flood damages, he made a perfectly natural remark that there ought to be insurance against that sort of disaster. Now we are told this is the President's bill. Yet the Senate version of this bill was different from the House version. Are both of them exactly what the President wants? How can that be? I have no information whatever that the President specifically and personally approved either bill. Have we any indication that the Housing and Home Finance Agency, or the Federal Housing Administration in particular, which will inherit this headache, has indicated an approval of this particular bill, or of either bill? We cannot cover both in a blanket approval; they are different in important details, and these details might spell success or failure for the entire program.

The three important questions, boiled down, are obviously these:

First. Will we supply a crystal ball, on request, to any property owner? If not, how is he to know that he faces a flood hazard, and therefore should take out insurance? How many of the people who suffered losses in Florida or Connecticut or Massachusetts would actually have held flood insurance policies, when the floods hit them last year?

Second. Will the Government designate areas as flood-hazard areas, eligible for flood insurance? How about the individual who does not live in that area, but gets hit by an unexpected flood? In other words, why is this program better or as good, as a straight disaster relief plan, such as we have had for years, and which we reactivate or enlarge for any emergency—flood, hurricane, fire, or any other disaster? If we have this insurance, will all these other sufferers be barred from relief in the future? Or is this just an additional program, conceived to get and spend more money, and employ more people in government?

Third. How much will it cost the taxpayers? We know it will cost $7½ billion, because that is the authorization. How many Members are optimistic enough to think that will be all, Mr. Chairman? Not I, for one.

I suggest the committee reread the testimony of the representatives of the crop insurance program, in their own hearings, at page 75 et seq. This, as I said before, is a noble idea, but I challenge any member of the committee to say that it has been carefully thought out and the details and problems studied, as they should have been.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of insurance, for any purpose to which insurance may be applied. Like the President, I wish there were some way to insure against disasters. I think at the moment there ought to be some way to insure the Congress against having bills like this one, highly technical in nature, brought to the floor at 5 o'clock on a Saturday afternoon, in the last few days of a confused and confusing session.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I am taking this time to try to give the House a better idea of what this bill seeks to do and to answer any questions, if I can, that may be in the minds of Members as to what this bill is intended to do and how we hope to accomplish its desirable ends.

I cannot recall any other instance in my short period of service here when there were more bills introduced on a particular subject than on this one. When our committee went into executive session, if my recollection serves me right, we had a count of some 72 Members of the House who had introduced bills on this subject; 25 Members, who were not members of the committee, came before it and testified in support of the principle of this bill asking that we bring to the floor of the House a disaster insurance bill. This is far from a perfect bill. It is the best we could do with a very difficult subject as an initial step.

Everybody understands, and we say explicity in our report, this bill is an experiment. It is an experimental plan which may or may not work, but let us put something into effect; let us try it, let us constantly survey it and review it, and then improve on it after we have had a year or two experience. In time we may be compelled to decide to repeal it. But it is our duty to at least make an initial try at solving the problem.

Let us understand, too, an insurance program or bill is not something new or novel in Federal Government activity. We have in existence today 15 different insurance plans sponsored by the United States Government, run by United States bureaus. Crop insurance is only 1 of the 15.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman tell us why the committee chose insurance for so difficult a subject as compared to straight disaster relief which does not have to tell in advance through some crystal ball where you ought to insure?

Mr. MULTER. We have been struggling along all through the years giving relief when a disaster occurred. We would move in and try to take care of a particular situation as it confronted us after the disaster. We have had bills year in and year out to prevent the damages caused by these disasters. We are still working on those programs. No one stands up here and says: "Let us forget about the disasters, let us not try to prevent the damage caused by them." We have had bills to try to lessen and to prevent such damage. We know from the information that has been submitted to the Congress that it will take 50 years to get existing and contemplated programs completed, which may prevent floods and which lessen the dangers of disasters of this kind.

We are not going to insure under this bill against all natural disasters, although some of the bills introduced asked for that. I am not so sure but what that should have been done. I think we should have included all natural disasters under this plan.

But the greater consensus of opinion seems to be: Let us move slowly, let us proceed with the subject of damage caused by floods, and if we can work that out and it works out all right, maybe we can broaden it. On the other hand maybe we will have to abandon it altogether.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman means to minimize the losses?

Mr. MULTER. The gentleman is right. I do not think we will ever prevent floods, but we can minimize the losses. The present estimate is that if we spend all the money we are spending and more, too, it will take us 50 years to get to the point where we can prevent many of these catastrophes and most of the damage that is caused by them.

Bear in mind that the committee was most reluctant to have the Government get into this new field of insurance. We begged, we pleaded, we cajoled the insurance underwriters to come forward with some plan, something by which they could get into this and do it privately. We asked them to come in with a plan so the Government would limit its activities to a reinsurance plan. We could not get them to do anything about it.

We groped around in the dark and came up with the best we could. We come before you and say: Here is the plan. Now, when the insurance companies come forward and say: We will write this insurance at a reasonable rate, the Government under this bill is restricted from selling insurance in that area or to those persons. This bill gives our people the right to buy this insurance from the Government only where the private insurance companies will not sell it.

My district and many of the districts in my immediate area do not need this bill. Thank God, we have not suffered these catastrophes. But if you ever had the experience we have had and that I have had—such as when it was my duty to go through some of these flood areas as chairman of a Subcommittee on Small Business that had jurisdiction over disaster loans—there is not a one of you who would not be up here saying that we must have this kind of a bill. Let us move forward and try to do something about it.

I started to indicate what happens in the insurance field. Somebody raised the question last week as to what can be the maximum loss that the Government can sustain under this program. The maximum amount of insurance under any condition that can be written under this program is $5 billion, $3 billion in the first instance and the President may allow additional insurance to the extent of $2 billion. But that does not mean there will be a $5 billion loss.

The best analogy I can give to you on that subject is in the fire-insurance field. Today there is more than $160 billion of fire insurance outstanding. Does anyone think that any one of the companies or all of the companies will have to pay out the maximum amount of $160 billion any time or in any one year? Does anyone believe that these insurance companies will have to pay the full face amount of the policies outstanding?

Let us take into account one more thing as an analogy with reference to what our losses may be. You have in the record testimony as to the maximum amount of losses in any one year caused by floods. It has never gone over $1.2 billion in any one year. The average is $240 million a year during the last 24 years. Some years it was as low as $2.8 million.

The insurance companies on their fire insurance with about $165 billion face amount of insurance outstanding have never been called upon to pay more than a maximum of 43 percent of the premiums collected. The maximum amount of premiums collected, according to the latest reports we have, was in 1954, which was $1,654,000,000, and the total amount of losses paid out was 43 percent of that. On their extended coverage, which takes in wind, tornado, and water damage out of aggregate premiums collected of $510 million in 1954, they paid out in losses 65 percent; not 65 percent of the face amount of the policies but 65 percent of the premiums. So, having that in mind, you must surely agree with me that we will never be called upon to pay the maximum of the insurance that is permitted to be written under this program.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. No one ever knows when or where these floods will come.

Mr. MULTER. The Lord does not tell us.

Mr. CANFIELD. One does not have to live alongside a river or a stream. The worst kind of floods are the flash floods that follow hurricanes, which can come at any time anywhere.

Mr. MULTER. That is true. Up to a few years ago, those of us in New York City said, "A hurricane will never strike New York City." Yet, we have been stricken twice by hurricanes in the last few years.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to associate myself with the gentleman and tell him that he has done a very commendable job. I can remember when he came out into my country and saw exactly what happened. The only relief we got for the individual, the little fellow that lived down along the river, was from the Red Cross.

Mr. MULTER. Quite right, sir.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I am perfectly willing to agree that this is a novel idea, but I want you to tell the gentleman from Connecticut how that little fellow down by the river was going to have this insurance before the flood came. How did he know the flood was coming?

Mr. MULTER. He now knows that it has come. If we pass this bill, he can get his insurance.

Another point you raise. After this program gets working, the State is called upon to participate, not in paying the loss——

Mr. PHILLIPS. Not in this bill.

Mr. MULTER. We took it out of this bill, the requirement for the State to pay part of the subsidy, because as the bill came to us from the Senate it required that in 1959 the States should begin to participate by paying a part of the premium. When we and the States see how this program is working in 1957, 1958, and 1959, then we will decide whether to bring the States in. Up to this moment many States have indicated that they will not or cannot participate in any program requiring them to take part in it, so far as financial assistance is concerned. There is no more reason for a State to pay part of this premium than to require such payments in crop insurance. We never required it under that program.

Mr. PHILLIPS. You will still have demands for distress payments.

Mr. MULTER. We cannot foreclose that. And I am sure if disaster occurs, where it is not covered by this law, we will come to their aid just as we have always done.

Mr. PHILLIPS. This is a supplementary program, and you have not said yet how you are going to know in advance whether he will take out insurance.

Mr. MULTER. We had the weather people before us, and all of the other departments before us. They can tell us what areas need special attention. The States are required to participate in this program by setting up zoning regulations. States that do not do that will be excluded from the program. So will persons who violate the zoning restrictions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIES: On page 25, line 13, after the word "States", strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, That after June 30, 1959, each State shall pay from time to time into the disaster insurance fund, hereinafter created, an amount equal to one-half of the difference between the fees charged for insurance policies issued after such date on property in such State, and the amount which would have been charged if the 'estimated rates' were applied."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment but reserve it at this time.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to restore to the bill that provision that was in the Senate bill which says:

That after June 30, 1959, each State shall pay from time to time into the Disaster Insurance Fund, hereinafter created, an amount equal to one-half of the difference between the fees charged for insurance policies issued after such date on property in such State, and the amount which would have been charged if the "estimated rates" were applied.

The House committee took that provision out of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, over the weekend I read the bill and the report of the committee carefully. The committee is quite frank in its presentation of this bill. It acknowledges that it is an experiment. They have no idea whether it will be successful. There can be no question about the fact that the people in New England and in the Carolinas have suffered tremendous losses on account of floods. I am sure all of us are deeply sympathetic with the tremendous problems presented by those floods.

However, there are some facts with reference to this bill that the Members should understand. In the first place, the total amount of policies that can be issued is stated at $5 billion; $3 billion in the bill, and the President has the authority to increase that amount $2 billion, and loans may be granted to the extent of $2½ billion.

In other words, here is a program which can commit the Government to an obligation of $7½ billion. I understand that premium fees will be collected and that the possible loss will not be $5 billion.

There is a provision for a subsidy of approximately 40 percent. However, there is another provision which gives authority to increase the subsidy in the cases of those who are unable to pay the premium rates.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we ought to give very careful and sober thought and consideration to the plight of our Government. We are already committed to about $750 billion of obligations. I know it will be argued that the Government will not have to pay those obligations, but suppose we have a severe depression—and there is not a man who can say that we will not have another depression. In the long history of the United States we have had alternate periods of boom and depression and there may come a time when our country will face a severe depression. If that should happen what are we going to do with all of the direct and indirect obligations that we have already made?

The other body placed a provision in this bill requiring each State to pay one-half. That was taken out of the bill. And you heard the telegram of the governors of the New England States congratulating the committee because they removed it.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the time has come when we must say to the States and their governors, "Are you willing to shoulder your responsibilities? Some of you are always meeting in convention and denouncing Congress for violating States rights, and yet when any measure comes before Congress you are anxious for the Federal Government to pay the bill."

Why? Why should not each State contribute one-half of the cost of this program? The States are in far better financial condition than the Federal Government. I do not think there is a State in this Union that is in the serious financial plight of the Federal Government. Why should the State governors and why should we as representatives of districts impose upon this already overburdened Federal Government obligations that at least ought to be shared by our States?

The committee's report explains it by saying that the States have constitutional amendments and that they cannot afford to foot the bill. It is the same argument they used on the Federal aid to education bill. What can prevent the States from removing their constitutional amendments if they want to solve this problem of tremendous losses through floods? If there is a strong sentiment in the districts of these gentleman for some measure of protection, what is there to prevent the States of this Union from sharing the responsibility, and what will become of our States if Congress discharges all of the duties and responsibilities of government?

I fear, and I fear it sincerely, that we are going to reduce the States of this Union to mere instrumentalities. They are losing their entity. It is this process of the Federal Government's assuming all of the obligations and the governors and officials of the States being willing for us to do it, and applying pressure upon us to support that sort of policy, which is whittling down State sovereignty and States rights.

Mr. Chairman, suppose we pass this legislation and we add another burden of $7.5 billion of indirect obligations to the Federal Government. That would further increase the astronomical and staggering national obligation to heights that have never been known in the history of the world. Are we serving the interests of our States and of our peoples by continuing this policy? Are we serving the interest of America when we permit the States through their governors to petition us to undertake without their participation program after program? Yet when we suggest to them that they participate in a program some of them are not willing to do so; in fact, some of them had rather abandon a program than have to share in its costs.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MACDONALD. Do I take it that the gentleman would like the State of Texas to participate in the drought payments that are made by the Federal Government?

Mr. DIES. The drought relief is entirely a different proposition. We gave tremendous relief to the people of New England, and we ought to give it to them. Wherever there is a flood or a drought or a national calamity, as a matter of humanitarianism, whether here or abroad, of course we are going to help.

But here you have an entirely different proposition.

Do you know that under this bill you are going to insure the property of the States and the local units of government? Did you ever hear of anything as audacious as that? Do the governors and officials of States want the Federal Government, which has the greatest burden ever known in history, to insure their own property? Under this bill we are going to subsidize insurance for States that are infinitely better off than we are.

Let me say something else: Do you have any idea what faces us in the next 4 or 5 years? Suppose we go to war. I pray to God that we will not, but certainly we must anticipate that there is a real danger that America may be involved in the most disastrous war in history. Are we not going to need all of the money and all of the resources that we can possibly marshal? I read in the paper this morning that the cost of living had gone up to the highest point ever known. Do you know why that cost of living continues to go up? It is because this Federal Government continues to run deficits and borrow money through the most unsound methods ever known. Do you know how you are getting this money? You are not getting it honestly. You are selling bonds to your own agency, the Federal Reserve Bank, and it is a vicious process of inflation.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I find that the House will not have an opportunity to consider the bill (H. R. 11799) reported by my committee known as the Overseas Fair Labor Standards Act; a rule was granted and reported to the House July 17.

I am informed that this bill will not be taken up because the Philippine Government is opposed to it because certain provisions are alleged to discriminate against certain Filipino workers in Guam.

This is a serious charge; this House deserves the facts, even though it will have no opportunity to act on the bill. At the outset I want to deny, categorically, that this bill discriminates against Filipinos or citizens of any other nation; it treats all alike.

But, by way of explanation, let me tell you why the bill ought to be passed.

The Supreme Court has decided, in one of its legislative moods, that we wanted the wage-hour law to be extended to our military and naval bases overseas, both in foreign countries and in certain territories and possessions. Needless to say there is absolutely no indication that Congress, at any time even considered applying the wage-hour law to overseas bases, either in foreign countries or in possessions and territories—and I know we never intended such coverage.

It has not yet been decided that the actual work done is "in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce", as required by the act; but this is just the next step.

So I appointed a subcommittee and we looked into the matter. We found that our overseas bases had been and were being built with native labor. We found that we had been paying whatever the prevailing wage was in the country where the base was being built; in North Africa, for example, we paid Arabs about 10 cents an hour. We also found that the Defense Department had agreed to reimburse its contractors if it came about, at some later date, that the wage-hour law was applicable. We also found that the wages to be paid were based on agreements between the foreign countries and this country, as worked out by the Department of State.

So we drafted a bill, H. R. 11799.

This bill says, as simply as we could say it, that we never intended the wage-hour law to apply to work done in constructing United States military and naval bases in foreign countries and in these possessions.

Insofar as the overseas bases in foreign lands are concerned, that ends it; insofar as Guam, Wake Island, America Samoa, and the Panama Canal Zone are concerned, we proposed to establish tripartite industry committees to determine what the minimum wages should be in the future.

Now why does this concern the Philippine Government?

Here is why: In one of these bases, in Guam, we have been using labor imported from the Philippines because we could not get native labor. We went to the Philippine Government and agreed to pay, not what they were getting in the Philippines, but 25 percent more, plus room, board, and medical and dental services and transportation to and from Guam. All of which amounted to approximately 54 cents per hour, or more than twice the 25 cents an hour minimum in the Philippines.

The United States has lived up to that agreement to the letter. Some 13,000 Filipinos have been imported to Guam under the above agreement.

But then the Supreme Court comes along and says that this work might be covered by the minimum wage law at some time in the future. This means that the some 13,000 Filipinos might be entitled to the difference between the minimum wage required of business in this country and what they have been paid in the past.

What will it cost the United States?

Let us remember, that by not passing this bill, we not only make it possible for these 13,000 Filipinos to get this unexpected windfall, but we make it possible for hundreds of thousands of other foreigners, Japanese, Iranians, Okinawans, Cubans, Turks, Greeks, and on and on to do exactly the same thing these Filipinos are planning to do to the United States.

The potential cost to this Government could be approximately one and one-half billions of dollars if we let this thing run on—I repeat, one and one-half billions.

Yet we are not considering it because the Government of the Philippines does not want us to do so. Yet, the Department of State, War, Navy, Air Force, Defense, Interior, and Labor want it handled.

Just one more word on this thing. I said at the outset that there was no discrimination involved; there is none. This bill treats the Philippine Government and the Filipino workers precisely and exactly the same as workers recruited from all of the other foreign countries where these bases are being built. The Filipinos will receive no more and no less fair treatment than we have provided for the nationals of all other countries in the world.

Yet, of all the countries involved, only the Philippine Government has seen fit to protest.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion, unless we make available insurance equally to all peoples similarly situated, we should not have an insurance law. The theory of this insurance is that the insured will pay the premium for the insurance. It would be gaged on the actuarial experience and the probability of flood. If you make the State pay half of the damage and the loss—in many States there will be no insurance. In other States, there will be insurance. In many of the States where the necessity for the insurance is the greatest, there will be none. This is a difficult problem. Sometimes we have made forward steps that have cost us nothing. If we carry out the theory upon which this is based, it will not entail a great loss by the Government. Certainly I would not support an insurance plan by the Government that would make available insurance to some and not to others similarly situated because of lack of State action.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think I should make it clear at the outset that I do so as one who is opposed to the bill. But, I rise in support of this amendment because of the use in connection with this whole plan of the word "insurance." Mr. Chairman, insurance contemplates a spreading of the risk. There is no spreading of the risk under this bill because by its very terms, it is patent that the only ones who will be taking insurance will be those who are in the flood areas. One can say it is a complete subsidy, but when one reads the language on page 29 one can see that behind the bill is a risk provision for almost the total face amount of the policies if the Administrator so desires, at least as far as owner-occupied dwellings are concerned. Therefore, I rise in support of this amendment, in that by requiring all the States in which insurance is made, to participate in the plan we will at least be spreading the risk over the entire State, and will be coming perhaps closer at least to the term which is applied, mistakenly I believe, to this program in this bill, namely, "flood insurance."

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I listened with interest to the telegram from the governors of the New England States, but I think there is a responsibility on the part of the individual States to do something about this particular program. Too often the States, as was so eloquently stated, run to the Congress with every problem they have, and expect the United States Government, the Federal Government, to take care of every problem that arises in the several States. Here is an opportunity for the States to do something for the very people for whom they desire that something be done.

It would seem to me that this is a reasonable request. The bill is a substitute for a Senate bill, and the Senate bill included this particular provision. As was stated so well by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER], this is a bill where there is a great deal of discretionary power left with the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency in the administration of this particular bill. All of us realize the type of man who is Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. I think the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] knows him as well as any man in this Chamber, and when he expresses some concern about how this will be run and whether this will be a great bureaucracy, I think the very nature of Mr. Cole indicates it will not be so.

As far as this amendment is concerned, there is a responsibility on the part of the State to do its share.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield.

Mr. CANFIELD. This amendment, in principle at least, is consistent with the administration's recommendation on this subject?

Mr. BOLAND. That is right. This is an experiment. It is a complete experiment. One way to determine whether it is good is to get this adopted. This is one way to get this bill passed. It is the only way to get a flood-insurance bill during this session.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield.

Mr. FLOOD. It is my conclusion from listening to this argument that if this amendment succeeds you will destroy this bill.

Mr. BOLAND. I do not share the gentleman's concern at all. I think if this amendment does not succeed you will destroy the bill.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BOLAND. I will.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman knows the interest of some States will not be as paramount as some others.

Mr. BOLAND. That is true.

Mr. FLOOD. Then we agree on that.

Mr. BOLAND. There is complete agreement on that.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman knows that many States will not participate. The funds will be raised to such an extent that it will be prohibitive.

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman does not know now how many people will participate.

Mr. FLOOD. The passage of this amendment will completely destroy this bill.

Mr. BOLAND. I disagree completely with the gentleman. As a matter of fact, this amendment gives this proposal a real chance of being enacted into law, perhaps the only chance.

This committee must realize that this bill must go to conference with Members of the Senate. The Senate bill on flood insurance included the features of participation by States in the matter of meeting the cost of the fees charged for policies issued under this proposal. In the face of congressional adjournment and the Senate's position on this matter, it seems to me elementary that we will not get a flood insurance bill at all if this amendment is not written into the bill. As a matter of fact there is serious doubt that the bill will pass this very body unless we incorporate the amendment into the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that those of us in this House who are deeply concerned about flood insurance take what we can get. The bill with the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] will have clear sailing with the Senate and I am confident will meet with approval of the President.

I ask the Members from those areas that are not affected by the ravages of floods to join us in passing this bill. It is in the nature of an experiment. There are enough safeguards to protect the interest of the taxpayer. The discretionary power provided to the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance must be granted for this is in truth an experiment. It is an experiment that can, given proper drive and enthusiasm, succeed. It well might be proven in the days and years ahead to be one of the most worthwhile and beneficial programs that this Congress has passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and as one who offered the amendment in committee striking the Senate amendment requiring State participation on a 50–50 basis after June 30, 1959. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas has made a seemingly meritorious argument in support of his amendment to require State participation after June 30, 1959. I find myself, in most instances, believing as he believes on matters of this kind. I am not philosophically opposed to the idea. It sounds right and is ordinarily proper when Federal funds will be used. As a matter of fact when I began talking with representatives from my own State before I knew too much about this legislation I contended that it appeared to be a matter in which the individual States should participate. The more I studied this legislation, however, and the practical problems to flow from it, the more I was convinced that now is not the time to make a decision concerning State participation, even though such participation is postponed. I believe this amendment may well defeat the purpose of this bill and have the effect of keeping some States, perhaps many of them, out of this program even though they might wish to come in, and should be entitled to that privilege.

I am satisfied that this particular matter, as well as this entire legislation, has been very carefully and thoroughly studied. The Senate Banking and Currency Securities Subcommittee, after some eight or more hearings, in Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York, District of Columbia, and finally Washington, and after careful consideration of many proposals, unanimously voted out this legislation, substantially as it is, without the requirement of State participation. The full Senate Banking and Currency Committee voted it out unanimously. I took occasion to study the debate on the floor of the Senate on May 10 when and where this amendment was adopted by a vote of 39 to 31, with 25 not voting. There were some in the Senate committee who originally took the position that the States should be required to participate. I believe the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Senator BUSH, at first took that position. After more careful study of the problems involved, however, he stated—and so did others—that he was convinced the States should not be required to participate for a number of reasons, and among those was the fact that practically every State has a constitutional prohibition against the use of public funds for private purposes. In addition, there is the serious question of the financial ability of many States even if the people of the States voted to remove the constitutional prohibition.

Mr. DIES rose.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I think I can anticipate what the gentleman is going to ask and I will try to give him an answer.

Mr. DIES. I do not think the gentleman understood this amendment. This amendment does not compel them to participate until June 30, 1959.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I was anticipating that question, and I am going to get into that. This amendment raises a constitutional question with the States.

Let us assume for the purposes of the argument that every State could have its legislature meet within the next 3 years and on that a constitutional amendment can be submitted for consideration by the people. The people of those States will still have to vote on the proposition. Let us further assume for purposes of argument, and this is a very doubtful assumption, that each of the States between now and June 30, 1959 would adopt a constitutional amendment authorizing the States to participate on a 50–50 basis. Under the laws of most of the States, a finding of a lack of public purpose, if made, could not be cured merely by a constitutional amendment. Some courts have already created a body of law indicating that such an amendment would likely be in conflict with provisions of the United States Constitution dealing with a republican form of government, and equal protection of the laws to all persons, despite State action to the contrary. I cite article 10, section 4 of the Federal Constitution, and amendment No. 14.

I am convinced there are many States in the union which could not afford to participate in this program by 1959. Many others could never bear the burden.

The requirement now of State participation after June 30, 1959 will, in my opinion, cause lengthly and unnecessary delays in getting under way a program so desperately needed now.

It would handicap the program in most of the States and make it totally ineffective in the States that need it most.

However, let us not forget that this is not a State problem. If the State of North Carolina, for example, could stop the waters of some river from flowing into North Carolina from another State, and vice versa, it would be a different situation. Take New York State as an example. I understand that one of the worst flood areas we have in the country is created by the merging of two rivers, the Susquehanna and the Chenango. I am told that eight-tenths of the Susquehanna flows through Pennsylvania, that it comes to New York State only at Binghamton, which, at times, has been badly flooded. The Chenango River is in New York State.

Take the Delaware River. It affects New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. It may well affect others.

What will be the attitude of people in these States when they know that different courses may be taken in each State, and when they are told that after 3 years, they will not know whether or not their insurance will be continued, or whether the States in which they live will change their constitutions. They will not want to take out the insurance. When they buy it, they want some assurance that it will continue. The bill itself already raises enough doubt when it necessarily contains provisions requiring a report later by the Administrator as to the advisability of continuing the program longer.

The requirement of State participation is not needed to accomplish the essential purposes for which this amendment is proposed, namely, to provide an incentive to the States to reduce the flood hazards and, secondly, to reduce the possible cost to the Federal Treasury. These ends can be accomplished, practically, at least for the next few years, and effectively by the flood-zone provisions of this bill. Did you know that the Administrator can refuse flood insurance to property owners in any State in the Union where such property is located and used in violation of the State's zoning laws which laws, I should say, have to be approved by the Administrator of this flood-insurance program? After June 30, 1958, it withholds benefits from any area failing to adopt the flood-zoning restrictions deemed necessary by the Administrator.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. If a community adopts flood zoning, and zones a particular area just for dwelling purposes and a dwelling is built in that place, even though it is known that it is a place that ordinarily floods, would this bill then continue insurance on that area?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. If it were zoned, I would think it would affect the insurance premiums because the Administrator has the right to set those premiums according to risk in a particular area. I would say that if there were zoning regulations prohibiting the building of a home or a business establishment in a certain area, such could not be done, or if permitted, I would think the doctrine of caveat emptor might apply. At least where the risk is greatest, the insurance premiums would be highest. This bill gives the Administrator a lot of authority.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. The Administrator also has the right to place the premiums wherever he feels the occupants of owner-occupied dwellings can pay?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. He has a right to consider an area and to determine whether or not its people will be able to pay the premiums. I might say that particular provision to which you refer is one which I myself had some serious doubts about. Of course, the Administrator can do a lot of things. We have given the Administrator a tremendous amount of authority and power in this legislation and it is absolutely essential that we do so because we do not yet know enough of the answers. As I have said the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, or rather its Securities Subcommittee, went all over the country and held hearings. That committee met in Washington and held hearings here in the District. The House Committee on Banking and Currency met for many days. It heard a comprehensive range of testimony from representatives of insurance associations and companies, from public officials and from private persons and public-interest organizations in those areas ravaged by floods and hurricanes. My own State, incidentally, during the several hurricanes in 1954 and 1955 sustained damages approximating $300 million.

Let me get back to what I was saying when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOLTON] asked his question.

With such clear mandates to States and local governments to minimize losses by means of zoning laws, any added incentive in the form of monetary contributions by States ceases to have the same importance it would assume without such provisions.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. There are several States the constitutions of which forbid this kind of a proposition. I do not see how this amendment can help out the flood areas a single bit.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. It certainly cannot if the people of those States do not amend their constitutions immediately and make participation possible by June 30, 1959. Any taxpayer of the State could still take the matter into the courts. I doubt that many States will even attempt to amend their constitutions. There is too much uncertainty about this program. This amendment muddies the water further.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Does the gentleman believe a contribution on the part of the State as a payment of fees would cause the local authorities to enforce their zoning regulations,; that it might also cause them to establish zoning regulations which would reduce the cost?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Each State will be forced to adopt zoning regulations. If they do not, the potential flood victims cannot participate in this program. They cannot then buy the insurance which this legislation is intended to provide. This is not a program for States; this is a program designed to afford help to the people of the States, private citizens, potential flood-disaster victims, people whose homes may be wiped out from under them, whose only source of livelihood may be destroyed overnight. It is not charity. We are simply trying to make it possible for them to get, through their Government, what they are not able to get from any other source. This program will not work if only a few States participate. We cannot have a comprehensive flood-control program for the Nation without full participation. The Dies amendment will do far more harm than good at this time.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLOOD. Is there any analogy between this and crop insurance?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. There is analogy; yes.

Mr. FLOOD. Is it not pretty nearly on all fours with crop insurance?

Mr. FOUNTAIN. I think the principle involved is the same. If this amendment is needed, it should be offered after we have gone through an essential trial an error period. Let us not encourage the people of our States to amend their constitutions until we know it is necessary, until we are convinced that the insurance rates, without State help, will be prohibitive.

This amendment will create all sorts of problems, part State and part Federal, problems of coordination between all Federal agencies and with each of the States. All kinds of inefficiencies and prorating of costs and damages difficult to calculate would result.

Without the States we will have one authority administering this program. With participation, in effect, we will have a number of insurance programs enmeshed with the same property subject to all programs. It would be fine to have State help, but I do not believe it will be practical. This Congress has repeatedly turned down State participation in our essential disaster relief programs.

I do not want to see this program under the legislative jurisdiction of every participating State and of the Congress sitting here in Washington, until we are convinced it is imperative.

I have serious doubts that extension of the kind of insurance and loan guarantee protection provided by this legislation, for which property owners will have to pay, should be conditioned upon the requirement that the State first meet some fixed proration of disaster payments.

This is a disaster anticipation program where the Federal Government is the only one properly equipped to handle it. The monetary aspects, while important, will eventually become minor in comparison with the bureaucratic problems which must be solved and which can best be solved by 1 bureaucracy rather than by 51.

Flood-control projects are federally built and federally administered.

This is not a States rights amendment, as it would seem. The only rights the States get under the Dies amendment is to bear the burden of paying the expenses which the State itself has had no opportunity to prevent.

If you could give any State the power to stop a flood or a hurricane at State lines, then I would say we should not attempt the program without State participation—participation now—not beginning in July 1959.

Mr. Chairman and members of this Committee, I urge the defeat of this amendment. Let us have the experiment; let us go through the trial and error process before we muddy the water by entangling this necessary program with every State in the Union. It is a national not a State or a regional problem. There will be too many chiefs and not enough Indians if States are required to pay the devil and take the hindmost. It is the many little people we want to help—not the many chiefs whom some may want to hire.

In any event, whatever we do about this amendment, let us pass this legislation and abolish the fears that possess our people.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOUNTAIN) there were—ayes 82, noes 58.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am deeply interested in this legislation and I want to commend the committee for bringing it in. I appeared before the committee in the interest of procuring legislation of this kind. But, there are some questions which arise in my mind under section 2 on page 22, and if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, I would like to inquire from him the meaning in his mind of the words "recurring natural disasters."

In the first place, I am not sure what a recurring natural disaster is. It may be that there are certain rivers that have floods every year, and those disasters would be deemed recurring disasters. But, for example, the floods which occurred in Massachusetts and Connecticut last year, as the result of the hurricanes, were those recurring disasters? Would the chairman of the committee inform me what his conception of the word "recurring" is?

Mr. SPENCE. I should certainly say that recurring floods in the Ohio Valley would be natural disasters. I would not think that one flood in New England was a recurring disaster, although it might have been a great disaster. It seems to me that a disaster following a disaster is a recurring disaster. I do not know of any other definition that could be made of it.

Mr. HALE. It is impossible for me to hear the gentleman because his microphone is too low.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I would like to ask the gentleman one further question. By the gentleman's answer is he eliminating from this bill the series of floods and hurricanes that we have had in New York and New England over the past 5 years?

Mr. SPENCE. Is that the question: Can we get flood insurance whether it is a recurring disaster or not? Of course, any flood disaster that occurs, whether it is a recurring disaster or not, you can obtain flood insurance for.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman mean that any flood disaster is, ipso facto, a recurring disaster?

Mr. SPENCE. That it is recurring is not a necessary incident to getting the flood insurance. That is a statement of policy and has no effect upon the insurance; whether it is a recurring disaster or not you can obtain the insurance.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman may remember that I am particularly interested in forest fires because we had a disastrous forest fire in Maine in 1947 and forest fires recur in forest areas. Is it clear that that is the type of national disaster against which the Federal Government will insure?

Mr. SPENCE. Forest fires are not covered. The bill is limited to floods and the disaster and damage that follow floods.

Mr. HALE. Am I to understand that in the gentleman's opinion this bill would not include insurance against forest fires?

Mr. SPENCE. No. The Government is invading a field that no private enterprise has ever gone into and will not go into. It is not in competition with any private enterprise. It is limited to flood damage, damage that comes from flood.

Mr. HALE. In the gentleman's opinion the words "in the case of recurring natural disasters, including recurring floods," mean that we cannot get insurance against any disasters except floods?

Mr. SPENCE. I do not think flood insurance goes further than to insure against flood and the incidence of floods.

Mr. HALE. Then I would respectfully suggest to the gentleman that the words "recurring natural disasters, including", ought to be stricken from line 2 of the bill, so that the language should read, "The Congress finds that in the case of recurring floods," and so forth.

Mr. SPENCE. That may be extended in the future, but at the present time it is limited to floods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. DODD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DODD: Page 26, strike out lines 12 to 16 inclusive and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Each such contract shall contain such terms and conditions, and require from any such person such monetary consideration, as the Administrator may prescribe by regulation. In issuing such regulations the Administrator shall fix such monetary consideration at the lowest practicable amount, following generally the same principles as apply under section 7 (a) with respect to the establishment of fees for insurance."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is very desirable and while the Committee has taken no action on it I personally would accept it.

Mr. DODD. I thank the gentleman. It is simply a clarifying amendment. It is practically self-explanatory. It puts the loan part of this bill on the same basis as the conventional or traditional insurance part.

The amendment clarifies a technical aspect of two important sections of the bill before the House. I refer to section 5 entitled "Loan Contracts" and section 6 entitled "Combination of Insurance and Loans." The amendment simply provides that in determining premium rates that the same principles shall be followed for the "loan plan" as are prescribed for determining the rates for conventional insurance.

As many Members of the House know, I have a great interest in the loan feature of this bill. In January of this session I introduced H. R. 7885. The sense of sections 8 and 9 of my bill, I am pleased to say, has been incorporated into sections 5 and 6 of the bill presently under consideration.

This "loan plan" is a good one and I think that time will prove that it will play a large part in making Federal flood insurance a practical reality.

I feel that the loan plan that I have presented will offer a unique solution to the dilemma of finding some form of insurance against floods which can be offered to the public at a low-premium rate without large Federal subsidies.

Briefly, the loan plan offers a solution which provides that a party can purchase a policy at a low-premium rate in which the Government would give the policyholder an absolute promise of a long-term, interest-bearing loan in the event of loss through flood disaster.

The absolute right to obtain such a loan would give the person holding such a policy the means by which the destroyed property could be promptly restored. The primary loss would ultimately lie on the person whose property was destroyed, but through the loan plan the loss could be spread out over a long period of time.

In order that the Government will not unduly enter into the banking business, the bill provides that the money shall be borrowed from private lending institutions with the Government acting as guarantor. If the loan, for some unforeseen reason, cannot be had through a private lending agency the Government will then make the loan directly.

Thus, under this plan, a man owning a small factory or business concern which was destroyed by a flood, and left with only goodwill and know-how, would be provided as a matter of contractual right with the means to promptly put these two remaining assets back into operation. The repayment of the loan could be made over an extended period of time, and the burden could be spread out in the same way as depreciation.

The only risk that the Government would be taking under such a plan would be its obligation as guarantor to make good on any defaulting loans. It is anticipated that these expenses will be paid from the premiums taken in under the plan.

Under the provisions of the loan plan combinations of the usual insurance plan where reimbursement is made in cash and this novel loan plan where the insured gets a contractual right to borrow money are to be offered. Under the plan, a great variety of policies will be made available in which part of the reimbursement in the event of loss would be made in cash and part in a non-interest-bearing loan.

Thus, an individual or business concern that could only pay a very small premium rate could enter into a contract that would provide reimbursement in the form of a loan. Another party not willing to accept the burden of such a loan, and still unable to pay a substantial premium rate, could, for example, take out a policy which would provide him with 30 percent in cash and 70 percent in a non-interest-bearing loan, and with a slightly higher premium rate.

The Administrator under the bill before the House will thus be able to offer the public a multitude of policies which would be sold at premium rates in accordance with the degree of protection the person taking out the policy felt that he could afford.

The premium rate would largely depend on what percentage of reimbursements would have to be paid in cash. A person who wishes to be completely reimbursed in cash would pay a maximum premium rate.

The exact type of policy to be offered, and premium rates, I feel, are matters to be determined at a later date in accordance with administrative discretion.

It has been generally accepted that Federal flood insurance is essentially experimental. The loan plan embodied in sections 5 and 6 of the bill presently before the House will offer a great variety of policies to meet individual needs. I believe through the addition of this loan plan the possibility of a successful flood insurance program, with a minimum of Federal subsidies, is greatly enhanced.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the support of the Members of the House for the amendment to the "loan plan" that I have just introduced. By passing the amendment, the criteria for determining the premium rates for the loan contracts under the bill should be clarified.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield for a question on the amendment?

Mr. DODD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Do I understand from the gentleman's statement that his amendment would make the provision on page 29 which has to do with the Administrator's right to reduce the rates also apply to the loan guarantee field?

Mr. DODD. If I understand your question correctly, I would say not.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. I did not think that was what the gentleman meant. I wish the gentleman would explain it further.

Mr. DODD. I feel I have explained it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the gentleman specify the paragraph he is seeking to amend?

Mr. DODD. It is on page 26. It strikes out lines 12 to 16, and instead it states:

> Each such contract shall contain such terms and conditions, and require from any such person such monetary consideration, as the Administrator may prescribe by regulation.

In other words, it gives him the authority to fix the premium on the loan as it gives him the authority to establish the premium for the insurance.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. But it does not give him authority to reduce the premium for the loan?

Mr. DODD. That is a different matter.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. I want to compliment the gentleman on the stand he has taken all through the debate. Last Saturday when this matter came to the Chamber floor it appeared as if we would not have enough people here even to consider the bill. It was through the efforts of the gentleman from Connecticut and his colleagues that we were able to maintain a quorum and keep business going.

Mr. DODD. I am very grateful to the gentleman.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity of commending the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] for all the work that he has done on this bill.

I also wish to commend him for the loan provisions in sections 5 and 6 of the bill which were made part of this legislation at Mr. DODD's request.

In my estimation, the Dodd loan plan is one of the best features of this bill. I predict that the adoption of this bill with this provision in it will prove a monumental contribution in the field of Government insurance.

I was keenly aware of the gentleman from Connecticut's interest in the plight of the people of his State.

Almost a year ago when Mr. DODD was working on drafting a bill on flood insurance, I know that he had the interest of the flood sufferers of his State in mind, and yet he also had the interest of the American taxpayers in mind.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the Dodd loan plan provides for both flood sufferers and the American people.

I feel that Mr. DODD's plan will give insurance protection at a premium rate that potential flood sufferers can afford to pay, and for this, I feel the people in Connecticut and the people of my own State of Rhode Island who suffered so terribly in last year's floods will be grateful. The Dodd loan plan in my opinion will accomplish this without large Federal subsidies, and for this I feel the American people will be grateful.

Mr. DODD. I am most grateful for the very kind and generous remarks of my colleague [Mr. FOGARTY].

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. PHILBIN. I also want to take this opportunity to commend the gentleman from Connecticut on his outstanding contribution to the consideration of this bill and also the many valuable services he has rendered in connection with flood relief and rehabilitation arising out of the terrible flood disasters we suffered in the Northeast last year.

Mr. DODD. I am very grateful to the gentleman.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I have a question on the matter of recurring floods. Would the gentleman like to clarify that?

Mr. DODD. Yes, I would like to talk about it. Recurring floods are not ineligible under the provisions of this bill.

Some question has been raised about this bill with respect to the experience required under the crop insurance program. It occurred to me it might be worth while to point out that there is a different situation here.

I think that we will make great progress in the field of flood prevention and it is not unreasonable to suggest we can look forward to a day when the risk in this field may be very negligible and premiums may be very low. You will have this insurance program, and all of the people engaged in it in the States and the Federal Government will be urging flood prevention as people in fire insurance urge and work on fire prevention. We have had some great success in that field.

Mr. DODD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. DODD. I have tried in considering this whole problem to get the best advice that I could. I think I said to this House in general debate that in my opinion we are faced with this kind of situation: Nobody knows, nobody can tell us when floods will occur, and believe me, this is not just a New England problem. In nearby Maryland the other night we had six people drown and I do not know how much loss of property. We have similar disasters in the South, in the West, in the Middle East, and in the Southeast. It is difficult to foretell where and when this kind of disaster may occur.

We are faced with one of two alternatives: You can make this a matter of charity, and every time there is a disaster you can say, "All right, we will just hand out more money and do the best we can to put these people back on their feet"; or you can do it the way I think the American people want it done. That is, to give them a chance to pay for what they get and put this on a business basis.

The insurance companies will enter into it, for this bill provides for the participation of private insurance companies, with their tremendous know-how acquired over years of experience in determining the risks and fixing the premiums and making investigations of losses. That is the information I wanted to give the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

I think the gentleman's fear about a widespread bureaucracy is not well founded because these insurance offices are established and, I think, they are competent to do a good job in this field in cooperation with the Federal Government. I think it is as simple as that. I think if any of you who have ever had a flood, and if you never had one you are fortunate and I hope you never do, but if you have ever had a flood, you will understand better, I believe, what is involved here, and your people will feel badly if you pass by this opportunity to set up some kind of protection. Everyone says that it is experimental. And that is correct. It is experimental. That is true of almost every new field that we enter. The money that is provided, which sounds so great and large in amount, is substantial, but it is really not an appropriation—it is a backstop. As someone said here in the well of the House, the entire experience in the insurance field shows that total losses of this kind never do take place. I think we have a good bill here and I hope it is passed by the House.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. Coming from the Naugatuck Valley, I know how much an insurance bill will mean to us. It will give the people an opportunity in that particular area, if these terrible floods should ever happen again, to restore their homes and businesses. I commend the gentleman for all the work he has done on this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. DODD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. As the gentleman from Connecticut knows, I represent a large area of Long Island. In 1938 and 1944 and 1954 and 1955, we along the coast, as you in Connecticut, were hit with hurricanes. Our disaster on Long Island was caused by damage from the hurricane itself far more than the question of flooding as raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOLTON]. Now the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] asked the chairman of the committee whether it included the damage that would come from hurricanes when he raised the point as to the word "recurring" because the question is raised as to whether these hurricanes are recurring. The chairman of the committee said, "No." I talked to a member of the staff of the committee and he indicates that the answer is "No." This is a very serious matter to us on Long Island.

Mr. DODD. If I understand the gentleman correctly, the gentleman is asking me if on Long Island where you have had hurricanes you would be eligible?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. No, I am raising the question and I would like to have a member of the committee answer.

Mr. DODD. My understanding is that you ask if you had 2 or 3 hurricanes, would you be eligible for this type of insurance. Is that right?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. DODD. I think you would be eligible for insurance, although the rates would probably be different from those in areas without recurring hurricanes.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. We are not attempting to duplicate any commercial enterprise insurance here where private industry will insure. A hurricane is different and insurance can be bought from the insurance companies.

Mr. DODD. Yes, hurricane insurance can be bought—that is true.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Then to make the question as simple as possible. Does this bill cover hurricane insurance?

Mr. McDONOUGH. It does not.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It does not?

Mr. DODD. If you mean by that water damage from a hurricane, I think it does.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Oh, yes.

Mr. DODD. I have answered that question and I think my friend agrees. You would be eligible under this program for insurance against damage suffered by high waves even if it was in the course of a windstorm.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DODD. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman if flooding from heavy rains through the clapboards of a house would be eligible for insurance. I know rain coming through the windows would not, but I understand that water coming through the clapboards of a house, as a result of an intense rain, would be considered so. Would the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. DODD. This is a technical question which I am not prepared to answer at this time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I congratulate the gentleman on his fine work with reference to this much needed legislation.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Connecticut for the tremendous amount of work and study that he has put into this matter. He has been in the forefront of the battle to push through some kind of a flood insurance bill in this session of the Congress. That ambition is about to be realized this afternoon. There were times when those of us who were genuinely interested in this program were disturbed that this would not come to pass. On late last Saturday when this bill was called up on the floor, it was touch and go as to whether or not a quorum could be mustered to consider it. Mr. DODD spent much time in contacting Members personally to express his deep interest and to request that they join in assisting us to get a flood-insurance bill through the House. His efforts have met with success today.

Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] on this bill today constitute his last speech in the well of this House from which he has spoken so eloquently on matters affecting the Nation and the world. This is his valedictory. His voice, his words, and his great ability are today mustered in a plea and for a cause that is of overriding importance to his great State of Connecticut. I compliment him for the service he renders today and for the outstanding record he has made as a Member of this House over the past 4 years. And, Mr. Chairman, I add my best wishes as he seeks to elevate himself in the public service of his State.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I would like to emphasize that under this bill we are offering a plan for insurance where no insurance company will write insurance. If it is hurricane insurance in an area where an insurance company says it will only write the insurance for $50 a hundred, then it is an unreasonable rate. In that case the Administrator may say, "I will sell you insurance at a reasonable rate." In those areas where you can get insurance against hurricane damage but you cannot get insurance on floods caused by hurricanes, the Administrator may come forward and say, "I will sell you that insurance."

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Will the gentleman explain to me whether the wording of the amendment will permit the Administrator to make lower rates for losses than those which are contemplated in the committee.

Mr. MULTER. I do not believe so. If I am wrong, I will yield to the gentleman from Connecticut to answer.

Mr. DODD. I did answer that.

Mr. MULTER. The agency that is to administer this program asked for this amendment.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman tell me wherein the bill under consideration, the Senate bill, differs from the bill I introduced some time ago.

Mr. MULTER. I cannot tell the gentleman that precisely, but I will say to him that the Senate bill, as amended by the Committee on Banking and Currency, in the form in which we are now considering it, is very similar to the bill the gentleman introduced.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether the meaning of the words "natural disaster," as he has just stated, would cover insurance only from water damage, and not from destruction by the wind.

Mr. MULTER. I will say if you cannot buy wind insurance—and I do not know any place where you cannot buy it—if the time comes when they cannot buy wind insurance at reasonable rates, then the Administrator may come forward and say, "I will write it."

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Then the language of the bill will apply where insurance cannot be purchased?

Mr. MULTER. Only where it cannot be purchased privately. If the Administrator finds it necessary to offer that kind of insurance because insurance companies will not offer it, the language here is broad enough to permit it.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. We are able to buy insurance against damage by windstorms from private companies, but a flood caused by wind is covered in this bill because you cannot get it from private sources. The damage arising from a flood caused by a windstorm may be insured against under the terms of this bill.

Mr. MULTER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How about the question that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] raised on the word "recurring"? Do these hurricanes fall into the category of recurring storms?

Mr. MULTER. I did not hear his complete question, because I was called off the floor, but when I left he was reading from the statement of policy. We have in the bill a declaration of policy. After we passed that point in the bill, in committee, we went to work on the details of the bill. The declaration of policy may be broader than the details of the bill, but it is the details of the bill that will govern.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] has expired.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, the proposed legislation for Federal flood insurance is a measure which, in my opinion, is long overdue. We have had repeated dramatic examples of personal tragedies arising from hurricanes and floods over a period of many years. I am deeply concerned because of the major catastrophes wrought by floods and hurricanes in my own State of Rhode Island. I am acutely aware of the need for this type of protection for the people whom I represent. Likewise, I have been impressed by the enlightened support of congressional action on some sound insurance program before awaiting the crippling blow of a situation similar to that created by hurricanes Carol, Diane and the floods of last year as carried on by the Providence Journal-Bulletin. But this is not a regional problem. It is a national one. Flood and hurricane disaster, as we all know, may strike any part of the country, although in recent years, New England has borne the brunt of their destructive path. There is no immunity from this peril in any region of the United States.

I recall that in 1951, following the disastrous floods of the Midwest, President Truman requested the enactment of legislation providing for the financing of a Federal flood insurance program and repeated this request in 1952. This went unheeded. Again last year, President Eisenhower, moved by the tremendous loss and devastation caused by hurricanes and floods in our northeast region, stated that the Federal Government should examine the feasibility of providing this type of insurance. Personally, I cannot see how we can continue to ignore these wise suggestions. I believe that in the mind of a reasonable person there can be no question as to the need for this type of legislation. It is true that there may be some genuine difference of opinion as to the various features of the measure but I am more interested in the humane principle which lies behind it. It is the little fellow who is particularly at the mercy of flood damage—the small homeowner and the small-business man. I know of instances where homeowners, in limited financial circumstances, have lost their property by water damage and yet are faced with paying off the mortgage which survives as a grim reminder of their personal tragedy. Again, I have had the experience of knowing small-business men whose credit became so impaired by flood loss that they were unable to resume operations again. To extend a helping hand to persons such as these, to create a protective mantle insuring them against repetition of the crippling blow of floodwaters, represents one of the highest achievements which this representative body can accomplish. It is certainly a duty which we owe to the citizens in all communities throughout the country. I am not being critical when I say that many times we can be so concerned over the welfare of the people in other lands and with problems in areas outside our jurisdiction that we unwittingly neglect the welfare of the people of the United States.

As the people in my State know, I am vitally interested in the matter of flood control. But this involves engineering studies, the expenditure of tremendous sums of money and years of construction effort. Plans for adequate Federal flood control can proceed apace but Federal flood insurance ought not to be postponed on the theory that flood control alone may avert a disaster and make such insurance unnecessary. Plain logic dictates that flood insurance should be provided for now, and flood control moved along as rapidly as time and circumstances permit.

Mr. Chairman, I urgently recommend this legislation be enacted in the interests of the country as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DODD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLOOD: Page 44, line 13, after the word "moisture", insert "subsidence or settling of soil following mining or other subterranean operations."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the subject matter of this bill I suppose I could get an extra 5 minutes on a point of personal privilege. But I am sure there is nothing personal in all this discussion of floods, so I will stick to my 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of us from about a dozen States concerned with the problem outlined in my amendment. In the coalfields of the United States, in about a dozen States in the hard and soft coal areas, floodwater damage not only is on the surface. The most acute and the most serious flood damage to property and even to persons in many instances, the direct result, not a mere incidence, of hurricane floods and other great torrential floods, is damage underground. I am not talking about damage by improper mining or damage by negligence.

The reason I come to you today, on the germaneness of this amendment, is because in the State of Pennsylvania at least there is no action that can be laid at law for surface subsidence resulting from this type of disaster. That has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. So in Pennsylvania the people have no legal recourse to obtain damage relief. Secondly, there is absolutely no insurance company in the world—even Lloyd's of London, believe it or not, which is practically a gambling house—will give insurance on this type of disaster.

So, first, the people of the mining regions cannot get this insurance for subsidence resulting from, if you want to call it excess moisture, flood damage.

Let me show you why in 100 miles of Pennsylvania over 100 years of mining has produced certain subterranean conditions over which man with his great engineering and scientific skill no longer has control. Believe me when I say that our greatest enemy in the mine is water. Water is our deadliest enemy and we cannot fight it alone. So when through a hundred years of mining you have subterranean conditions where water becomes the instrument of disaster and when you have these floods that come into our mines, our problem is not on the surface. The water rushes into the mines, our bulkheads and our barrier pillars are destroyed because the hydrostatic pressure of water when raised against our barrier pillars wipes out the surface supports. It is not an act of man but an act of God. The torrential hurricane floods are a great deluge in our mountain valleys. We are in mountain valleys with wild streams rushing down in through mines which break the surface, destroying our surface supports. The surface subsides and there is no insurance relief, and there is no legal recourse under the law by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

We are helpless and hopeless, and I ask you to include this in the right of insurance, not relief, not a grant, but under the bill as now amended. My State will join and probably should, and to that I do not object now that it is in the bill. That being the case I come here with this amendment and implore your aid.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Your amendment says "subsidence or settling of ground due to underground operations or otherwise." Now, that seems to have no connection with floods.

Mr. FLOOD. What I want to make clear to the gentleman is this. Our underground condition is of such a nature as the result of mining operations or other operations, including slides, for which man is not responsible, for over 100 years, which the gentleman knows, coming from a mining region, exists. And, when the water comes in, those barrier pillars and the supports are destroyed, not as the result of mining but as the result entirely of floods upon an existing physical condition, and then the surface subsides. As the gentleman knows, I have no recourse and can get no insurance, and I am defenseless.

Mr. SPENCE. Your amendment includes "or otherwise."

Mr. FLOOD. You mean, if somebody comes in, some dog robber, and robs a pillar? No; I do not mean that. I mean surface subsidence in the operation of the mine, as the result of or incident to—I like the gentleman's language—excessive moisture, whichever you prefer. The gentleman's phrase "incident to" defines my definition clearly.

Mr. SPENCE. That is not my definition. Your definition has nothing to do with floods; subsidence due to underground operation.

Mr. FLOOD. That is a direct incident of the flood, where the surface gives way because the support has been destroyed, not by the operation of the mine but by the excess pressure on the supports and pillars by floods, by excessive water causing the supports to burst and causing surface subsidence.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FENTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLOOD. I wonder if the gentleman would amend my amendment to include the phrase "incident to flood." Or, if the gentleman does not prefer, I will ask unanimous consent later to revise my amendment and include it.

Mr. FENTON. All right.

Mr. Chairman, in a great many communities in the anthracite coal producing area, and especially in the 12th Congressional District, and adjacent districts in Pennsylvania, there is danger of disaster from floods as used in this particular bill, S. 3732.

I say, especially in my district, because I am very familiar with the mining problem and its attendant hazards there. It is safe to say that conditions in the other anthracite congressional districts are the same as mine and familiar to the Members of Congress representing those areas and they can of course speak for their own particular districts.

In the brief period that we had in discussing the bill during general debate it was confirmed by the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee [Mr. SPENCE] that "land subsidence due to underground or manmade subterranean excavation" was not a part of this bill.

In view of the fact that hundreds of my constituents have written me of their interest in supporting an amendment to aid them by securing inclusion in this legislation of provisions for their protection, I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

At the present time many large communities, such as Coaldale, Tamaqua, Mahanoy City, Shenandoah, Gilberton, St. Clair, Minersville, and others, are sitting on veritable seas of water—contained for the time being by barriers of coal.

Should any of these barriers or pillars be disturbed by excessive floods, such as occurred last August, I would hesitate to hazard an opinion as to the life and property damage that might ensue.

The communities mentioned heretofore are all located in my home county but there are other communities in Northumberland County such as Mount Carmel, Shamokin, and the surrounding townships to all these large communities that are in the same situation.

As I stated in debate, one of my communities, Tamaqua, had severe damage and one man lost his life in the flood last August.

My district borders on the area in the Pocono Mountains where so many children lost their lives and we certainly trust that provision can be made in this bill to make it as comprehensive as possible.

Mine subsidence in the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania could be very disastrous by either floods or just plain cave-ins due to the underlying structures giving way, and if the insurance feature of this bill could be granted to our people it would indeed act to alleviate the continuous threat to life and property always seriously aggravated by floods.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FENTON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PATTERSON. Knowing the amount of damage that the gentleman had in his district in the last flood I want to commend him for the work he has done in the interest of his district and in the interest of the people of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. FENTON. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR].

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the proponents of this legislation, trying to convey to the Members of this House the fears that arise in the minds of the people of their districts because of floods which are imminent in their areas at certain seasons of the year.

The amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD] and concerning which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON] has just spoken, I think the House should realize does not refer merely to a matter of seasonal floods. This is a matter of daily concern throughout the counties in the coal areas of this country, when entire areas will subside because of the movement of any one of the pillars that have been left underground to prevent the passage of water. When the mines fill up there is absolutely no way for anyone to get down and examine the conditions underground. As the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON and Mr. FLOOD] so ably stated, many communities in the anthracite regions in the State of Pennsylvania actually are living on seas of water. If there is any break in any one of those barriers, it is not just a seasonal danger of flood which exists in some of the areas that have been pleaded for today, it is a condition which exists 365 days of every year. If this bill is to benefit the people of America because of flood damage, then I urge each and every one of you to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLOOD. A very distinguished former coal miner, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KIRWAN], whom I represent in Congress, by the way, tells me that on the ticker just now is a flash that 19 more miners have died this year than last year. As the gentleman knows, many in the soft-coal districts have been drowned when the barrier pillars collapsed after great floods and hurricanes in his and my districts and that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON].

Mr. SAYLOR. That is correct. There is absolutely nothing you can do when you are underground to get away from it. One of the dangers that is current in the mind of every miner who goes underground is that in some operation they are conducting he will cut into an old operation underground which is filled with water, or cut into an underground sea of water and be wiped out without any hope of escape.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that this amendment be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield the time allotted to me to Mr. MARTIN.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation.

Last year the country was shocked by appalling flood disasters that visited not only the Southern States but the Middle Atlantic States as well as the New England States.

This great country desired to do something to rehabilitate the people who suffered this great misfortune, and the President of the United States was sympathetic to appeals that came from every part of our country. Out of that sympathy of the President and his desire to help came this legislation.

I would not say that this bill is perfect. I am conscious of the fact that it can be perfected. But I know this is a great problem that demands the attention of this Congress. I advocate that we pass this legislation and send it to the committee of conference, where efforts will be made to try to work out a bill that will meet the great humane needs of the people of this country and will permit the President of the United States to carry out his desire to afford the American people some protection against such disasters. I urge support of this bill so that we can go to conference and write a bill that I believe this Congress will be proud of. True, it may take time and experience in the future to provide legislation which will be near perfection. But, this is a beginning. Let us make a start and pass this bill which the country needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, floods are the only major source of property damage, of all natural disasters, for which commercial insurers do not generally offer coverage. The reason for this is not difficult to find.

Following the widespread Mississippi River floods of 1895 and 1896, a company was organized to sell flood insurance in St. Louis, New Orleans, and Cairo, Ill. A considerable amount was sold through the Mississippi River Valley which had been subjected to numerous floods through the years. In 1899 another major flood was experienced in the valley. This was enough to bankrupt the company.

Other companies since then have attempted to sell flood insurance on a small scale. Their experience has shown that only those most exposed to flooding are interested in acquiring policies, or that following a period of a few years free from flood damages they permit the insurance to lapse.

The insurance industry has studied the problem and has been unable to solve, up to the present, the major problems which stand in the way of a sound program of flood insurance. Investigations on behalf of the industry have found that the determination of rates is extremely difficult. It is difficult to define a flood for insurance purposes. The base is too narrow to spread the risk adequately, and a major catastrophe with concentration of total loss represents a threat to the solvency of the insurer. Thus, the industry has largely avoided a field where perhaps the greatest need is manifest.

Floods are no respecter of persons; the poorest as well as the richest may suffer equally. They have been occurring since before the era of written history. The earth's formation and transformation were greatly influenced by floods. Floods are mentioned in the Bible. Man has been pitting his puny strength against the most destructive of nature's forces for many centuries to little avail.

No one can tell where or when the deluge next will strike.

They often come in the still of the night, snuffing out the lives of our family, neighbors, or friends. They destroy our homes, our businesses, churches, and schools. They bring fear and panic, the dread of the unknown and unexpected.

Long experience with floods has enabled the American Red Cross to develop a plan of action upon notice being had that such a disaster is being experienced somewhere in this broad land.

Even before the flow stills and the filth and debris settle, such activities as are available under Public Law 875 and the American Red Cross are rushed into action. Food, shelter, clothing, and medicines tend to the immediate needs of the unfortunate sufferers. Federal, State, and local government agencies all do valiant work. They help tide over the early period of shock that people experience following any disaster. But this help, fine as it is, is only temporary.

As the crushed and prostrate countryside gropingly begins to come to life, it comes to the full import of its situation. I hope that each one of you here in this Chamber will be spared that experience. It is a truly awesome feeling. That horrible realization that your home is destroyed, perhaps that some loved one has lost his life is stamped indelibly upon the mind of all who have experienced it. Perhaps as bad is the sensation, upon looking further afield, of realizing that the shop, the factory or the store where you earned your living is gone. With that first full comprehension comes a tragic sense of futility.

That is a senseless trick of fate which is repeated over and over, year after year. The broken homes, the burdensome mortgages on homes that no longer exist, the bills for stocks of little stores and inventories still unpaid for but which have disappeared in the angry, broiling waters weigh upon the sufferers. The urge to go on, to resume an active life, to participate once again in community affairs, to become producers once again suffers a cruel blow when brought face to face with the facts of life after a flood disaster.

Loans are difficult, if not impossible, to secure. Many communities never fully recover the full vigor of their accustomed way of life. This is not only a tragic thing to see or experience, it is something which we owe to our fellow Americans to combat with all of our ability.

The battle must be fought on all fronts. Flood control programs take time to carry out; they are costly. Nature has a habit of making even man's most complicated and magnificent works puny by comparison. Dams can be washed out by the fury of torrential rains and tempestuous hurricane downpours. We have seen many gallant, sometimes successful but ofttimes futile, battles with flood waters to save levees and the property they protect. It will be a long and costly struggle before the Nation's rivers can be controlled and rendered harmless. Meanwhile experience tells us we will continue to have floods.

We have before us now an opportunity to strike a firm blow at this killing and evil destroyer. H. R. 3732 is brought before this body after concentrated study. The testimony of the best informed authorities of the Nation, public hearings of many interested and responsible agencies and individuals have all gone into the preparation of this bill. I believe it represents the best possible solution at this point of how to help the flood sufferers of the future. As surely as the sun will arise again there will be more floods. We can and must do something to lessen the blows to our people, or at least to mitigate their effects.

This is frankly an experimental program, for a period of 3 years. The bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee is aimed at helping those most in need of help—to help those whose resources may be totally destroyed in the event of a flood of disastrous proportions. That is, for as nominal a fee as it is possible to determine in advance, on the basis of all available information, the home owner and the small businessman will be indemnified for his losses under the direct insurance portion. Or he may be assured of a line of credit to restore his property and an extended period of time to which to absorb the shock of his initial loss under the loan contract provision of the bill.

The Government is not seeking to replace private industry in setting up such a program for flood insurance and loan contracts. On the contrary, by means of this bill it is endeavoring to demonstrate that private industry can enter a field of activity from which it has been absent too long. By initiating a balanced program of insurance, reinsurance and guaranteed loans, the Administrator of this act is directed to utilize the services and facilities of the industry in selling the insurance and making adjustments. This is deliberate in the hope that the industry will participate actively, and perhaps, in time take over.

Existing governmental agencies are utilized in the proposed program. The Housing and Home Finance Administrator would be the responsible head of the entire program. This is done in the interest of centralizing authority and responsibility in a single point of contact with Congress and the Executive.

To insure availability of flood insurance to those who might otherwise not be able to afford it, the Administrator is authorized to reduce fees by as much as 40 percent. Even further reduction is possible if the Administrator believes that any classification of owner-occupied dwelling unit could not afford to pay the fees chargeable for such insurance. This constitutes a subsidy, in effect. But against the cost of this subsidy may be balanced the gain of full economic activity of many who might otherwise lose heart and drop out or operate at less than their full capabilities.

There are, I believe, ample limitations contained in the provisions of the bill to prevent the disruption of orderly procedure and to emphasize its value to the home owner and small businesses. Small, nuisance claims are prevented, and a maximum limit is placed upon the face amount of insurance policies and loan contracts. The subsidy element is eliminated in reinsurance activities under this act.

I believe that this bill represents a sound, well-considered approach to the solution of a very difficult problem; that is, the protection of the economic well-being of potential flood sufferers. It will help those most who are most in need of help. The history of floods—the terrible experiences in recent months of our people in various sections of our country warrants and justifies the passage of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON].

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, apparently it might be fortunate that I am not coming back next year, speaking to you now as I am after the two gentlemen who just preceded me. But, I wish to point out to you the definition of the word "flood" on page 44. I ask you to consider whether this means the flood in your neighbor's basement when your field next to it fills up due to a heavy rain. I ask you to consider the position which our Government will be in under so-called insurance, actually flood damage policies which will be written all over this country without limit except to $10,000 covering the damages which will result from the interpretations under the word "flood." We are all, everyone of us, concerned with how we can face these great national problems. But, I say to you in all sincerity, that we are shouldering our country with a tremendous debt in this instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HEISTAND].

Mr. HEISTAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEISTAND. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is only logical that we should strike out the word "insurance" wherever it appears in this bill and substitute the word "subsidy."

I make this suggestion with all due deference to the distinguished gentlemen immediately preceding me.

First. Despite the fact that the program embodied in this bill involves subsidy, the word "subsidy" is not found in the bill. Instead the word "insurance" is used throughout. I shall urge the House to delete the word "insurance," and substitute the word "subsidy" or some similar word.

Insurance and subsidy are diametrically opposed in principle. Insurance involves voluntary sharing of loss caused by a peril common to those insured. Subsidy involves an involuntary tax burden carried by all even though—in the case of flood—only some are exposed to the peril. An insurance program is self-sustaining. A subsidy program is not. The flood damage programs proposed are not self-sustaining—they are not to be borne solely by those subject to the peril of flood. They are to be borne in part by all—involuntarily—through taxation. These flood programs are thus the antithesis of insurance. They are subsidy programs and conceded so to be by the sponsor of the Senate bill—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 10, 1956, page 7925. No reason is given in either House for calling these programs insurance when they are not.

The second development is the fact that in the field of atomic energy, the other body, in contemplating a program to indemnify against loss resulting from atomic reactor incidents in no place uses the word "insurance." It uses instead the words "indemnify" and "indemnification." While these words may not be an exact description of the program, they are closer to the mark than is the word "insurance." It suggests if the House avoids the use of the word "insurance" when describing a program of partial subsidy in connection with atomic energy, the same course should be followed when dealing with subsidy in connection with flood. Therefore, I urge that where the word "insurance" appears in any legislation being considered in connection with flood, that the word be deleted and that there be inserted in its place a word such as "subsidy" or "relief" or "indemnity."

Second. This point deals with the provisions of the legislation with reference to reinsurance. I suggest that all reference to reinsurance be deleted. If the basic program is not insurance the supporting program cannot be "reinsurance." If there is a subsidy involved in furnishing the so-called "insurance" then a subsidy must be involved in furnishing so-called "reinsurance." "Subsidy" has no more place in reinsurance, than it has in insurance. The bill clearly provides such subsidy. It uses the words "fees for reinsurance"—section 5 (b)—just as it uses the word "fees" for the so-called direct insurance—section 5 (a). By definition the fee for direct coverage is something different from, and less than, the "actual estimated rates."

There is another reason for deleting the "reinsurance" provision. This legislation proposes to set up a test program seeking to determine the feasibility, or lack of feasibility, of flood indemnification. If the test is to mean anything it must be a controlled test. The reinsurance program removes control, since it would permit a private insurer to make a favorable selection of the risks and unload through reinsurance the unfavorable selection on the experimental program. The resulting experience picture of the Government program would be distorted by the adverse selection. In addition, the amount of so-called reinsurance available under the proposed program is unrealistic and would aggravate the competing situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky whether the term "wave wash" in the definition of "flood," at line 10, page 44, of the bill is sufficient to give the protection to landowners along our Florida beaches which I feel confident the committee intended to give. In a letter which I received from Dr. M. E. Forsman, assistant director of the University of Florida Engineering and Industrial Experiment Station, he advised:

> The standard definition—terminology—for the term "wave wash" is "the erosive action on shores or embankments caused by the lapping or breaking of waves." (See Waves, Tides, Currents, and Beaches, Glossary of Terms and List of Standard Symbols issued by the Council on Wave Research, the Engineering Foundation, Berkeley, Calif.) The term "wave action" includes not only the action of wave wash but also such effects as the impact of waves on structures and natural formations. Generally, when such a structure as a pier or a jetty is damaged during a storm in Florida, it is the result of wave action as a whole, rather than that of wave wash by itself. Damage to beaches, dunes, dikes, and roads, however, is primarily the result of wave wash.

From the general purpose of the committee to give maximum protection to those who suffer property losses under circumstances covered by the bill, it is my understanding that the committee did not intend that "flood" should be restrictively interpreted. It is my understanding that, in defining that term by the words "wave wash," the committee intended to define "flood" to include "wave action" and "wave impact." Is that correct?

Mr. SPENCE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, President Eisenhower strongly recommends this type of legislation. In principle the bill also has the endorsement of former President Truman. I believe a good case for the bill has been made before the Committee on Banking and Currency sitting here in Washington and throughout the flooded areas of the country. I cannot conceive of the House rejecting this bill today in the closing hours of this session. I am sure that the humanitarian appeal made by our leaders has been heard.

Mr. Chairman, it has grieved us all many times in the past to witness the horrible aftereffects of flood disasters. Few of us in our lifetimes have failed to experience at first hand some of those effects. They are so total. They are so complete. They leave their victims absolutely helpless. Every year some portion of our great nation is struck, often in the still of the night, with much of the devastating suddenness and destructive force of an atomic bomb.

The lives that are lost from these catastrophes, thank Heaven, have tended to decrease during recent years. This is due in part to the efforts of our engineers in constructing great flood control works, and in part to the ever-increasing efficiency of our weather and flood warning services. But Mother Nature has a way of striking where there are no levees and dams, and all of the other impedimenta of the modern flood control engineer. She can even bring the rains and the hurricanes that will leave such downpours as will cause the floodwaters to cascade over these obstacles and continue to wreak havoc. So much so that in 1955 flood damages attained a new peak, earning the ill-omened title of the first "billion dollar year."

Behind that cogent phrase "billion-dollar year" lies a many-times-repeated tale of misery and woe. It has left behind many crushed homes, lost sources of livelihood, ruined communities, and irrevocably damaged farmlands. As the ugly brown waters recede they leave behind them many thousands of tons of mud and sand and wreckage. There are left behind crushed and silt-filled homes, factories, and stores. Many serious fire and health hazards remain. Survivors are faced with a well-nigh-unsolvable problem. How can they clean up the mess, how can they rebuild their homes, their business? How, in fact, can they go on living at all, now that their resources are destroyed?

After the first burst of generosity from their fellow Americans, from the American Red Cross, from the many official agencies which supply food, shelter, medicines, clothing, and other immediate needs, comes the final full realization of the true situation. The efforts of all these agencies are good, they are well meant, and are vastly appreciated. However, the flood victim faces a blank future. How is he to resume the everyday task of living, with his resources destroyed, even hope seems to have fled. He needs some sustaining force. This situation has been repeated monotonously, year after year, and until now there has seemed to be no answer.

For years there have been pious utterances in public places following the visitation of these flood disasters. How many times have we heard repeated: "Something ought to be done about it," "there ought to be a law." All right, something should be done about it; there ought to be a law. Here, right now, before this body, is an opportunity to do something about it.

It is frankly experimental. Private insurance companies have been unable to provide for this type of insurance because they have not been able to build up the necessary reserves; they have been unable to spread the risk. Losses are usually total within an area and no private enterprise has been able to sustain itself after 1 or 2 major catastrophes of this type. This has been the experience of the past. For many years now no private insurance companies have made any real effort to be active in this area.

The bill now before you will provide future victims of floods, some hope. It will enable them to rise from the wreckage of their homes and businesses and face the future with some confidence that they will be able to resume their place in the community. The community may again become a vital cog in the Nation's economy.

Once the soundness of such a program as this bill provides is demonstrated, as I have every assurance it will be, private enterprise should be able to take over, and the frightening aspects of floods may be alleviated somewhat.

This bill does not place the Federal Government into business in competition with its citizens. No one is now selling flood insurance. So, it is now up to us to "do something about it."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to revise and extend their remarks on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MULTER. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, in 1913 the Miami Valley in Ohio suffered a very severe flood. The cities of Dayton, Hamilton, and Middletown, all located in the Miami Valley, and located within the congressional district I have the honor to represent, suffered great financial and property losses. Many lives were also lost.

Floodwaters reached a depth of from 12 feet to 16 feet in the downtown and industrial areas of many cities. The condition of wrecked and partly wrecked buildings of all kinds including residential properties was almost beyond description. Family treasuries and family fortunes were completely wiped out in a few hours.

The people of this area, in true American fashion and tradition, began to dig themselves out of the muck and ruin of their property. Everyone helped. The National Red Cross and other relief organizations did a marvelous job and it would be impossible to recount all the wonderful work done and the contributions made.

The people also, Mr. Chairman, immediately began to seek ways to prevent a future reoccurrence of such a disaster.

Time will not permit a complete account here of all that was done. Sufficient to say here that the people of this flooded area by their contributions and their willingness to pay taxes, a flood-control system was designed and built. This was done entirely by the people of this area. No help was ever requested or received from the Federal Government. This was done in the true American way and spirit.

It is wrong, Mr. Chairman, for the Federal Government to supply flood insurance and is contrary to our tradition. I am opposed to this bill and hope it will be defeated.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope that the House will overwhelmingly pass this bill now before us, S. 3732, to permit Federal participation in providing insurance against damage by flood. I also hope that within the near future the Congress may enact what we could describe as a general disaster bill which will enable all our American citizens to adequately insure themselves against catastrophic personal and property loss from the ever-recurring ravages of the elements uncontrolled.

I have, of course, a particular personal interest in this current measure because of the terrible and incalculable damage that was visited upon the people of my district area and my State in the unfortunate and unhappy floods that descended upon us suddenly, less than a year ago.

In that tragedy of nature more than a hundred lives were lost and millions of dollars of property damage to businesses and individuals was incurred. Today our people still live in fear and doubt as to when we may be victim again of these wild flood ravages. Neither the individual nor the community nor the State alone or together can adequately provide protection from the enormous destruction that follows in the wake of these natural disasters. They earnestly, and in my opinion rightfully, look to the Federal Government and the Congress for assistance and this important measure is a step to grant them a modicum of vitally needed help.

To allay any fears of some of the sincere questioners of the merit of this bill, let us make it clear that the measure does not contemplate the invasion of private enterprise. The hearings and testimony reveal that every effort has been made to get the insurance companies to enter this field of liability but they cannot in reasonable financial wisdom embrace it. The only way that the matter can be accomplished is by temporary participation of the Federal Government. It is certainly obvious that if the private insurance companies could write this kind of insurance on a profit basis they naturally would do it. Last year, following the great flood destruction in our area there was a large market for flood insurance but private insurance companies were unable to offer the necessary protection due to the enormous risk factor.

In any case, it is quite relevant, I think, to remember that the people of the United States pay for the restoration from the damage anyway. As we all realize the various agencies of the Federal Government, by Presidential direction, move into any natural disaster emergency and spend millions of dollars in repairing public buildings, vital bridges, and other factors that have to do with preserving the health and safety of the people. Situations of this kind can certainly be better handled economically if we can work out an insurance program.

It is generally agreed, of course, that this legislation is not letter perfect. It is not claimed to be. This is an experimental program. It will require perhaps long experiment and patient study to work out a final solution. The problem is basically to enact a legislative program through which the Federal Government can offer some degree of economic protection against natural disaster losses to all of our people, and do so without expending unreasonably great amounts of the Federal money.

This legislation then is the first attempt to solve this problem in the American way and tradition. It will, no doubt, require continuous revision and perhaps correction. Nevertheless, it is fundamentally a good bill and good for all Americans, and I earnestly hope that it will be approved here this afternoon.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. I yield.

Mrs. CHURCH. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not this bill in any sense carries any relief from the high levels and the high waves we have had along the shore of Lake Michigan.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. It was along the lines of that general subject that I intended to address my remarks.

Mrs. CHURCH. I am sure that the gentleman knows the problem which we have had for many years.

Ms. O'HARA of Illinois. As the gentlewoman knows, we have in Chicago, and in many other cities, of course, after heavy rains, the overflowing of our sewerage and drainage systems.

In the effect of a flood on property there is not any difference between that of an underground stream used for drainage and sewage purposes and that of a river flowing on the surface. So the gentlewoman from Michigan [Mrs. GRIFFITHS], representing a Detroit district, and those of us coming from cities similarly situated were interested that the definition of flood in the bill before us should be sufficiently inclusive to cover flood situations that might be caused in our own sections of the country. Let me read the definition:

"Flood" includes any flood, tidal wave, wave wash, or other abnormally high tidal water, deluge, or the water component of any hurricane or other severe storm, surface landslide due to excess moisture, and shall have such other meaning as may be prescribed by regulation of the Administrator.

There was some thought in the committee of eliminating the words "shall have such other meaning as may be prescribed", and this elimination I opposed. The gentlewoman from Michigan [Mrs. GRIFFITHS] and others said, "No; if that is done, how can we go back to our constituents in Michigan, Illinois, and other inland States saying that while we were seeking to help the people on the Atlantic seaboard and elsewhere and were drawing up a flood-insurance act for them we forgot the welfare of our own people." They could very well say to me in Chicago, "Here you were helping to protect the victims of floods and water damage through this insurance program in the other parts of the country; but why did you not think of Chicago, where we, too, suffer from floods?"

Along Lake Michigan we have another very serious problem, that of erosion, which causes great damage to property. The gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. CHURCH] on numerous occasions has brought this effectively to the attention of the House. I can say to the gentlewoman from Illinois that I think we have gone as far as we possibly could, certainly in the definition of flood that I have read, to make it clear that water damage is the test and that the Administrator has the authority to include in the coverage those properties that suffer through erosion.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. I merely want to say I am glad the gentleman agrees with me on the extent of the definition of the term "flood" in the bill. I hope to offer an amendment later to narrow that definition.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Do I understand that the gentleman, coming from the great city of Cleveland, would wish to deny or to limit the coverage we expect in Chicago, Detroit, and other places?

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Let me help the gentleman by pointing out that I do not come from the city of Cleveland; that I come from a district which extends along the shores of Lake Erie all the way from the city of Cleveland to the Pennsylvania border.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the limitation of time, the gentleman can offer his amendment, but there will be no more debate.

Does the gentleman desire to offer his amendment?

Mr. HALE. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HALE: On page 22, line 14, strike out, in two instances, the word "recurring."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee substitute.

The committee substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILLIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3732), to provide insurance against flood damage, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 617, he reported the same back to the House, with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves to recommit the bill S. 3732 to the Committee on Banking and currency.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BREACH OF CONTRACT DAMAGES

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9969) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to the readjustment of tax in the case of certain amounts received for breach of contract, which was reported unanimously favorably by the committee.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That part I of subchapter Q of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to income attributable to several taxable years) is amended by redesignating section 1305 as section 1306 and by inserting after section 1304 the following new section:

Sec. 1305. Breach of Contract Damages.

(a) General Rule: If an amount representing damages is received or accrued by a taxpayer during a taxable year as a result of an award in a civil action for breach of contract or breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship, then the tax attributable to the inclusion of such amount in gross income for the taxable year shall not be greater than the aggregate of the increases in taxes which would have resulted if such amount had been included in gross income for the taxable year or years during which such amount would have been received or accrued by the taxpayer but for the breach of contract, or breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship.

(b) Credits and Deductions Allowed in Computation of Tax: The taxpayer in computing said tax shall be entitled to deduct all credits and deductions for depletion, depreciation and other items to which he would have been entitled, had such income been received or accrued by the taxpayer in the year during which he would have received it, except for such breach of contract or for such breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship.

(c) Limitation: Subsection (a) shall not apply unless the amount representing damages is $3,000 or more.

SEC. 2. The table of sections for such part I is amended by striking out

"Sec. 1305. Rules applicable to this part."

and by inserting in lieu thereof

"Sec. 1305. Breach of contract damages.
"Sec. 1306. Rules applicable to this part."

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this act shall apply to taxable years ending after December 31, 1954, but only as to amounts received or accrued after such date as the result of awards made after such date.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, strike out line 8 and all that follows down through line 19 on page 2 and insert:

"SEC. 1305. Breach of contract damages.

"(a) General rule: If an amount representing damages is received or accrued by a taxpayer during a taxable year as a result of an award in a civil action for breach of contract or breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship, then the tax attributable to the inclusion in gross income for the taxable year of that part of such amount which would have been received or accrued by the taxpayer in a prior taxable year or years but for the breach of contract, or breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship, shall not be greater than the aggregate of the increases in taxes which would have resulted had such part been included in gross income for such prior taxable year or years.

"(b) Credits and deductions allowed in computation of tax: The taxpayer in computing said tax shall be entitled to deduct all credits and deductions for depletion, depreciation, and other items to which he would have been entitled, had such income been received or accrued by the taxpayer in the year during which he would have received it, except for such breach of contract or for such breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship. The credits, deductions, or other items referred to in the prior sentence, attributable to property, shall be allowed only with respect to that part of the award which represents the taxpayer's share of income from the actual operation of such property.

"(c) Limitation: Subsection (a) shall not apply unless the amount representing damages is $3,000 or more."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, existing law provides for the averaging of certain types of income over the period in which such receipts were actually earned or accrued. Examples of this averaging technique are the treatment of back pay and patent infringement. However, at the present time averaging is not permitted in the case of receipts resulting from a judicial award in a civil action for breach of contract or breach of fiduciary duty or relationship.

In such cases the taxpayer is required to include the total award in gross income for the year in which it is received or accrued. This results, in the usual case, in a substantially higher tax than would be imposed if the taxpayer had received the income represented by the award in each of the taxable years to which the award relates.

In addition, the character of the income has sometimes been held to be changed by the fact of its lump-sum receipt as an award from the breach of a contractor duty. For example, it has been indicated that an award resulting from the breach of a contract involving a failure to pay over oil royalties does not give rise to a percentage depletion deduction to the injured party.

H. R. 9969 permits the taxpayer who receives an award in a civil action for breach of contract or a breach of fiduciary duty or relationship to obtain the advantage of spreading the award over the years to which it is attributable and makes it clear that the taxpayer may take such deductions as he would have been entitled to in the absence of the breach.

This bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 9969 provides that a taxpayer who receives or accrues an award in a civil action for breach of contract, or breach of fiudciary duty or relationship, may spread the amount of the award over the period during which it would have been received, except for the breach of contract or duty, if this results in a lesser tax than would result from including the entire award in gross income of the current year. Provision is also made for the allowance of appropriate credits or deductions.

The bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

(b) Each such sale shall be on the basis of the payment by the purchaser of not less than 25 percent of the vessel sales price at the time of execution of the vessel sales contract, with the balance payable in approximately equal annual installments over the remainder of the economic life of the vessel, which economic life is to be determined by the Maritime Administration, with interest on the portion of the vessel sales price remaining unpaid at the rate of 3½ percent per annum. These restrictions shall run at law and in equity with the titles to the vessels and are binding upon all subsequent owners.

(d) Any contract of sale executed under authority of this act shall provide that in the event the United States shall, through purchase or requisition, acquire ownership of any such vessel, the owner shall be paid therefor the value thereof, but in no event shall such payment exceed the actual depreciated sales price under such contract (together with the actual depreciated cost of capital improvements thereon); that in computing the depreciated acquisition cost of such vessel, the depreciation shall be computed on the vessel on the schedule adopted or accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury for income tax purposes as applicable to such vessel; that such vessel shall remain documented under the laws of the United States during the remainder of the economic life of the vessel or as long as there remains due the United States any principal or interest on account of the sales price, whichever is the longer period; and that the foregoing provisions respecting the requisition or the acquisition of ownership by the United States, and documentation shall run with the title to such vessel and be binding on all owners thereof.

"'(2) compromise, adjustment, or reduction of claims shall be based on a reasonable determination by the Secretary of the debtor's ability to pay and the value of the security and with or without the payment of any consideration at the time of such adjustment or reduction;

"'(3) releases from personal liability may also be made with or without the payment of any consideration at the time of adjustment of claims against—

"'(A) borrowers who have transferred the security property to other approved applicants under agreements assuming the outstanding secured indebtedness; and

"'(B) borrowers who have transferred their farms to other approved applicants under agreements assuming that portion of their outstanding indebtedness against the farm which is equal to the value of the farm at the time of the transfer, and borrowers whose farms have been acquired by the Secretary, in cases where the county committees certify and the Secretary determines that the borrowers have cooperated in good faith with the Secretary, have farmed in a workmanlike manner, used due diligence to maintain the security against loss, and otherwise fulfilled the covenants incident to their loans, to the best of their abilities;

"'(4) no compromise, adjustment, or reduction of claims shall be made upon terms more favorable than recommended by the appropriate county committee established pursuant to section 42 of this Act; and

"'(5) any claim which has been due and payable for 5 years or more, and where the debtor has no assets from which the claim could be collected and has no apparent future debt payment ability, or is deceased and has left no estate, or has been absent from his last known address for a period of at least 5 years, has no known assets, and his whereabouts cannot be ascertained without undue expense, may be charged off or released by the Secretary upon a report and favorable recommendation of the employee of the Administration having charge of the claim: Provided, however, That claims involving a principal balance of $150 or less may be charged off or released whenever it appears to the Secretary that further collection efforts would be ineffectual or likely to prove uneconomical.'

"(b) The first sentence of section 42 (a) is amended by inserting after the word 'county' in each of three places the words 'or area'.

"(c) Section 43 (d) is amended by striking the words 'as family-size farms'.

"(d) Section 51 is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 51. The Secretary is authorized and empowered to make advances to preserve and protect the security for, or the lien or priority of the lien securing, any loan or other indebtedness owing to, insured by or acquired by the Secretary under any programs administered by the Farmers' Home Administration; to bid for and purchase at any foreclosure or other sale or otherwise acquire property pledged, mortgaged, conveyed, attached, or levied upon to secure the payment of any such indebtedness; to accept title to any property so purchased or acquired; to operate for a period not in excess of 1 year from the date of acquisition, or lease such property for such period as may be deemed necessary to protect the investment therein; to sell or grant rights-of-way or easements over such property; and to sell or otherwise dispose of such property in a manner consistent with the provisions of section 43 of this Act. Any advances or expenditures under this section with respect to any insured loan or insured mortgage shall be paid out of the mortgage insurance fund.'

"SEC. 4. Section 1 of the Act of August 31, 1954, as amended (68 Stat. 999; 69 Stat. 223), is further amended by striking the figures '1957' and inserting in lieu thereof the figures '1959' and by striking the figures '$15 million' and inserting in lieu thereof '$65 million'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11544) to improve and simplify the credit facilities available to farmers, to amend the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and inserted language differing from that adopted by the House in a number of respects. The conferees have agreed upon a substitute amendment which in most respects is identical with the bill as it passed the House. Following are the major differences between the House bill and the substitute amendment recommended herewith by the Committee of Conference:

LOANS TO PART-TIME FARMERS

The definition of a part-time farmer appearing in section 1 (c) and also in section 2 of the bill, is almost the same as that adopted by the House. Eliminated from the definition is language inserted by the Senate which would have limited refinancing loans to part-time farmers to debts against the real estate and makes it clear that such loans may cover refinancing of any indebtedness for agricultural purposes, including those secured both by real estate and chattel mortgages.

LOANS FOR TENANT HOUSE CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR

The conferees accepted a Senate provision authorizing insurance of loans of not to exceed $15,000 for the construction, improvement, repair, or replacement of farm dwellings and other farm buildings on farms, the operation of which require no more than three farm families or three farm dwellings.

5-PERCENT INTEREST RATE

Eliminated from the conference bill is a Senate provision which would have stricken from the existing language of the act reference to prevailing rates of interest in excess of 5 percent as one of the qualifications for eligibility for an FHA loan. The conferees retained the House language, which retains that provision in existing law, but they point out that it is not the intention of the act being amended nor of the conferees to use the facilities of the Farmers Home Administration for the financing of well-to-do farmers who should be able to obtain adequate credit from other sources and that the reference to payment of prevailing interest in excess of 5 percent in the act is only one of the qualifications established in the act for eligibility for an FHA loan.

"AVERAGE VALUE" CRITERION

The Senate amendment (sec. 1 (e)) would have eliminated from existing law the provision that FHA loans may not be made for the acquisition or enlargement of farms which have a value in excess of the average value of efficient family-type farms in the county. The conference amendment will retain this language in the existing law with a slight amendment to provide that improvement or refinancing loans (as distinguished from acquisition or enlargement loans) may be made with respect to farms above the "average value" level.

INSURANCE OF SECOND MORTGAGE LOANS

The House conferees accepted a Senate provision (sec. 1 (h)) which will authorize insurance of second mortgage loans on real estate, as well as first mortgage loans.

MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF OPERATING LOANS

The House conferees accepted the Senate formula with respect to the maximum amount of operating loans. This formula provides that no loan to any one borrower may exceed $10,000, with the exception that not to exceed 10 percent of the funds made available by annual appropriation for such loans may be used to make loans up to $20,000.

HARDSHIP CASES

The House bill provided that production loans might be extended beyond the present 7-year limitation only in instances of hardship occurring in areas declared by the Secretary of Agriculture or the President to be disaster areas. The language agreed to by the conferees will permit extension of such loans in the case of individual hardship without restriction as to area but with the provision that no such loan may be extended for more than ten years from the original date the loan was made.

EXTENSION OF "ECONOMIC DISASTER" LOAN PROGRAM

The Senate conferees accepted the provisions of Section 4 of the House bill extending for two years the operation of the Act of August 31, 1954, and providing an additional 50 million dollars in loan funds. There was no such provision in the Senate bill, due to the fact that this matter had been handled in separate legislation by the Senate.

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2902)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8750) to amend the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act (68 Stat. 666) is amended as follows:

"(a) Amend the second and third sentences of section 2 to read as follows: '"Works of improvement" any undertaking for—

"'(1) flood prevention (including structural and land treatment measures) or

"'(2) the conservation, development, utilization, and disposal of water in watershed or subwatershed areas not exceeding two hundred and fifty thousand acres and not including any single structure which provides more than five thousand acre-feet of floodwater detention capacity, and more than twenty-five thousand acre-feet of total capacity. No appropriation shall be made for any plan involving an estimated Federal contribution to construction costs in excess of $250,000, or which includes any structure which provides more than twenty-five hundred acre-feet of total capacity unless such plan has been approved by resolutions adopted by the appropriate committees of the Senate and House of Representatives: Provided, That in the case of any plan involving no single structure providing more than 4,000 acre-feet of total capacity the appropriate committees shall be the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate and the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and in the case of any plan involving any single structure of more than 4,000 acre-feet of total capacity the appropriate committees shall be the Committee on Public Works of the Senate and the Committee on Public Works of the House of Representatives, respectively.'

"(b) Amend section 3 by striking out clause (2), and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'(2) to prepare plans and estimates required for adequate engineering evaluation;

"'(3) to make allocations of costs to the various purposes to show the basis of such allocations and to determine whether benefits exceed costs;'

and by renumbering clauses (3) and (4) as (4) and (5) respectively.

"(c) Amend clause (2) of section 4 to read as follows:

"'(2) assume (A) such proportionate share, as is determined by the Secretary to be equitable in consideration of the direct identifiable benefits, of the costs of installing any works of improvement, involving Federal assistance, which is applicable to the agricultural phases of the conservation, development, utilization, and disposal of water, and (B) all of the cost of installing any portion of such works applicable to other purposes except that any part of the construction cost (including engineering costs) applicable to flood prevention and features relating thereto shall be borne by the Federal Government and paid for by the Secretary out of funds appropriated for the purposes of this Act;'.

"(d) Add after the word 'landowners' in clause (4) in section 4, the words 'or water users'.

"(e) Strike out the word 'and' at the end of clause (4) in section 4; strike out the period at the end of clause (5) and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word 'and'; and after clause (5) insert a new clause as follows:

"'(6) submit a plan of repayment satisfactory to the Secretary for any loan or advancement made under the provisions of section 8.'

"(f) Amend section 5 to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. At such time as the Secretary and the interested local organization have agreed on a plan for works of improvement, and the Secretary has determined that the benefits exceed the costs, and the local organization has met the requirements for participation in carrying out the works of improvement as set forth in section 4, the local organization with such assistance as it may request from the Secretary, which assistance the Secretary is hereby authorized to give, shall secure engineering and other services, including the design, preparation of contracts and specifications, awarding of contracts, and supervision of construction, in connection with such works of improvement, and in order to properly carry out such services in such projects as to such structures therein providing for municipal or industrial water supplies, the local organization shall, and in such projects not providing for municipal or industrial water supplies, the local organization may, retain or employ a professional engineer or engineers satisfactory to the Secretary, and the Secretary shall reimburse the local organization for the cost it may incur for the services of such engineer or engineers as is properly chargeable to such works of improvement, except that if the local organization decides not to retain or employ a professional engineer or if the Secretary determines that competent engineering services are not available he may contract for a competent engineer to provide such services or arrange for employees of the Federal Government to provide such services: Provided, That at the request of the local organization which retains or employs a professional engineer or engineers as aforesaid, the Secretary may advance such amounts as may be necessary to pay for such services, but such advances with respect to any works of improvement shall not exceed 5 per centum of the estimated total cost of such works: Provided further, That, except as to the installation of works of improvement on Federal lands, the Secretary shall not construct or enter into any contract for the construction of any structure unless there is no local organization authorized by State law to undertake such construction or to enter into such contract, and in no event after July 1, 1956: Provided, That in participating in the installation of such works of improvement the Secretary, as far as practicable and consistent with his responsibilities for administering the overall national agricultural program, shall utilize the authority conferred upon him by the provisions of this Act: Provided further, That whenever the estimated Federal contribution to the construction cost of works of improvement in any watershed or subwatershed area shall exceed $250,000 or the works of improvement include any structure having a total capacity in excess of twenty-five hundred acre-feet, the Secretary shall transmit a copy of the plan and the justification therefor to the Congress through the President: Provided further, That any such plan involving an estimated Federal contribution to construction costs in excess of $250,000 or containing any structure having a total capacity in excess of twenty-five hundred acre-feet (a) which includes reclamation or irrigation works or which affects public or other lands or wildlife under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, or (b) which includes Federal assistance for floodwater detention structures, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of the Army, respectively, for his views and recommendations at least thirty days prior to transmission of the plan to the Congress through the President. The views and recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Army, if received by the Secretary of Agriculture prior to the expiration of the above thirty-day period, shall accompany the plan transmitted by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Congress through the President: Provided further, That, prior to any Federal participation in the works improvement under this Act, the President shall issue such rules and regulations as he deems necessary or desirable to carry out the purposes of this Act, and to assure the coordination of the work authorized under this Act and related work of other agencies including the Department of the Interior and the Department of the Army.'

"(g) After section 7 insert the following two new sections and renumber subsequent sections of the Act to conform:

"'SEC. 8. The Secretary is authorized to make loans or advancements to local organizations to finance the local share of costs of carrying out works of improvement provided for in this Act. Such loans or advancements shall be made under contracts or agreements which will provide, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary deems appropriate, for the repayment thereof in not more than fifty years from the date when the principal benefits of the works of improvement first become available, with interest at the average rate, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, payable by the Treasury upon its marketable public obligations outstanding at the beginning of the fiscal year in which the loan or advancement is made, which are neither due nor callable for redemption for fifteen years from date of issue. With respect to any single plan for works of improvement, the amount of any such loan or advancement shall not exceed five million dollars.

"'SEC. 9. The provisions of this Act shall be applicable to Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.'

"SEC. 2. The amendments made by this Act shall be applicable to all works of improvement and plans for such works under the provisions of the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act. Any plans for works of improvement with respect to which the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized prior to the date of this Act to participate in the installation of works of improvement in accordance with such plan, or any plan for works of improvement which has received prior to the date of this Act the approval of congressional committees, as required by such Act, need not be submitted to the congressional committees as required by the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act as amended by this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8750) to amend the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying report:

The Senate amendment struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and inserted language differing in a number of respects from that adopted by the House. The conference report herewith submitted is a substitute amendment which differs from the House provisions of the bill in the following major respects:

(1) The waiting period of 45 days (recently reduced to 15 by H. R. 11873) before work can start on a project after the plans have been submitted to Congress, and the requirement in existing law that projects involving dams above a certain size must also be approved by the Committees on Agriculture before appropriations may be made, is replaced by a new provision that—

(a) Exempts projects involving less than $250,000 of Federal contribution to construction costs and containing no structure having more than 2,500 acre-feet capacity from the review by other Federal agencies and the Congress;

(b) Eliminates the waiting period presently contained in the act; but

(c) Requires approval by the "appropriate committees" of all projects submitted to Congress before appropriations therefor may be made and declares that in the case of projects not involving a structure providing more than 4,000 acre feet of total capacity, the appropriate committees will be the Agriculture Committees of the House and Senate and that in the case of projects involving any structure with a total capacity in excess of 4,000 acre feet, the Public Works Committees of the House and Senate shall be the appropriate committees.

(2) Revises section 5 of the act to provide for the employment of professional engineers and other professional services for the design, preparation of contracts and specifications, awarding of contracts and supervision of construction. In the case of structures for municipal or industrial water supplies the local organization is required to secure such professional services but must be reimbursed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the cost of such services. In the case of other types of structures and facilities authorized under the act, the local organization may retain such professional assistance or may call upon the Secretary to perform any or all of such services for the local organization. This will not preclude use of both Government and private engineers on multiple-use structures. Although the wording of section 5 as agreed upon by the conferees is substantially different from the existing section in the act, it does not change nor diminish in any respect the authority and responsibility of the Secretary to cooperate with local agencies in all phases of the planning, development and construction of works of improvement authorized by the act and to participate fully in such planning and construction to the extent agreed upon between the Secretary and the responsible local agency.

(3) Places an upper limit of 25,000 acre feet total capacity on the size of any single structure which may be included in a watershed plan.

(4) Requires the preparation of plans and estimates needed for "adequate engineering evaluation".

(5) Requires an allocation of costs to various purposes.

(6) Broadens the safeguarding of State water rights by making the act applicable to "water users" as well as "land owners".

(7) Provides that Federal loans or advancements to local organizations may not exceed five million dollars on any one project.

(8) Extends the benefits of the amendments to the act made by this bill to projects heretofore authorized.

The House struck out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and inserted language differing from the Senate language in several respects. The conferees have agreed upon a substitute amendment which differs from the House amendment in the following respect (references are to sections in the conference report):

Section 1 of the bill was identical in both the Senate bill and the House amendment and has, therefore, not been changed.

Section 2 of the conference bill is the language of section 2 of the Senate bill amended so as to make it clear that the provision is not an appropriation but merely an extension of the existing authority of the President as to the manner in which the foreign currencies accruing under the act may be used.

Section 2 of the House amendment has been eliminated from the conference compromise because the provisions therein made no change in existing law.

Subsection (a) merely restated the construction of the existing section 304 of the act. In this connection it is pointed out that section 304 does not apply to any transactions beyond the scope of the act and should not be construed to apply to dollar sales.

Subsection (b) was a restatement of the policy under which sales authorized by the act are now being conducted—a policy which it is the intention of the conferees should be continued—but while adding nothing to the policy, would have required administrative determinations in connection with each transaction under the act which would have added substantially to the complexity and the cost of administration.

Section 3 of the conference bill adopts substantially the language of the Senate provision, which was deemed preferable by the conferees in order to make it clear that dried fruits, such as prunes, raisins, etc., are eligible for inclusion within the provisions of the section, and that a ship might carry a combined cargo consisting of both fresh fruits and canned or other processed fruits and would not be limited to a cargo of one type only.

Section 4 of the conference bill is the language of section 4 of the House amendment and did not appear in the Senate bill. It was accepted by the conferees in order to broaden the operations under section 201 of the act to permit use of food donated thereunder for refugees and other continuing "extraordinary" requirements.

DONABLE PROPERTY PROGRAM FOR EDUCATION, HEALTH, AND CIVIL DEFENSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include three letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who have raised the points as to the effect of H. R. 7855 on the donable property program for education, health, and civil defense, I insert in the RECORD a letter received today from the Administrator of GSA, the Honorable Franklin G. Floete, which makes it clear that this bill merely extends the period of time during which the Administrator may negotiate sales of real and personal property which are available for sale under the law. The donable program is not affected by H. R. 7855.

Mr. Floete also advises that a bill to grant permanent authority to negotiate sales is being drafted so the periodic extension of the authority may be dispensed with.

The second point is with respect to the designation of contractors or agents of the Government to sell certain classes of property for the Government's account in order to increase the rate of return. By letter of July 3, 1956, which I place in the RECORD, the Administrator advises that any such an arrangement would not be undertaken until cleared with "the appropriate committees of the Congress in accordance with the reporting requirements of the bill." My reply of July 9, 1956, is also placed in the RECORD.

I feel certain that the clarification of these two points by the Administrator removes some concern as to the intended use of the authority to negotiate sales.

Re H. R. 7855

JULY 25, 1956.

Hon. JOHN W. McCORMACK,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN McCORMACK: The extension of our authority to negotiate sales of real and personal property under section 203 (e) of the Federal Property and Admininstrative Services Act of 1949 as amended by H. R. 7855, if enacted, will not affect disposals for health, educational, and civil defense purposes under section 203 (j) and (k) of that act. H. R. 7855 deals with how sales are affected and not with the matter of eligibility.

This agency is now working on a revised draft of legislation to provide permanent authority to negotiate disposals of surplus property. This legislation will be submitted to the Congress at the opening of its next session.

Sincerely,

FRANKLIN G. FLOETE,
Administrator.

Re H. R. 7855, negotiated sales authority

GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., July 3, 1956.

Hon. JOHN W. McCORMACK,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. McCORMACK: This is in response to your informal request to our Associate General Counsel for a statement concerning GSA's plans with respect to the use of service contractors to sell surplus property.

As you are aware, this agency has been endeavoring to bring about, with the cooperation of the Department of Defense and other Federal agencies, improvements in techniques for selling surplus personal property. One area in which current sales returns appear to be especially susceptible to improvement consists of certain highly technical categories of property. While emphasis has been and is being placed upon the use of clear and commercially understandable descriptions of technical materials listed in Government sales offerings, there has not been on hand in the Government an adequate supply of personnel qualified to identify, describe, and lot such property in a manner to reach the best markets.

The possible use of private companies which normally handle the sale of such property has been under consideration for some time. GSA made a commitment to the Subcommittee on Military Operations of the House Government Operations Committee in testimony on May 24, 1955 that the value of service contracts for selected categories would be tested on an experimental basis.

Proponents of the use of service contractors claim that there can be increased net return to the Government by utilizing the technical and sales experience of companies normally selling certain types of property.

The Committee on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government in recommendation No. 17 of its report on surplus property, issued in April 1955, expressed concern about the low level of sales return being obtained for some technical types of surplus personal property. It recommended that GSA, with the cooperation of the Department of Defense, undertake to dispose of selected categories of such property through the use of commercial concerns which normally handle sales of such property.

This agency has no fixed position about the use of service contractors. It does recognize that a problem exists with respect to good merchandising of certain technical categories.

Subsequent to the issuance of the above-mentioned report on surplus property, GSA and DOD began a series of meetings to explore the recommendation with the objective, provided there were mutual agreement between the agencies, of undertaking test contracts with service contractors for a few selected categories of property.

It was the consensus of the military departments that the first area to be considered should be electronic parts, components, and equipment. Joint meetings have been held with representatives of the electronic sales industry to obtain its initial overall reaction. There has been both support for and opposition to the proposal from industry representatives.

As we see it, however, there is a great deal of work which must be done before any test contracts can be ready for execution. The administrative problems are numerous and complex, some of which will be worked out with the General Accounting Office. Safeguards to protect the Government's property and to insure the competitive selection and utilization of qualified contractors are but a few of those problems.

As we interpret the provisions of H. R. 7855, there is nothing in the bill which would preclude GSA from entering into service contracts of the nature under consideration. Therefore, if H. R. 7855 is enacted, GSA and the Defense Department plan to continue to explore the electronic area. Another category for possible consideration is aircraft components, parts, and equipment.

Of course, if the point is reached where GSA and the Defense Department determine that such a test is feasible and in the public interest, before any trial service contract is executed, an explanatory statement of the proposed contract will be submitted to the appropriate committees of the Congress in accordance with the reporting requirements of the bill.

These tentative plans with respect to the use of service contractors, if adopted, would affect a limited portion of Government surplus property sold. While this has been made clear in the few industry meetings we have held, there nevertheless appears to have arisen some belief that the use of service contractors was definitely planned for surplus property disposals in general, and that thousands of small businesses would thereby be adversely affected.

With the concurrence of Mr. Ray Ward of your staff, we are sending a copy of this letter to Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD.

We hope that this is fully responsive to your request.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN G. FLOETE,
Administrator.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF THE MAJORITY LEADER,
Washington, D. C., July 9, 1955.

Hon. FRANKLIN G. FLOETE,
General Services Administration.
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FLOETE: I am in receipt of your letter of July 3 in relation to H. R. 7855. The only purpose that prompted me to seek a letter from you was so that I could insert it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, showing that before any action is taken by you or your associates in connection with the use of service contractors, it will be after the same is submitted to the appropriate committees of both branches of the Congress, if the use of such contractors is decided upon. So far as I am concerned, I have no opinion to express, one way or the other.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

———.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in connection with tomorrow's suspensions, one of them will be on the bill H. R. 8384, dealing with marketing orders on cranberries for processing.

There will also be a suspension on H. R. 11709, to increase the authorization for the appropriation of the Atomic Energy Commission. I understand that is the point-of-order bill in connection with the Atomic Energy Commission.

Also, S. 3416, relating to the employment of Indians.

S. 3042, the Mineral Leasing Act.

Any other suspensions will be cleared with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and announced.

Mr. MARTIN. First of all will be any conference reports?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. MARTIN. Can the gentleman give us any idea as to what other legislation may be taken up?

Mr. McCORMACK. The first order of legislative business will be the bill H. R. 8902, relating to air carriers' reinvestment of proceeds from sale of property.

Mr. MARTIN. That will come ahead of the suspensions?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes, that will come ahead of the suspensions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that two calendars are to be called tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes, the Consent Calendar and Private Calendar will be called tomorrow.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The bill that was listed for consideration on the whip notice, H. R. 12050, was reported from the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy with one dissenting vote. It seeks to provide for certain insurance indemnities in connection with building of atomic reactors under the programs we presently have. Can the gentleman tell us when it is proposed that that bill might be called, or might it be considered under suspension tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable at this time to answer the first question, as to when it might be called. As far as the suspension is concerned, I can answer that, No.

Mr. MARTIN. For the information of the majority leader, and I am sure he must know this fact, that bill has now been out long enough so that any member of the Rules Committee may call it up as a matter of special privilege.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true, but it is not special on going into the Committee of the Whole. It is special as to the rule. Under the rules, it has a preferential situation with relation to the rule itself, but the privilege does not extend beyond that.

Mr. HALLECK. If the gentleman will yield further, if the rule were adopted, and I certainly would expect it would be adopted, then I certainly would expect that upon the adoption of the rule the chairman of the committee would move that the House go into the Committee of the Whole to consider this measure, because it is important.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's expectation may not be the expectation of others.

Mr. HALLECK. I can understand that. That very often happens.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not very often, but occasionally.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

HON. JAMES PRIOLEAU RICHARDS

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. RIVERS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, on August 31, 1894, in the small agricultural community of Liberty Hill, S. C., JAMES PRIOLEAU RICHARDS was born. In his early youth he worked on his father's farm. He attended Clemson College, but when World War I came he enlisted in the United States Army and rose from a private to second lieutenant. He served with great distinction in the famous 30th Division.

After the termination of the war he attended law school at the University of South Carolina, and was graduated in 1921. Having been admitted to the bar, he began the practice of law in Lancaster, S. C., not many miles from his native heath of Liberty Hill.

His first public office was his election to judge of probate in Lancaster County in 1922, which office he held until he was elected to this body.

Mr. RICHARDS began serving in the House of Representatives during the 73d Congress in 1933. He is terminating 24 years in this Congress. No man in the history of my State has served as long in the House of Representatives as this distinguished South Carolinian.

Dick, as he is affectionately known by us all, demonstrated his keen intellect and unusual ability early in life. After coming to Congress, he was assigned to the important Committee on Foreign Affairs, which he has headed with such great distinction. Few men in the history of this or any other parliamentary body have experienced more intimate association in the cause of peace with the leaders of the governments all over the world. He has jealously guarded the prerogatives of the great Committee on Foreign Affairs. He has labored indefatigably to bring to every member of his committee on the Congress knowledge of our foreign policy, both economic and military. He has studiously sought to protect the fiscal integrity and responsibility of our Nation. He has lived the philosophy "That a nation is only as strong diplomatically and militarily as she is economically." This epitomizes DICK RICHARDS.

DICK RICHARDS longed to be at home in South Carolina with his family and his people. This is the compelling reason why he announced his retirement at the end of this session of the Congress. He leaves at his own choosing. He could have been reelected to Congress as long as he lives. There are other high positions of responsibility and trust in South Carolina which he could occupy if he but gave his consent to offer at the ballot box. DICK RICHARDS is a man who towers with the giants of South Carolina's political past. RICHARDS believes that the cause of world peace has improved. This is another factor in his decision to retire. He is confident of the future and those who will chart our course in the world of nations. He is confident of the leadership of America in the future days. DICK RICHARDS wants to retire now while he is still a young man. He has many things he wants to do. He has our best wishes in his unfinished endeavors.

Dick has never sought the plaudits of the crowd or played for the headlines. The major part of his 24 years in the Congress have come during the most critical hours of this country's existence in the world. He has participated actively in her rise to the leader of the world. This participation has been hard on him. He now seeks a more tranquil existence. While his decision to retire greatly affects the prestige of the Delegation of our State, and of our Nation, his wise counsel to the people of his native State during the remaining years of his life will be eagerly sought and generously given.

Mr. Speaker, I know it is the ardent wish of every Member of this body that DICK RICHARDS will have many years before him. While we hate to see him leave we know he deserves the course he has chosen. We know he will come back to the cloakroom and counsel us on the problems which confront and harass us. We will ever keep his membership in our Democratic ranks and we extend to him our greetings and best wishes to his family as long as he lives.

Personally, I have no better friend in the Congress. Our friendship has grown strong and fast over the years. His advice to me has been of immeasurable benefit. I am determined that his leaving this body will not deprive me and my family of the fine association which we have enjoyed with him and his family.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. Speaker, at this point before I yield, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be permitted to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EVINS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield to my distinguished friend from South Carolina.

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret that my good friend the very capable and distinguished Representative from the Fifth South Carolina District is retiring from Congress. He is at the height of his distinguished public career and he will be sorely missed not only by his colleagues from my State but by his colleagues from many of the other States.

When he has completed his present term in Congress he will have served longer as a Member of the House of Representatives than any other man in the history of my State. During this period in the Congress he has rendered outstanding service not only to his State but to the Nation. I consider him one of the foremost authorities on foreign affairs in the United States today. He has been able to help reconcile and adjust many of the problems which have arisen as a result of a confused and troubled world during one of the greatest of world wars and the problems arising out of that war.

He is from a distinguished South Carolina family. He is capable, sincere, ruggedly honest and sound in his conclusions. Moreover he has the courage of his convictions and does not hesitate to fight for those things that he believes are for the best interest of the people that he represents. We will miss him in the Congress. We will miss his stabilizing influence and his constructive leadership.

He is retiring voluntarily. In my opinion, he could have been reelected should he have so desired. Although we regret to see him go we bow to his decision and wish for him and his lovely family every success and happiness in whatever field of endeavor he chooses to enter.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Speaker, with the close of the 84th Congress, I will have served 10 terms—20 years, and they have passed rapidly. I have served with many Members—those who are yet here and many who have left our ranks for various reasons. These years have been pleasant years. They have been fruitful years. These years have been years of great experience. I have enjoyed the friendship of men from all walks of life, and all with a sincerity of purpose, and with this experience I feel that my life has been enriched. An experience I shall carry with me throughout the days of my life.

When I came to Congress in 1937, one of the first persons I met was DICK RICHARDS. I was impressed with his rugged personality, his character, his determination, his independence, and his unselfish political aspect on life. With the passing years my admiration for him, my respect for him has grown. I have never known a man for whom I have more respect. He is a fellow with the courage of his convictions.

I have served on the same committee with DICK RICHARDS. I have served with him in the House. I have traveled with him in foreign lands, and we have met common problems in almost all walks of life. All these experiences have impressed me, for he has been ready to meet any problem with the same calm judgment and decision of a man with his feet well on the ground.

He has a delightful family—all dedicated to the same program of living a well-rounded life. In his voluntary retirement he will be missed tremendously. Katharine will be missed; his boys and Jane will be missed by those of us who served with him and our families who enjoyed association with them.

Dick, in your retirement from the national scene to the land of your nativity and the soil you love so well, no persons will derive more pleasure from the happiness of the Richards family from South Carolina than will the Gregory family from Kentucky.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that J. G. Holland must have had a man like JAMES PRIOLEAU RICHARDS in mind when he wrote:

God give us men. A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill,
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy,
Men who possess opinions and a will,
Men who love honor; men who will not lie,
Men who can stand before a demagog
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking.

DICK RICHARDS measures up to these standards.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues in expressing admiration for DICK RICHARDS and regret at his leaving. I have served with him on the Committee on Foreign Affairs since I came to the House in 1943. During that time I have had an opportunity to observe him as a coworker and as a friend, as a leader guiding and directing the work of the committee, and as a statesman facing the complex issues which have confronted our Nation.

Let me first pay tribute to DICK RICHARDS as a chairman. It has been a real pleasure to observe the skill, the good nature, the wisdom and the firmness with which he has directed the operations of the Foreign Affairs Committee. There has never been any doubt that Chairman RICHARDS was the man in charge. He frequently has found it necessary to say "No" to proposals made by members of the committee on both sides of the committee table. He has always been able to do so in a spirit of friendliness, of fairness, and nonpartisanship. I do not believe any member of the committee has ever taken offense or harbored resentment as a result of being overruled by our chairman. DICK RICHARDS is really at his best in presiding over a committee meeting. His patience and good humor, his ability to relieve tension with a timely anedote or homely phrase and his skill in pushing the work of the committee to completion has commanded the admiration of us all.

DICK RICHARDS is one who, I can say with all sincerity, deserves the designation of statesman. He has left his mark on the history of our Nation and on the course of world events. His decisions have always been the result of well-informed and carefully considered judgment. I have never known him to adopt a course of action because of political or personal considerations. He has on occasion expressed his disapproval, and even resentment, at the way matters have been handled by the executive. Nevertheless, he has forgotten his personal feelings in considering the legislation involved. The one consideration which has always determined his position has been what has been best for our country.

I feel the deepest regret, not only as a friend and a Member of the House but also as a citizen of the United States, that DICK RICHARDS is retiring from the Congress and the Committee on Foreign Affairs. His absence will make a difference in the years to come. Let me join with my colleagues in wishing him well in the years to come and in assuring him that he will always be remembered.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, as I stated to this august body on June 6, I learned about Chairman RICHARDS' decision to retire from the House of Representatives while with a special study mission of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

This sad news was received with deep regret not only by those of us who have served with him in the House, but also by the many people in the Near and Middle East, in South Asia and the Far East, and in the Western Pacific, who have held him in high esteem as a man who represented and personified the noble traits and characteristics of our great democracy.

Chairman RICHARDS has served the people of his State, and our Nation, with exceptional distinction for over two decades. He has been a Representative in Congress during one of the most trying periods of our history, when the very foundations of our western civilization were subjected to an unprecedented onslaught from the forces of totalitarianism and of militant communism.

During this crucial period he has served his country well, fighting without partisanship or prejudice for the principles which made our Nation strong and free, and at all times placing the welfare of our people above all else.

As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Mr. RICHARDS displayed those precious qualities of leadership which earned him deep respect and admiration of his colleagues. His leadership was marked by fairness, by firmness, and great courage. It has been a distinct privilege for me to be a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs under his chairmanship.

I know that Chairman RICHARDS' experience and wise counsel will be missed sorely in these halls. We draw some consolation, however, from the hope that his great talents and his seasoned judgment will continue to serve our Nation, perhaps in a different capacity.

I join my colleagues in wishing Chairman RICHARDS, and the members of his family, many years of health and happiness.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, like all of my colleagues in the House, especially those of us on the Foreign Affairs Committee, we are going to miss our good friend DICK RICHARDS next year and thereafter very, very much, indeed. So many statements have been made regarding him this afternoon that I will not endeavor to repeat them, except to say that I endorse everything which has been stated regarding his character and his ability. As far as I am concerned personally, one of his outstanding characteristics is his possession of the art of being a master diplomat, and I make this statement because he has been the first man to persuade me to vote for a foreign-aid program since I came to Congress.

Although I have not had the good fortune to know or to serve with Congressman RICHARDS as long as the majority of the Members, I do count his leaving us as a real personal loss. To me, a very junior committee member, he has always shown the greatest degree of consideration, cooperation, and understanding that I could possibly expect. His native State of South Carolina can well be proud in having sent such a distinguished Representative to the Congress of the United States, a man not only of outstanding talents and ability but also a true gentleman in every sense of the word.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with all the fine things that have been said here today about my good friend and colleague, DICK RICHARDS, of South Carolina. Everything that has been said is more than deserved.

I personally entertain the highest respect for Mr. RICHARDS. He is the sort of man who commands respect and confidence by all those who associate with him. He is a man of action, of positive action, and has never been content to float along with the tide and to follow the line of least resistance.

It was Edmund Burke who once said: "For evil to exist it is only necessary for good men to do nothing." He was there striking at the conformist, the party-liner, the man of expediency. DICK RICHARDS is not that type. As he leaves the Congress he leaves behind him a record of accomplishments, built upon independent judgment, cooperation, and courage.

Mr. RICHARDS will be sorely missed in the future. The entire Nation will be the loser when such men of judgment, statesmanship, and courage retire from this body.

I am sorry to see him leave, but I join in extending all the good wishes in the world to my friend DICK RICHARDS and his family. They deserve the best.

Mr. DODD. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to the great chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Congressman JAMES RICHARDS, of South Carolina.

I regret very much that he is leaving the House where he has made a remarkable contribution in the field of foreign affairs.

As a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I have been privileged to serve under his wise and gentle leadership, and I am grateful to him for the good advice and good counsel which he generously gave to me on many occasions.

It is difficult for me to imagine Congressman RICHARDS in retirement. I find it hard to believe that with his active mind and with his inquiring disposition and with his strong physique he can long remain in any kind of retirement.

I hope that the President of the United States and the Secretary of State will utilize his long experience and his great ability in the interests of the United States in the field of foreign affairs.

By so doing, the President and the Secretary of State would at once buttress the topflight leaders in the field of foreign affairs and do something positive by way of bringing true bipartisanship to our national relations.

I join my colleagues in extending my very best wishes for a long and happy and healthy life to Congressman RICHARDS and his family.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, first I wish to speak as a southerner in appreciation of the references to southern culture and tradition by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS], the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD], and the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. CHURCH]. I am confident that these comments will have a particularly strong appeal for the colleague we are honoring today. Yet one source of his greatness is his capacity for forming friendships that extend beyond all provincial interests.

I was talking with him just a few days ago about the fascinating history of the Nation's early settlements and the movement of people across the continent which our forefathers overcame.

Mr. RICHARD'S home city is Lancaster, S. C., and it was named for Lancaster, Pa. It stands as a symbol of the interrelated character of our scattered communities and the common origin of our American ideals and principles.

Those who have preceded me spoke eloquently of his great gifts and monumental contribution to our country. I shall try not to be unduly repetitious. There is the rugged character of the Scots in this good man. He reminds me of the statement of one of Jefferson's biographers who noting that he was influenced greatly by one of his professors of Scottish descent paraphrased the familiar scripture: "Whom the Lord did not predestinate by Scotch ancestors he did foreordain by Scotch instructors."

His statesmanship reveals qualities of mind and heart that no single generation could produce. Spiritual ties to the past are visible in his career.

Mr. Speaker, I delight in the prospect of his happiness in the practice of law with his son, a friend of my lawyer son, and the rest from his heavy duties here, though it will doubtless be brief. His unmatched knowledge of many phases of foreign policy and his devotion to his country's welfare constitute a resource which I believe he will find a way to use for the Nation's good.

We all wish for him and his wife, Katharine, who has also won a place in our hearts, long life and continued usefulness.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join in the tributes being paid DICK RICHARDS, our distinguished colleague and friend from South Carolina.

Vermonters are sometimes considered a bit cold and austere by those who meet them for the first time. But once this veneer of reserve is broken one finds a warmhearted and friendly people who only desire a little time in which to appraise a man's true worth.

So, as a Vermonter, perhaps the highest compliment I can pay DICK RICHARDS is to say that should circumstances require him to establish a residence in the Green Mountain State he would be accepted immediately as one of us. His virtues and qualities, so readily apparent, are those which Vermonters cherish the most: love of liberty, strength of character, rugged independence of thought, and a willingness to fight for one's convictions.

This has been a better House because DICK RICHARDS has been a Member. Men of his stature cannot be replaced. We can only hope that his record will inspire others to try and measure up to the high standards of effective and devoted public service which have been so evident throughout his political career.

We hope that he and his charming wife will enjoy many years of good health and happiness together.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, DICK RICHARDS and I entered the House of Representatives in the 73d Congress, more than 23 years ago, and we soon became devoted friends.

I consider the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] one of the most outstanding Members we have had during these years. He is always sound in his thinking and convincing in his argument. This is one reason he is so highly regarded by the Members on both sides of this aisle. He never takes a stand until he is convinced he is right, and then he never varies from it. This was demonstrated sometime ago when he defeated the leadership on both sides of the aisle on an amendment to the mutual security bill.

I appreciate the friendship of this beloved, able Congressman throughout the years. His advice on many and varied problems, especially on foreign affairs, brought up on the floor of the House has been most helpful.

I do not know of anyone whose absence from this Chamber will be felt more than that of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [DICK RICHARDS]. His retirement is a voluntary one. I hope he will get some needed rest and that all good things will come to him, his lovely and devoted wife, and their fine family.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, DICK RICHARDS I salute you and wish for you the best than can come to a great American. Our districts, yours in South Carolina and mine in North Carolina adjoin. You have extended me many courtesies. I am grateful. My wife Agnes and our family, Cree, Carol, and Charles, join me in expressing to you and your devoted wife Katherine our very sincere good wishes.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I, too, desire to pay tribute to one of the great personalities in the House of Representatives, the chairman of my committee, the Honorable JAMES P. RICHARDS.

It has been my very great privilege to have served on the House Committee on Foreign Affairs of which Mr. RICHARDS has recently been the chairman.

Words cannot express my great respect and admiration for him. He has conducted the affairs of our committee diligently, fairly, and without political consideration. I know of no committee in this House which has functioned with so little political bias as our committee.

JIM RICHARDS, as we refer to him so affectionately, is a man who typifies the American boy of humble parentage who has risen to great stature in his State and more recently in the Nation. He has made an impact on this body. We shall long remember his devoted service and his kindly attitude toward all of us.

As he takes leave of us, I join with my colleagues in wishing him Godspeed and good health. Here is a man.

Mrs. KELLY of New York. Mr. Speaker, to add my personal tribute to the Honorable DICK RICHARDS is an honor. It is also a joy carrying with it deep tones of sadness. This is a most peculiar combination of facts, but the facts are clear and true.

For the very name of JAMES PRIOLEAU RICHARDS is different. He, too, is different from the average man. As one of the Representatives of South Carolina in the Halls of Congress, he became one of the great public servants of that State and one of the great public servants of our United States. In his capacity as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, he became known not only to his colleagues and to those in all branches of Government, but also to the leaders in all the capitals of the world. His ability and integrity placed him in the highest esteem of all who were fortunate to meet him. His fairness is a characteristic extolled by all. It was a joy to serve as one of the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee. Every meeting was a pleasant experience—courtesy was shown to members and witnesses alike, humor came at just the right time and in the right instance. Tensions might mount, but Dick always cleared the air.

The deep tones of sorrow are present in my tribute because Dick is voluntarily returning to private life too young, too able, in these trying days when he is needed most in the affairs of our Nation. I cannot blame him for his decision. In private life he will be able to enjoy more time with his family—his lovely wife, their children and grandchildren. I wish them all many long and happy years together. I want to close with one of the baseball terms he loved, "I learned to hit that strike, reach for the curve, and let the foul ball go by."

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the eulogies being given DICK RICHARDS. As I have stated previously on the floor of the House, he is a great American who has met well the responsibilities thrust upon him in the difficult period since World War II. I think that when the history of congressional actions during this period is revealed, no Member of either body should deserve higher credit for the success of American foreign policy than DICK RICHARDS.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, we members of the Foreign Affairs Committee who have served and worked with JIM RICHARDS for some time know him as a fair-minded and friendly chairman of that important committee. JIM RICHARDS has handled the affairs of the committee on a bipartisan basis so that he has been one of the real and cogent factors in the development of the basic present American positions in the foreign field.

The chairmanship of the House Foreign Affairs Committee has developed tremendously in stature under his leadership, and the House Foreign Affairs Committee is respected for its care and judgment in handling the interests of the United States of America where they arise throughout the world. I am glad to join with my fellow committee members and Members of Congress who have risen to express their personal regret that he is retiring at the end of the current session and will no longer be with us either in the House or with his colleagues on the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, men in Congress stand out. There are those who are especially well balanced and handle difficult things well. One of these is my friend, JIM RICHARDS, of South Carolina, who is retiring after many years of fine service to our Nation as chairman and a leader on the Foreign Affairs Committee.

It has been my distinct pleasure to have had the privilege of serving with this gentleman, and I wish every good for him in the coming years.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, in these closing days of the 84th Congress, with service on lengthy and involved conferences with the other body on the huge mutual security and first and second supplemental appropriation bills, this is the first opportunity I have had to express my best wishes and Godspeed to the respected chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS].

The people of the Fifth District and of the entire State of South Carolina are confronted with a tremendous problem in trying to replace a man of the stature of DICK RICHARDS in the House of Representatives. The people of the entire Nation suffer a great loss in virile leadership on the subject of foreign affairs in Dick's decision not to offer himself once again for the office of Representative in Congress from South Carolina.

I have had close liaison with DICK RICHARDS for many years. Not only has he been a close and affable friend, but as chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Department of State I have had many occasions to discuss and seek advice on many matters concerning that important branch of our Government with our learned chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. On some subjects, such as abolition of the partition of Ireland and civil rights, we would always disagree. But I am sure we always respected one another's opinions and our right to fully state and defend them.

DICK RICHARDS was truly a powerful leader here in the House on foreign policy. I know that on every issue presented to him as a Member for over 20 years and as chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs his primary concern was always, "What is best for my country?"

Mr. Speaker, one must need feel sad at the departure of one of our most brilliant and capable colleagues after a long and devoted public career. However, I do know that, at the same time, we all wish him many, many years of happiness, good health, and further success in his return to private life and the practice of the law. His charming wife, his sons, and daughter will surely benefit by our great loss in having Dick at home in his beloved hometown of Lancaster.

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it gives me much pleasure to pay tribute to DICK RICHARDS who has announced his retirement from the Congress; although I do it with much sadness.

The Fifth District of South Carolina is losing a most able legislator, not only for themselves, but for our country as a whole. As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, his ability, integrity, and leadership of this great committee placed him in a position of the highest esteem not only here in the House of Representatives, but throughout the world.

I deem it one of my personal fortunes to have been associated with DICK RICHARDS and it is impossible to express in words my admiration of and for him. I wish for him the best of luck and health in the coming years.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to come to the House of Representatives with Congressman JAMES P. RICHARDS in 1933. It has been my very high privilege to serve with him for the past 24 years. I believe we are all more or less creatures of our environment and our associations. I feel in all sincerity that I am a better man for having known DICK RICHARDS and having had the privilege of associating with him through these years. DICK RICHARDS embodied many fine qualities. He is gentle, he is kind, he is considerate, he is charitable, he is courageous. I have never known a man who came nearer to having the courage of his convictions than my friend, DICK RICHARDS.

His tenure of office here, as I said, has been coexistent with mine. His family and my family have been closely associated. He visits me down in my gulf coast home, and I have enjoyed this splendid association. I think he deserves after these years of contribution to his country to return to his home in South Carolina and enjoy the rest and recreation to which he is so eminently entitled.

A great statesman, a great soldier, a God-fearing man. I am sure I speak the sentiments of all who have had the privilege of serving here with him when I say: "We wish you Godspeed in retirement."

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my good friend and distinguished colleague on the Armed Services Committee, Mr. RIVERS, for his most eloquent references and comments concerning our illustrious friend, DICK RICHARDS.

I am proud to call DICK RICHARDS my friend, because he is not only an outstanding Member of this body, but also one of the truly great men I have known in public and private life.

His contributions to our Nation and to the world as chairman of our House Foreign Affairs Committee are immeasurable and monumental. His great ability, unselfish service, great Americanism, and peerless statesmanship, and his fine Christian idealism and gentlemanly qualities all mark him with the stamp of true greatness.

We will miss this great man in this House and I hope that the Government will find some way to profit by his tremendous store of knowledge of foreign affairs, great ability, his ripe experience, mature judgment, and noble ideals.

I congratulate DICK RICHARDS upon his outstanding service to the Nation and this House and hope that he and his family will enjoy much success, happiness, and peace in the years to come.

The House and the Nation can ill afford to lose the services and talents of this great American. "Ad multos annos."

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield with pleasure to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my friends on taking this time. My only regret is that it comes at a time of day when many who would wish to pay tribute to our friend are not able to be here.

Mr. RIVERS. The hour is late and time is running out.

Mr. VORY. I could not, however, let this opportunity pass without unburdening my heart. I can say some things here behind his back that I might not be able to say if he were sitting here, because he is a very, very dear friend of mine, and my heart is heavy at the thought that he is leaving our ranks.

But he is going back to the country where he had told me in the old days they had a nine-man baseball team out of the Richards family and most of them played barehanded. I am happy indeed to see him retire to the soil that he loves.

We were rooming together back in 1945 when we were on a mission requested by then General Eisenhower to inspect the German concentration camps. We took a day off and he and I went on a two-man pilgrimage to the spot where he told me the 30th Division broke the Hindenburg line. He was justly proud of his heroic work in World War I. He can have just pride in his heroic service here in these halls.

Through the 18 years I have been here I have known him as an independent, patriotic, straight-thinking statesman. We have sometimes fought back to back against others on both sides of the aisle, and sometimes side by side, and a few times I have fought with him toe to toe in parliamentary battles. He was always a faithful friend and a fearful foe.

The prestige and the respect in which he has been held has been demonstrated not by words but by the support he has received in his difficult task as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which brings controversial legislation to this floor for consideration. He has written historic legislation. He deserves a rest. But I confess it is my hope the people of his State may not permit him to rest and if they do call him to other service it would be a great thing for his State and for the country.

I want to pay my tribute to his fine family and to his lovely wife.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues in paying a deserved tribute to my friend, DICK RICHARDS. During the 18 years I have served in this body I have known many fine Members, but I have never known a better man than DICK RICHARDS. He possesses those sterling qualities of mind and heart which endear him to those who know him.

I wish him Godspeed.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES].

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of deep regret that I have noted the contemplated retirement from Congress of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS]. Throughout my own period of service in this great body he has been an outstanding leader; recognized for his sound contributions and for his careful thinking.

My able predecessor, the Honorable Millard Caldwell, who was subsequently the Governor of my State, talked frequently with me about the gentleman from South Carolina. They had served together throughout Mr. Caldwell's service here and were then and are now fast friends. I recall very well the high praise he accorded Mr. RICHARDS during that time. His predictions of increasing stature and responsibility for Mr. RICHARDS have been well borne out.

Our beloved colleague enjoys the respect and confidence of the House as do few who have served here. This respect and confidence have indeed been well earned. By his service he has built a monument which will long endure.

The Congress will miss his fine personality, his sterling friendship, and his great ability, and his constant courage.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I feel I would be remiss, even at this late hour, if I did not say a few words with respect to DICK RICHARDS.

I came here not so many years ago as many of the Members who have spoken. Since the time of my arrival and as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, I have always looked to DICK RICHARDS for counsel and for guidance. I have always found understanding and sympathy.

We in the House on occasion engage in partisan debate across the center of the aisle. But I think it is one of the hallmarks of the character of DICK RICHARDS that where the welfare of his country is concerned there is no middle aisle in his manner of thinking.

As chairman of the committee he has been thoughtful, gracious, and generous, and always eminently fair. I know that all of us in the House feel a personal sense of loss in the leaving of this body by DICK RICHARDS, but I think the true loss is more far-reaching than that which attaches to his personal stature. Men of his mind, his integrity, his character are sorely needed today, not only in his own State and Nation but throughout the world generally.

I join in wishing Dick and his family Godspeed and all the best of all good things.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, as I have listened to these moving tributes to my beloved friend and chairman, DICK RICHARDS, there has gone through my mind something I heard Dr. William J. Mayo say long ago. Most people think that the No. 1 requirement of a good surgeon is skill with his hands. But Dr. Will said they had learned through the years at the Mayo Clinic, where more than one-fourth of all America's medical school graduates apply for postgraduate work, that the first quality of a good surgeon is character. The second is industry. The third is a reasonable amount of native ability, and fourth, manual dexterity. I am sure we would agree that the first quality a man must have to be a good statesman is, also, character. That surely is the word that one first thinks of in connection with DICK RICHARDS. The thing that accounts for his remarkable hold upon the Congress, as a body, and upon the affections of all its Members of whatever party or section of the country, is the character of the man.

We on his committee know his ability, his extraordinarily penetrating mind, his capacity to listen to all the arguments of witnesses and then ask an incisive question or two that bring out the crux of the matter.

We know his unvarying fairness; we know his unfailing good humor, and his ability to take a tense and strained situation and relax it by some homely illustration or bit of wisdom from his beloved South Carolina.

We know his loyalty to his party and his friends, transcended only by his loyalty to his country and his God. Some of us were associated with him on issues where he stood against the leadership of his own party, as well as when we stood together and spoke against the official position of my party. His name is attached to amendments and pieces of legislation that made history, believe me, in the development of the foreign policy of the United States.

If I may add a personal word, since the years before 1950 when I was warning on every occasion that if we continued to drift and allowed the Communists to get control of China it would be disastrous to ourselves, he started calling me Cato. I was honored thereby. And he told me one day in more recent years, that while he had called me that jocularly, he agreed that we would either have to find ways to prevent further Communist expansion in Asia or else eventually we would be fighting it ourselves.

All this is so meager and inadequate a tribute to this extraordinarily fine, sterling, rocklike, but kindly character, a man who certainly exemplifies our country at its best, and I daresay exemplifies that part of our country from which he came and to which he now returns and which we lovingly call the South, at its most gracious and chivalrous best.

Mr. RIVERS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN].

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, this is really a great privilege to talk about my wonderful friend whom I have worked with and served with for over 22 years. DICK RICHARDS, in my judgment, is one of the finest men I have ever known, and I do know all of you 435 great men and women in this House of Representatives. I do not think we have ever had or ever will have a man better than DICK, because he always gave his best. He is not only a great man as concerns his district and his States, but I am sure this whole world. I remember when we declared war on Germany. We came in from Alaska. DICK RICHARDS was speaking. SAM RAYBURN had just spoken and JOE MARTIN was to speak. But DICK RICHARDS made at that time one of the greatest speeches I have ever heard, and if any of you did not hear that speech, you should look it up, because it was a masterpiece. I want to tell you, he can do more things well than any one man I have ever known. He does not get excited. I will tell you of an incident when Congressman MENDELL RIVERS and DICK RICHARDS and 1 or 2 others visited me down at our hunting lodge at McIntosh, on the Tombigbee River. We had a pretty big crowd. And Dick said, "Let us wait until they get theirs." RIVERS won't shoot a turkey or a deer or any of those things. And, Dick went out. I did not know he could shoot. And, when he came back, he had a deer, a big turkey gobbler, and a wild boar in less than 2 hours. Well, Mendell did not kill anything and neither did I, and it is just that way everywhere. I am sure the good Lord has His hands on DICK RICHARD'S shoulders, and if God be with you, who can be against you. I know that God is with him, and the people, too. I think that Mr. Eisenhower ought to do the identical thing he did to another great man, Mr. GEORGE. I wish he would just wrap Dick up and let him help the Congress and the President of the United States and thereby help this world.

You could look over the entire country and not find a man who is as good as DICK RICHARDS. I wish I did know the words to say in praise of this great man, but I do not believe old man Noah Webster put them in the dictionary. But, I do want to say that he always has his feet on the ground. We get excited sometimes and go back in that room when some of you men make a talk, and Dick would say, "Be quiet; don't say it that way. Say it this way."

I think we will see DICK RICHARDS again. This Nation cannot do without his services. In the first place, I do not believe he will be satisfied away down in that Carolina moon country. I want Dick to know that we have an Alabama moon, just a little bit further on and we will be thinking and pulling and praying that he will get just what he wants. He cannot get away from us, because I know all of us are going to be with him just as long as he is on this earth, and not only in this world, but in the world to come.

God bless DICK RICHARDS and all of his good family and his wonderful friends down in South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS. If the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman's family came from DICK RICHARDS' area in South Carolina.

Mr. BOYKIN. My family is supposed to have built the first house in Camden, S. C. We left there and went down to Alabama and we named the town Camden, Ala.

I will tell you what happened one day. Mendell came down to my hotel on Sunday and he said, "Frank, DICK RICHARDS is in trouble." I said, "What kind of trouble do you mean? Do we have to take guns, or what?" And he said, "No, he needs a little help; he has some opposition down there."

I called my kinsman, Stuart Boykin, and I said, "Stu, Dick is in trouble." He said, "DICK RICHARDS in trouble? DICK RICHARDS is not in any trouble. Anyhow, what do you want me to do?" I said, "I want you to put a car in every county and get every one of those Boykins and every friend you have and get them busy."

Well, Dick won 3 to 1, but he did not need anybody's help, because he can stand on his own feet and look out for himself.

Yes, we did come from up in that country. We left Virginia and went down to Camden, S. C., and then down to Camden, Ala.

Now we are pulling and praying for that great man, DICK RICHARDS, and his wonderful wife, his darling daughter and his wonderful sons.

God bless DICK RICHARDS again.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Alabama for those wonderful remarks.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, it has been my happy privilege to have served with DICK RICHARDS since I first arrived here in 1947. I am very happy to concur in all of the remarks that have been made concerning him, and all the nice things that have been said about him, because they are so true.

There is not any doubt that his patriotism, his loyalty, his keen intellect, his gentlemanly demeanor will all be missed here, just as we shall miss his keen sense of humor, his great ability of being able to disagree so agreeably. He has certainly earned not only the fine title of statesman, but the finer title of friend. He has been the friend of every Member of this House.

Mr. RIVERS. I thank the gentleman from New York and I yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. CHURCH].

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the gentleman from South Carolina that I think Mr. RICHARDS himself would be surprised if he knew how great a hole would be made in the House by his leaving.

I have been privileged to serve under his leadership as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I being a very junior member when I first came under his guidance. It is difficult to realize how that committee can progress with the equanimity that we have shown, with the wisdom that we have tried to grasp at, without the leadership, the magnanimity and the keen insight of Mr. RICHARDS.

I wonder if the gentleman from South Carolina, whom I am addressing, would permit me to say to him, who has spoken so nobly of our friend, that it seems to me that those of us who come from a section of the country which has not known all the glorious chivalry of the South, have learned much from both of you. And as long as we remain in the Congress, the world will be a little bit richer because we have learned something of your heritage, of your patience and, let me repeat and note again, of your chivalry.

We have learned from DICK RICHARDS what it is to be a leader who never has to use more than kindly patience to take his flock where he knows they should go.

I think the United States today has lost an eminent leader. I should feel sorry indeed if I could bring myself to believe, as I cannot, that he will not serve again in some way, because I cannot imagine that Mr. RICHARDS will not continue to serve his State, his country, and his God.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBESON].

Mr. ROBESON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as one who, like DICK RICHARDS, comes from the Deep South, I know and those of us who were raised and reared there know what we mean when we speak of a southern gentleman. We have no reference to attainments which are measured by material success, wealth, and such things. We refer to the quality of a person. To me DICK RICHARDS exemplified here and anywhere he was the highest of the qualities we mean when we say that he is truly a southern gentleman.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HERLONG].

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join my colleagues in speaking out publicly in just and deserved tribute to DICK RICHARDS.

On an occasion like this, it is hard to steer a course between emotionalism, which would embarrass our friend, and matter-of-factness, which would not do justice to our feelings. If I err on either side, it is the fault of my words and not of my heart.

Mr. Speaker, there are many on this floor who have enjoyed and profited from the friendship and counsel of DICK RICHARDS longer than I have had that privilege, but none can value their association with him more highly than I do. He was courteous and kind to me when I first came here as a freshman; through the years since, I am happy and proud to think that our friendship has grown closer. He has many times been generous with his time and his advice when it meant a great deal to me. He has stood as an example to all of us in his integrity and faith to his ideals, as well as an inspiration to us in his dedication to his work, his brilliance of mind, and that quality which draws men to him as lifelong friends.

The country has great need of men like DICK RICHARDS. His leaving Congress is a great loss to our National Government. I cannot believe that his people will leave him entirely in the retirement which he seeks; but this I know—wherever he is, whether in public or private life, DICK RICHARDS will be serving in some capacity, because that is the nature of the man.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] is one of the finest men I have known in or out of Congress.

DICK RICHARDS possesses the qualifications for public office which I think are absolutely essential and for which there is no substitute. He is honest, he is able and he is courageous.

Leaving Congress with the respect of his colleagues as he does, I wish him the best of everything

My hope is that the years ahead will be happy for DICK RICHARDS and his loved ones.

Mr. RIVERS. I yield to the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I know of no Member who leaves this body who is doing so with a greater respect and, in fact, affection in the hearts and minds of his colleagues than our distinguished colleague and good friend, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS]. Mr. RICHARDS is one of the grandest men I have ever met. Honorable and trustworthy in every way, a man of integrity, a man possessed of great nobility of character, he is one who inspires others to greatness and to goodness. He has served in this body for a number of years. He leaves this House voluntarily. He served as chairman of the very important Committee on Foreign Affairs during one of the most trying periods in our Nation's history. He served as chairman of that committee with outstanding distinction and in a manner which leaves upon the pages of our history a record of service to our country that is second to none. DICK RICHARDS is not only a good man, he is a great man. He is also a great American. I extend to him my very best wishes and to his loved ones also I wish every happiness and success for countless years to come.

Mr. RIVERS. I thank the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I am proud indeed to join with our distinguished colleagues from South Carolina in conducting this well-deserved tribute to a great American. It has been my good fortune to have had the benefit of the advice and the inspiration of service with Representative RICHARDS for 20 years in the difficult days preceding World War II, during that war and after it.

It is typical of the conscientious and wise chairman of the great Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House that he worked at full speed and effectiveness throughout this session, although he already had determined it would be his last in Congress. It was not in his nature to relax merely because he had decided not to stand for reelection.

With acute consciousness of the delicacy of balance between peace and war in the troubled world of today, Mr. RICHARDS has continued to study with intensity, to formulate his views with great care and, then, to expound them with vigor, sincerity, and courage.

We cannot tell our friend that he must not return to his beloved South Carolina and the opportunity to mix a bit of leisure with his work. Knowing in our hearts, though, that his keen mind will never retire, we can wish that there were some magical inducement, or mechanism, in our political scheme which would make it more difficult for a public servant such as he to remove his invaluable and effective counsel from a position of influence in the arena of government.

In whatever occupies our colleague's attention in the years ahead, let us hope there will be time and inclination to send forth to those who could profit from it the benefit of his long experience in perceptive appraisal of international developments.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], who served in World War I.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I could not fail to embrace this opportunity to raise my voice in brief but very sincere tribute to the life, character and public service of my warm personal friend and colleague, the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS]. It was my privilege to serve with him throughout the period of World War I in the 30th Division. I can give testimony of his great valor as a soldier. A better soldier never wore our country's uniform. As a fellow chairman in the House of Representatives, I am happy to pay tribute to him and to the great record of service that he has rendered—a man who possesses the highest attributes of Christian character and all of the sterling qualities of manhood. He has made an outstanding record in public service. I join with my other colleagues in the House in wishing for him many years of happiness and prosperity in the future.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SELDEN], a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SELDEN. Mr. Speaker, for the past 2 years I have had the privilege of serving on the Committee on Foreign Affairs under the able leadership of the gentleman from South Carolina. During that period of time I have learned to admire and respect DICK RICHARDS and to value his friendship and wise counsel.

We all realize that the chairmanship of any committee of the House of Representatives carries with it great responsibilities. In these critical times, and when this country has found it necessary to assume a position of world leadership, that is especially true of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Chairman RICHARDS has discharged those responsibilities in a courageous and statesmanlike manner, always placing the safety and welfare of his country first.

As a result of DICK RICHARDS' decision to retire at the end of his present term this body is losing one of its most able and most beloved Members. I join with his many friends and admirers in wishing for him and his lovely wife many future years of happiness and good health.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON].

Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling that I would like to say many things about my chairman, my very good friend, some of which he would not want me to say, so I will just put in a little laugh at this point and thank him for the humor that he puts into our tense moments in the committee. He has such an apt way of just tossing a little word into the discussion and all the tension is gone.

I go back beyond DICK RICHARDS' service here because I was here in 1928 as a wife and I watched a little from the gallery. I found a certain man always in the right place, always doing the right thing. I remember one day when I heard him make one of the finest speeches I have ever listened to. It was in the early part of the war. Then as we worked together on the Foreign Affairs Committee I used to laugh at him a little because he did not bother himself to work some of the time. He said: "Let the other people do some of it." So I began to laugh at him about that. Then after a number of years there was a morning when Judge Kee got up from his chair, put his hand on DICK RICHARDS' shoulder and went out into the other room. From that moment Mr. RICHARDS was chairman. We loved Judge Kee. We had loved Charlie Eaton. Many of us had been deeply fond of Sol Bloom, and we fought with him. He was a good fighter.

During the time that Mr. RICHARDS has been our chairman we have had many conditions, we have had many changes of viewpoint over certain problems. I have never known him to be unfair. I have never known him to be unjust. I have never known him to fail to give each of us an opportunity to express what we wanted to say.

Then came the moment when the President appointed the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] and myself delegates to the United Nations. From the moment he was chairman I do not suppose any chairman ever worked harder, and certainly in New York in those very difficult 3 months—an assignment to which he went most reluctantly—no one could have done more for the United States than JAMES PRIOLEAU RICHARDS. It was my great privilege to serve with him.

It was a privilege to see people suddenly realize that they were with a man who was a great person, and this was true of people from all over the world. There was a radiance about him; he seemed so withdrawing but always was ready to do his part.

With his leaving the Congress we lose something that is rare. We lose a person with such integrity, with such honor, with such loyalty; we lose a man who has friends everywhere, who could argue, discuss, and fight us in committee, but always leaving the room with us as his friends.

We shall all miss him. It is easy to understand why he would like to go back at this point in his life, because he still has much work to do. I am quite sure if any of us want his advice, his counsel, he will be more than ready to give it to us.

I am very grateful to my distinguished colleague from South Carolina for giving all of us this opportunity, particularly myself, to speak a little bit from our hearts about this great man who has been in our midst for many years and who we shall so miss.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Georgia [Mrs. BLITCH].

Mrs. BLITCH. Mr. Speaker, our great majority leader has often said that when you leave the Congress you will find you will have nothing really worth while to remember except the friends that you made. As I have sat here and listened to the heartfelt testimony of all the people who have known him and who have worked with him so long, my thought is: What a very wealthy man is DICK RICHARDS.

I hope you will not think it presumptuous of me, a freshman and the first woman from the Deep South to become a Member of the Congress for a long time, to say these few words. But I could not retire and lose the opportunity of saying how glad I am that I got here in time to know DICK RICHARDS.

God willing, and if I shall continue service in this body, I think I shall be always worth a great deal more to my fellow man because I have known DICK RICHARDS.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCMILLAN].

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, we members of the South Carolina delegation would like to thank the Speaker of the House for his patience and indulgence in giving the Members of the House an opportunity to show our colleague, Congressman RICHARDS, who is retiring from Congress this year, how much we appreciate the wonderful service he has rendered the people of South Carolina, the people of the United States, and the people of the world during his 24 years of service in the National House of Representatives.

I feel that there is nothing more important in this world than to let a person who is retiring from public life know that his services as a public servant have been appreciated by his constituents and the people throughout the world. I believe that I speak for the majority of the people in my home State of South Carolina, when I say that we deeply regretted last spring to read the announcement of my lifelong personal friend, Congressman RICHARDS' decision not to be a candidate to serve in the National House of Representatives again.

Congressman RICHARDS has been a source of inspiration to me personally ever since I have been a Member of this distinguished body. I have looked to Congressman RICHARDS for guidance and assistance ever since the day I was sworn in as a Member of Congress. He has always responded graciously, kindly, and sympathetically when I have called on him for assistance in solving some of the problems confronting my constituents. I admire Congressman RICHARDS as a person. His character is strong as steel and his heart as pure as gold. I don't believe there has ever been a man who has served in the National House of Representives who has more graciously given his energy and time to his constituents, to the people of his State, to the people of the United States, and to the people of the entire world. Congressman RICHARDS is nationally and internationally known and highly respected by every person privileged with his acquaintance.

The people of South Carolina, the people of the Nation and the entire world will miss the valuable services of Congressman RICHARDS when he retires from Congress. Congressman RICHARDS has served my State with distinction and future history, I am certain, will place him among the highest honored citizens in the United States for public service. I sincerely regret Congressman RICHARDS is retiring as a Member of this distinguished body as he is a comparatively young man, considering the age of some of our public servants. He has the experience and the seniority to continue as one of our greatest national leaders.

I hope that he will not completely retire from public service as we greatly need men of his type at the head of our Government during these critical readjustment years. We certainly need leaders of his type both in the Congress and at the head of our Government departments if we are to withstand the great pressure groups who are trying to break down the backbone of our Government at this time.

Congressman RICHARDS has served with distinction as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee. We all know this committee is and has been during the past 15 years one of the most important committees on Capitol Hill as we have found it necessary to legislate, not only for the United States, but for practically every country in the world. We are all aware of the pressure that has been placed on Congressman RICHARDS on different occasions in an effort to sway him away from the American way of thinking. We are all happy that he has never deviated one moment from the provisions of our Constitution and his training as a Christian gentleman. Congressman RICHARDS has made a record for us all to set our sights on in future years.

The Congress of the United States will suffer a great loss when Congressman RICHARDS bids the halls of Congress goodby. I will have lost one of the best friends I have ever had both from a personal standpoint and as a source of good advice on all legislative matters. I do not know that Congressman RICHARDS will ever be interested in holding a public office again; however, I do think that the President of the United States, after the next election, whether he is a Democrat or a Republican, should check the qualifications of this great statesman and offer him the position of Secretary of State or one of the highest ambassadorships available.

Again, I want to reiterate my great admiration for this fine gentleman who is about to bid farewell as a Member of the House of Representatives. I feel more like a brother to Congressman RICHARDS than a friend since he has always been a good friend of my family's, having roomed with my older brother in college and also played on the same football team with him at the University of South Carolina.

My very best wishes go out to Congressman RICHARDS and his lovely family in any future endeavor or profession he may decide to embark upon.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have great affection for so many of my colleagues from the Southland. I feel personally drawn to so many of them. One of the reasons may be the fact that my mother spent her girlhood days in Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Speaker, I think DICK RICHARDS is a standout in the House of Representatives. I recall when I entered the House in the 77th Congress with the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina now in charge of the time and I listened to a most inspiring and most dramatic address made by our colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS]. I went home that night and I felt his remarks so keenly that I wrote him a letter telling him, among other things, that he was going to be an exemplar of mine in my approach to my assignment in the House of Representatives. I have been glad to follow him on so many occasions. It pleases me so much here today to hear Members on both sides of the aisle speak out from their hearts about their kind feelings toward him personally and regarding the record he has established in our body. I, too, feel that there is a place for him in State and national councils in the days to come, and I, too, subscribe to the thought that perhaps our great President may have something in mind for him even as he did for the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. RIVERS. I thank the gentleman.

I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DORN].

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this time yielded me by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS]. I would like to say that in the past history of South Carolina there have been many men who have influenced world affairs, particularly in the field of international and foreign relations: Charles Pinckney, John C. Calhoun, James F. Byrnes, to name only a few. I do believe that our distinguished friend, DICK RICHARDS, ranks in that category in service to this country and to the entire free world.

I should like to mention one thing that perhaps most of the Members do not know, and that is that DICK RICHARDS' father is still living, 89 years old, is active, operates a country store and works every day. He served in the legislature many, many years ago. I know that DICK RICHARDS received much of his inspiration to enter the field of public service from his father, and I am sure one of the reasons he is retiring is that he wants to go back and be with his father and the rest of his family. For that I do not blame him.

DICK RICHARDS' uncle, John G. Richards, was Governor of South Carolina; served for 4 years with honor and distinction in the highest executive office in the State, during the 1920's.

DICK RICHARDS himself served for several terms as probate judge of his county. He was 24 years in this Congress, the last few years as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. He served as a delegate to the United Nations. I think that is one of the greatest honors ever accorded any Member of this House, and it was done by the President of the United States, the leader of the other political party, showing his high esteem and high regard for the character and ability of our distinguished friend.

Not long ago the Government of Spain conferred upon DICK RICHARDS the Grand Cross of Isabel, a very high honor, Spain recognizing in the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] one of the great leaders of the free world today.

I will say this, that one of the greatest things about DICK RICHARDS, in my observation of his fine work here, has been his willingness to talk to and to see anyone, I do not care in what station in life he might be. Even while he was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, burdened with the affairs of the whole country and the free world in the field of foreign relations, he saw everyone who came here from South Carolina who wanted to see him. He was always willing to see and talk with the rest of us of the delegation. I think that is the mark of a great man, to be willing to keep open the door of his office at all times to those who might want to drop in.

I wish DICK RICHARDS and his family well, and I hope that as many of you who come through South Carolina and can do so will drop by and see the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] at his home at Lancaster, S. C.

Mr. RIVERS. I thank my colleague. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to join so many of our colleagues in the fine things that have been said about our good friend and esteemed colleague, DICK RICHARDS. I suppose if there was ever an instance when the roses are showered on the living, it is appropriate this afternoon.

The many fine tributes that have been paid to DICK RICHARDS is an illustration of the fine character of the man and the public service that he has rendered to his own district in South Carolina, to his State, and to the Nation.

I wish Dick were here and could hear all of the fine things that have been said about him. I know he would be deeply moved.

I have observed Dick, as many of you have, in many ways. I am his neighbor. For 14 years it has been my privilege to occupy a suite of offices in the House Office Building next to the offices of our colleague, DICK RICHARDS. Therefore, we have had occasion for a very warm association. Both being from the South, we have had some very interesting what are referred to as over-the-backyard-fence visits and conversations.

We have watched DICK RICHARDS as he has performed his public service here in the House of Representatives. We have seen him go down in the well of the House and fight for his country. We have observed him in the splendid leadership he has given to some of the toughest problems considered by the House of Representatives. We have sat with him and visited with him in the cloakroom.

As have a number of our colleagues who visit the gymnasium frequently, whenever we have the opportunity, I have been with him there and observed the sportsmanlike qualities he possesses. He is a tough competitor. I think perhaps he has been one of the most interesting competitors on the court that we call the paddle-ball court down in the gymnasium. Therefore, I have had occasion and opportunity to observe the man that he is from almost every side of life here in his service as a Member of Congress.

I think it is a very fine thing that since he has decided to leave the Congrees voluntarily he was destined to reach the climax of his public service as he bows out. He has demonstrated that leadership as chairman of the great Committee on Foreign Affairs. We can ill afford to lose the type of man DICK RICHARDS is, because to me he is an all-American.

We have heard recently in the past suggestions that former Presidents of the United States be made Members of the Senate of the United States and given a life membership in that great body. I think it would be well to suggest that DICK RICHARDS be made a Member of the House of Representatives at large, representing all of the United States of America.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gracious gentleman from South Carolina, who has helped me in many ways. I appreciate very much the opportunity to say a word or two in tribute and appreciation of DICK RICHARDS. Before he left I spoke one day on the floor of the Congress about him.

One of the reasons I felt so intensely sorry to leave the Committee on Foreign Affairs when I became chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs was that I would not see and work with DICK RICHARDS on that committee any more. I enjoyed working with him for many reasons. He was always a great fighter, a great American, always fine, never bitter, never cruel, and it is so easy for us to become cruel and bitter in our struggle here in the Congress.

I would have enjoyed serving under DICK RICHARDS as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee and I would have valued his advice if I had stayed and taken the chairmanship of the committee. We lived through terrible war years when I served with him. He was always ready to be helpful. He was always the same whether he was talking with kings and queens or the presidents of other countries or to other high foreign dignitaries or whether he was talking to the so-called man on the street or the people who came from his district and from your district and mine before the committee—he was always the same. He is a fine, true gentleman. He was never awed by anybody. He thought that the little man was just as important as a king or queen or President of the United States. I would like, if you will, Mr. RIVERS, to take back to your lovely wife my great felicitations and my regret that she, too, is going. She was a real help and a very, very lovely woman. They had a very happy relationship with each other and with their family. I wish I could tell you all that is in my heart and in my mind about this great man. May he be extremely happy and not give up entirely his fine patriotic work for our country.

Mr. RIVERS. I thank the gentlewoman.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS. I yield.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, when I came into the Chamber I did not realize this was the time when tribute was going to be paid to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS]. I want to add my feeble word at this time to say that my service in this body has been enriched in the 14 years that I have served here by serving with DICK RICHARDS. For 2 years of that time I served on the Committee on Foreign Affairs under his leadership. During those 2 years I came to know DICK RICHARDS well and to admire the qualities of leadership and the fairness and good nature and patience that he exhibited as a chairman. I think I learned at that time how a chairman of a committee should conduct himself. I speak as one whose forefathers settled in the neighboring State of North Carolina before the Revolution and then moved to Kentucky where I was born. Now, I represent a district out in California. I am told that my family name is well known throughout the State of South Carolina and DICK RICHARDS has spoken to me at times of people bearing my family name in South Carolina. It makes me proud to look back over the years and realize that I come from the neighboring State where there was produced a man of great and sterling statesmanship like DICK RICHARDS. I pay tribute to him very sincerely.

Mr. RIVERS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all my colleagues for their kind indulgence on this occasion. I thank you, too, for all the wonderful tributes you have made to this great American. Dick wanted to be here this afternoon but he was compelled to leave and go home. I know he is grateful. We are grateful.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that all Members be given 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this great American.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

H. R. 8902

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, apparently, it was considered impossible or unwise to call up the rule on this bill this evening, as we understood was planned.

However, as I listened to the announcement of the program for tomorrow, including the suspensions, I understood that this bill would be the first order of legislative business and would be considered even ahead of any of the suspensions.

It was not my intention tonight and it will not be my intention tomorrow morning to take any more of the time of my colleagues than I believe absolutely essential in order to place the basic facts in the RECORD and before those who may be present.

While I am convinced that the proposal is unwise and that we will regret it, if it passes the House, I have undertaken to outline, at least, the fundamental reasons for my opposition in the minority report I filed July 9 as part II of report No. 2530 accompanying this bill. Copies of that minority report were available at the desk this afternoon, and I assume they will be here tomorrow. In addition to that, I have taken four special orders so as to present for the consideration of those who might be interested additional data I felt could be helpful.

The following are the citations in the RECORD covering those special orders:

First. July 18, beginning at page 13418.

Second. July 19, beginning at page 13584.

Third. July 23, beginning at page 14140.

Fourth. July 24, beginning at page 14305.

The testimony before the subcommittee is in the last part of the hearings on Civil Air Policy, beginning at page 541 on April 18, 1956, and covering some 64 pages of 628 pages of hearings.

In view of the interest which has been expressed to me by a number of my colleagues, I shall exercise the privilege, unless someone else does, of making the constitutional point of no quorum before we reach the stage of actual debate upon the bill and possibly also when the bill is to be read for amendment.

As I stated in my special order of Tuesday, July 24, I intend to offer the amendment recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, which I have had printed in the RECORD of that date at the top of the third column on page 14305.

It has been suggested to me that a possible point of order might be raised to the proposed amendment. I hope that will not be done because I feel strongly that the Members of the House should have a full opportunity of expressing their individual judgments as to the inclusion of this amendment in the bill, particularly since it is a constructive suggestion made by the Bureau of the Budget, in recognition of the fact that a problem does exist and since it has received the specific endorsement of the Comptroller General of the United States in his letter to me of July 17, which I placed in the RECORD July 18 at page 13419, and has received also the specific and reasoned endorsement of Vice Chairman Joseph P. Adams of the Civil Aeronautics Board in his letter to me of July 16, which I placed in the RECORD of July 18 at page 13421—and I call particular attention to the single paragraph at page 13421 entitled "Budget Bureau amendment".

It seems to me it would be most unfortunate if the Members of the House as a whole were to be deprived of the opportunity to express their considered opinions as to the wisdom of this recommendation. I think this is particularly true since we all recognize that in the vast majority of instances legislative committees do consider such amendments on their merits without regard to any technical application of the doctrine of strict germaneness.

However, if the point of order is made, I shall be prepared to present briefly my reasons for believing that the point of order should be overruled and I hope that it will be overruled.

If the amendment is not approved by those who may be present to express themselves when the vote is taken in the Committee of the Whole, it is my intention to incorporate it in a motion to recommit and seek recognition to offer that motion because I firmly believe that the decision should be made by the full membership of the House, quite irrespective of what the result of that decision may be. It seems to me particularly important that this opportunity should be available to all Members of the House in view of the strong opposition of all the Government departments, in terms of the reasons they have expressed for their opposition and in view of the current proceeding before the Civil Aeronautics Board, which was begun on April 7, and which on July 3 reached the stage of a report of a prehearing conference. In it 33 airlines, now receiving subsidies—the only ones who would benefit by the passage of this bill—are parties.

I have already cited the excellent brief paragraph in the statement of Vice Chairman Adams of the Civil Aeronautics Board before the Subcommittee on Transportation and Communications of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on April 20, 13 days after the CAB proceeding started. I want to restate now that single sentence since it expresses so succinctly and reasonably the fundamental reason why I believe the House should defer further consideration of this proposal at this very late hour in this session in order to have before it next year the considered decision and recommendations of the Board, grounded upon a thorough and complete economic report rather than a brief hearing on one day, mainly of the proponents of this bill.

Vice Chairman Adams said:

> I consider this kind of proceeding the best approach to the problem because it looks toward a policy consistent with the scheme of the Civil Aeronautics Act, fully supported by a complete economic record, and geared as closely as possible to the individual needs of the carrier.

I submit it would be sheer folly for us to ignore that advice, quite irrespective of the pressure exerted even this afternoon, apparently at the behest of Pan American, the most vigorous, persistent, and demanding of those who urge us to support this proposal. I can only express regret that it has been stupid enough to advocate this selfish windfall for it on the basis of some alleged beneficial results in our relations with our neighboring friends to the south.

I now definitely challenge the Pan Am lobbyists, who I assume will be outside this Chamber at 10 o'clock tomorrow, as they have been this afternoon, to submit one scintilla of credible evidence that passage of this bill will benefit anyone but Pan Am and its select companions in unwarranted windfalls, in depreciation on top of depreciation, in double subsidies. If Pan Am can do so, I will admit it and withdraw my minority report on this floor tomorrow. If it cannot or will not officially do this, I submit we have every right and duty to reject this bill in the interest of the taxpayers whose taxes Pan Am and its chosen few airlines want to raid.

UNWARRANTED CONTINUATION OF THE STATE OF EMERGENCY

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a concurrent resolution requesting the President to proclaim the termination of the national emergency declared to exist on December 16, 1950, as the result of the Korean war. It seems to me that this resolution should be adopted by this Congress before it adjourns to assure that the use of a declared condition of emergency is restricted to conditions which demand these extraordinary powers.

Throughout the 1,280 days of this administration every single day has been a day of national emergency. The administration has claimed on numerous occasions that it is responsible for peace in the Korean conflict and that it has restored the economy of the country to peaceful conditions. How then, can this same administration justify the continued use of emergency powers under the Korean declaration of emergency? Does this administration need emergency powers to carry on the ordinary responsibilities of Government? Is there a new condition existing in external or internal affairs which threatens the national emergency? Is it not an obligation of this administration to advise the people of this country as to the circumstances which justify the continued use of these extraordinary powers?

Is this Nation helping the cause of peace throughout the world by remaining in a state of emergency—a state in which we find no other member of the NATO group or any other member of the nations considered as friendly to America?

If world conditions do not justify a continuation of the state of emergency under which we now operate and if our national economy is as strong as they tell us it is, why should the condition of national emergency continue? The people of this country will refuse to believe another declaration of emergency if a crisis in world conditions should momentarily develop. They will assume "emergency" as a permanent condition in American Government.

The powers of the Executive with a declared state of national emergency permeate the entire statutory structure of the Government. Many important requirements of the law are suspended. The discretionary power of the Executive is broadened. Throughout the whole structure of our Government many important constitutional safeguards are suspended. The power to declare a national emergency is a privilege which should be exercised by the Executive with extreme restraint. He should continue these powers for the shortest possible period of time; he must carefully operate within the limitations of these powers, and he must surrender these extraordinary powers as soon as the conditions which necessitated them has passed.

If the present administration has not been able to lift the declared state of emergency during the past 1,280 days, it is extremely doubtful that it will be done before the administration goes out of office. Therefore, it is incumbent upon Congress to take immediate steps to do so by passage of this resolution.

ADMINISTRATION'S HANDLING OF SECURITY RISKS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the present administration's inability to bring about a proper clarification of "security risks" in the Federal Government and its confusion in distinguishing between a disloyal and an unfit employee should definitely be clarified.

The administration's attempt to dismiss employees because of disloyalty, unfitness, or for political reasons as a security risk, is extremely disheartening to the American people, those dedicated to their Government and those who seek a strong and effective Civil Service.

I believe the attached statement of Mr. Michael E. Markwood, president, National Federation of Federal Employees, is very pertinent to this subject:

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL E. MARKWOOD, PRESIDENT, NATIONAL FEDERATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES, BEFORE THE HOUSE POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE, CONCERNING H. R. 11841, TO PROTECT THE SECURITY OF THE UNITED STATES BY PREVENTING THE EMPLOYMENT BY THE UNITED STATES OF PERSONS FOUND TO BE DISLOYAL TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am Michael E. Markwood, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees.

The National Federation of Federal Emplioyees wishes to endorse H. R. 11841, which is designed to provide certain safeguards necessary to the security of the United States by permitting the summary suspension or dismissal of employees, or rejection of applicants, where reasonable doubts exist as to their loyalty.

Long before the Congress saw fit to provide, by statute, for this basic qualification of Federal employees, such action was strongly urged by the National Federation of Federal Employees. At successive conventions of the National Federation of Federal Employees, resolutions were adopted unanimously calling for appropriate legislative steps to insure that only loyal citizens would be employed by our Government, and to provide effective means of separating from the service persons shown by competent evidence to be disloyal.

At our most recent national convention, held in Dallas, Tex., in September of 1954, the following resolution was adopted by unanimous vote of the delegates there present:

"Whereas there has been set up in the Federal Government, by executive order, a loyalty and security program having for its purpose the protection of the United States and the protection of its employees against unwarranted and unsubstantiated charges; and

"Whereas through lack of proper enforcement or through modification, alteration or repeal, the purposes of the program may cease to be an objective of Federal personnel policies: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the National Federation of Federal Employees direct its National Executive Council to seek enactment into the basic laws governing qualifications of Federal employees, comprehensive loyalty and security standards as a protection to the Federal Government and its loyal employees."

In view of the practical effect of the Supreme Court decision on the legislation previously enacted by the Congress to deal with this problem, legislation such as that now under consideration is urgently required. We feel that H. R. 11841 provides some substantial safeguards for individual rights of the employee and, of great importance, makes a clear distinction between those who are disloyal and those who, because of various personal traits of character or habit, are properly classified as security risks. Those in the latter category, it should be pointed out, can be effectively separated through the regular Civil Service procedures, for which ample authority and machinery exist.

The confusion over the distinction between those who are disloyal and those who are security risks never has been properly clarified. Experience has shown conclusively that in the public mind the stigma which attaches to the person adjudged disloyal is often shared equally by others who have been dismissed as security risks. That is unfair, that innocent families have suffered as a result, is clear from the record.

From this confusion, too, some stemming from a variety of understandable causes and some, unfortunately, apparently deliberate, developed what became known as the Washington "numbers game," which added no stature to its practitioners and served to bring an immensely important and necessary program into a degree of public disrepute.

It is gratifying to note that the third whereas of the proposed legislation reiterates a fact well known to those who have long dealt with Federal employees, namely, that the overwhelming majority of them are and always have been unswervingly loyal to our country.

In reviewing the language of the measure, we believe that paragraph (h) of section 4 should be amended beginning on line 12, as follows:

After the word "rate," strike out all language through the word "suspended" appearing in line 16, and insert therein the wards "he would have received had his service been uninterrupted by suspension or removal," and that in line 19 the words "except the accumulation of leave" be deleted. The word "other" should be inserted on that line before the word "purposes." The revised paragraph (h) would then read as follows:

"(h) Any employee suspended without pay under any provision of this section or of section 5 of this act who is reinstated or restored to duty on the ground that the appropriate authority has made final determination that there is no reasonable doubt of the loyalty to the United States of such employee shall be paid compensation at the rate he would have received had his service been uninterrupted by suspension or removal, reduced by any amounts earned by such employee through other employment during such period, and shall, for all other purposes be deemed to have rendered services in such position during such period."

We feel that this amendment dealing with the compensation of employees reinstated or restored to duty following suspension is reasonable and proper in the circumstances.

Under "Review of Reports of Investigations," section 5, line 24, on page 9, it is suggested that the words "having responsibility for operations in the area where the employee or applicant, who is the subject of such report" be added.

Under paragraph (b) of section 5, the present language indicates that the board shall consider such evidence as may be submitted to it by the appellant in writing or at a hearing before the board. The language does not make it clear as to whether a hearing or the submission of written material is at the discretion of the board or of the employee or applicant. We recommended strongly that this discretion be placed with the employee or applicant and that the language be amended accordingly.

Under paragraph (d) (2) of this same section, on page 13, the language is as follows: "No final adverse decision of the board shall be set aside unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that such decision is arbitrary or capricious, or otherwise not in accordance with law." Although that may not actually be the case, it would appear from this language that it is the intent, to a measurable extent, to predetermine what the actions of a court may be which, of course, would be contrary to our principles of equity and justice. It is suggested, therefore, that this subparagraph be eliminated, leaving to the sole discretion of the courts the action to be taken by them on the basis of the evidence in the individual case. Similarly, we believe that the suspension of any employee should be determined by the employing agency as opposed to suspension by court, far removed from the operations for which an agency head is charged with responsibility.

Under "Rules and Regulations of the Board," section 6, line 15, we recommend elimination of the words "by legal counsel," substituting therefor "by a person or persons of his own choosing." The present language would require representation by those authorized to practice law; whereas, employees in all phases of complaints and adjudication of them can be represented, for example, by a fellow employee, by representatives of the various veterans' organizations, and, in the case of members of the National Federation of Federal Employees, by a member of a local grievance committee or by a representative of our national headquarters staff. Not all of these could qualify under the language "legal counsel" in its strict sense.

The submission of documentary evidence, as set forth in section 7 on page 15, is highly desirable and we subscribe to the principle of granting the board and its subordinate boards the right to subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses, as well as books, records, correspondence, or other documents as it may deem necessary to provide appropriate evidence on which to judge an individual.

An aspect of the whole security program which has troubled many of the most eminent leaders in the Nation has been that which affects the individual rights of accused employees such as, for example, the whole question of their right to face their accusers.

We recognize now as we have in the past that Government employment is a privilege and not a right and that the person taking Federal employment at the same time assumes very special responsibilities and indeed, as well, certain restrictions not placed on the general public. We recognize also that paramount above all else is the safety and security of the Government of the United States.

At the same time, every means should be earnestly sought to provide the fullest measure of all of our cherished and traditional American rights which is possible to do without sacrifice of our national security. We believe that the present legislation is a long step in that direction. However, we urge the inclusion of the proposed amendments which we have suggested as further clarifying steps and also that the committee give fullest consideration to the problem of individual rights which arises as a result of anonymity of accusers. Certainly, we do not believe that anything should be done which would inhibit or undermine the effectiveness of the security program; but the seriousness of the latter problem is manifest. If there is any way in which there can be a closer reconciliation of the issue, we urge that it be given the most careful and sympathetic consideration.

In conclusion, I should like to make a general observation. The effectiveness of any legislation is dependent in large measure upon the effectiveness of administration.

We believe that this is especially true of legislation such as this; and we believe further, that no persons in the Federal Government should be more carefully selected on the basis of experience, sound judgment, and judicial temperament than the review board provided under this legislation and the security officers who now are functioning in the various departments and agencies.

We are dealing here with the most critical of problems, concerned as they are on the one hand with the very life of our country and, on the other, dedicated as we all must be, in our American tradition, to respecting and maintaining the rights of the individual. It is imperative, therefore, for those who administer this program to have a full understanding of all of the complex issues involved and the capacity to fulfill their duties with wisdom, with equity, and with courage.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity afforded me to appear before the committee in connection with your consideration of this measure and I express the hope, on behalf of the National Federation of Federal Employees, that it will be reported favorably and enacted into law at the present session of the Congress.

STOP DESTRUCTION OF TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, the closing of additional textile mills not only in New England, but in the South, as the result of increased, unfair Japanese competition is an ominous sign.

It is a situation, which the Congress should promptly consider, and I hope it will be able to do so before adjournment, since it is clear that unless some action is taken to protect the American textile industry, its operations will be further impaired and will ultimately be completely destroyed.

I have previously referred to the wide gaps, wide wage differentials and the wide differences in hours, working conditions and standards that exist between the Japanese and American textile industries.

There is another factor, however, that has not been given so much emphasis in the past, and that is the fact that, under our surplus agricultural products disposition procedures, we are now selling baled surplus American cotton out of American warehouses to Japanese textile manufacturers for a price which is about 25 percent less than the price charged to American manufacturers.

Thus, we have another very substantial differential added to the virtually impossible ones previously existing of sweat shop wages and conditions of productions.

The President and his advisors have previously considered the imposition of quotas through recourse to section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, or in some other effective manner, and also, I believe, they have been also considering possible implementation of the 1948 Geneva Resolution on the imports of woolens.

In the summer of 1955, prior to the adjournment of Congress, I visited the White House, together with other Members of Congress interested in this problem, and we held a long conference with the President and his advisors. The matter was discussed at considerable length and it was indicated that it would be given further and careful consideration.

Sometime in the fall of 1955, the New England Conference of Governors and governors of southern States also requested action on these proposed quotas. Repeated assurance have been given by administration leaders that no industry would be sacrificed by the Reciprocal Trade Agreements and that the importance of taking some action to protect this American industry was fully recognized.

It is clear that the situation regarding American textiles is steadily and seriously deteriorating. In fact, so serious is the situation at present that speediest possible action is required. It must and should be Executive Department action because regular action before the Tariff Commission and political action before the Congress require too much time.

In short, we have had an abundance of interest, some promises of sympathetic consideration but absolutely no relief. To the contrary cheap cotton has been made available to the Japanese, which further and greatly augments the problem. I am again urging the President and the Executive Department to act at once to save our textile industry and hope that some affirmative results will ensue.

UNIFORM CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a very thoughtful and timely article on Military Law: Return to Drumhead Justice? by William F. Walsh of the Texas bar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. This article ably discusses the Uniform Code of Military Justice and the various controversies that have arisen concerning it. Mr. Walsh particularly protests against recent proposals for amending the code emanating from the legal divisions of the armed services and generally proposing additional discretionary power at the command level to punish service offenders.

As a member of the original committee, which drafted the Uniform Code of Military Justice, I have been watching its operation with special interest. One thing has impressed me very deeply and that is that the United States Court of Military Appeals has, on the whole, done splendid work in laying sound foundations for the legal implementation of the code. Under the leadership of its distinguished Chief Judge Robert E. Quinn, former Governor of Rhode Island, able and distinguished and formal naval legal officer during World War II, and his associates, the court has achieved stature and commanded respect.

At lower levels, there is some question as to the adequacy of the code to cope completely, realistically and justly with legal problems that arise in the service.

It is my view that in the near future the Armed Services Committee should hold additional hearings, designed to appraise and evaluate fully the impact of the code to date, and consider possible revisions that would bring this document closer to all the objectives, which its sponsors originally set forth. Mr. Walsh's able article points out some of the problems, which should be considered and I believe that there are others that could also most appropriately command the attention of Congress:

MILITARY LAW: RETURN TO DRUMHEAD JUSTICE?

(By William F. Walsh)

The Uniform Code of Military Justice, the "Bill of Rights" for America's 3 million servicemen, is under attack by top military lawyers who have asked Congress to remove some of the basic legal safeguards given military personnel by the code.

Rear Adm. Ira H. Nunn, Judge Advocate General of the Navy, has described the new measures as "proposals designed to reduce unnecessary burdens imposed upon the services by the Uniform Code and to increase the powers of officers who exercise command." The "unnecessary burdens" which Admiral Nunn would reduce include the serviceman's rights against self-incrimination, the accused's right to have a full, fair investigation of his case before trial and the right to be tried before an independent judge free from the influences of command.

The code, passed by Congress almost 6 years ago, has been the subject of bitter debate since it became effective May 31, 1951. The act made sweeping changes in military law and established the United States Court of Military Appeals, a civilian "supreme court" for military cases, to which three veterans were appointed as judges.

(Chief Judge Robert E. Quinn, former governor of Rhode Island, was a Navy legal officer during World War II; Judge George W. Latimer, former justice of the supreme court of Utah, was an Army line officer; the late Judge Paul W. Brosman, former Dean of the Tulane University law school, was an Air Force judge advocate.)

In an early opinion, the new court stated that "We believe Congress intended, insofar as reasonably possible, to place military justice on the same plane as civilian justice and to free those accused by the military from certain vices which infested the old system."

It is this philosophy which is under attack today.

Many military commanders have been restive under the code since it was enacted. The first determined public attempt to do away with the basic provisions of the law appeared, however, in the 1954 annual report to Congress from the Court of Military Appeals and the Judge Advocates General of the Armed Forces.

Last year's report highlighted deepseated differences between the military lawyers, who claim the code will not work in wartime, and the court members, who consider the new proposals unnecessarily hostile to the purposes and intent of the Uniform Code. Both sides suggested that the House and Senate Armed Services Committees hold hearings on the new measures.

The heart of the problem lies in the need for swift and sure punishment to maintain discipline in the fighting forces, balanced against justice for the men concerned. The two viewpoints are not mutually exclusive: "Good justice has never had a bad effect on discipline," in the words of Prof. James Snedeker, brigadier general, United States Marine Corps, retired, former Chief of the Military Law Division in the Office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy.

No one concerned with the problem thinks that the code, in its present form, provides all the answers. Two years ago the Court of Military Appeals and the Judge Advocates General agreed on 17 amendments which would save time and money and increase the informal disciplinary powers of commanders. The court, in last year's report, again recommended these changes.

SUBSTANTIVE REVISIONS, NOT MERE PROCEDURAL CHANGES

The armed services went further, however, and insisted on substantive revisions in the code, rather than mere procedural changes. These new proposals would affect a man accused by the military from the time he becomes a suspect to the time of his last appeal, and would materially reduce his present rights.

Congress is presently holding hearings on legislation which includes many of the desirable amendments to which the court and the Judge Advocates agreed in 1953. (S. 2133 and H. R. 6583, 84th Cong.) The proposals which the Armed Forces sought in 1954 are still important, however, since they show the real desires of those who are administering military justice today.

One of the most important changes asked by the Navy and Air Force deals with the right against self-incrimination. Under the present law, no member of the Military Establishment, regardless or rank or assignment, may question a suspect "without first informing him of the nature of the accusation and advising him that he does not have to make any statement regarding the offense of which he is accused or suspected and that any statement made by him may be used as evidence against him in a trial by court-martial."

The Navy and Air Force want this restriction to apply only to persons who serve with a "military law enforcement or military crime detection agency" or who are otherwise conducting "an official military investigation."

In civilian life there would be nothing unusual in requiring that only policemen advise suspects of their rights. The soldier or sailor, however, is often questioned by a commanding officer who can take more serious action against him than any military policeman if he fails to "cooperate." If a company commander or first sergeant may question a man, induce him to answer by hinting at the penalty for disobedience and then use his statement against him, the privilege against self-incrimination might as well be eliminated completely in the military.

The privilege against self-incrimination is not protection for the guilty alone, but also saves the innocent from revealing facts which would be damaging in a case based on circumstantial evidence. An innocent person accused by the military will find little comfort in the fact that the case against him is based on statements to his commander rather than to military police.

A second proposed amendment, to curtail the investigation required before a case can be sent to a general court-martial, was conceived by the Army and Navy. The present law provides that "No charge or specification shall be referred to a general court-martial for trial until a thorough and impartial investigation of all the matters set forth therein has been made." At this investigation, the accused has the right to counsel, the right to cross-examine the witnesses against him, and the right to call witnesses of his own.

The amendment proposed is simple: it would delete the words "thorough and impartial" and the sentence quoted above.

The only credible reason for removing these words is that the Army and Navy do not desire to give the accused a full and fair investigation of his case. That this is the actual reason is shown by a Navy suggestion regarding the identity of the officer who must perform the investigation. Under the law as it now stands, the officer who is to prosecute the case at trial cannot conduct the formal pretrial investigation. The Navy would change this so that the prosecutor could direct both the investigation and the trial, becoming both district attorney and grand jury.

The right to a thorough, impartial investigation is of vital importance to a soldier who may be stationed in remote places far from his family or from civilian lawyers and who can seldom afford to do his own investigating on an enlisted man's pay. (Of the 606 cases which the Court of Military Appeals had decided with written opinions by the end of 1954, all but 45 involved enlisted men.)

In addition, preliminary investigations in the service are often conducted by some agency, such as the Air Force Office of Special Investigations. The reports of these agencies are classified and are not normally available to the accused or his counsel; the agents themselves are not encouraged to talk to the defense about pending cases. Other military witnesses often sense that official approval is on the side of the prosecution and are afraid to help the defense.

Once formal charges are preferred, however, the case is sent to an officer who has no connection with the case. He holds hearings and calls as witnesses the persons who will testify at the trial. The accused and his counsel have a chance to discover the testimony facing them and to question the witnesses while their memories are fresh.

The effect of allowing the prosecutor to conduct the formal investigation should be considered with the fact that the prosecutor often recommends that charges be drawn in the first place and helps the accuser write the charges. Thus, under the new proposal, the accused would have to satisfy the prosecutor, whose mind is already made up, if he wishes to show his innocence before trial or wants to question some witness under oath.

The Navy, wisely anticipating that some persons might not desire to throw themselves on the prosecutor's mercy, has also suggested that the law make it possible for the accused to waive the whole investigation if he is suspected of a purely military offense such as desertion or disobedience.

A third service proposal would deprive the military judge of his independence from the court members. Until the Uniform Code became law, the "judge" was a member of the court who joined the "jury" in its closed sessions. He was not required to be a lawyer. Since he instructed the court privately about the law regarding the case, the accused had no way of knowing what the court was being told about the law. This system was the subject of long debate during the congressional hearings which preceded passage of the Uniform Code. Congress finally decided to give the military Law Officer the same powers and status he would have as a civilian judge and required that he be an attorney.

Under the code, the Law Officer instructs the court on the law during an open session and cannot advise the court members privately. The prosecution and the defense may both argue their views of the law to the Law Officer before he instructs the court. The instructions actually given are recorded by the court reporter for review on appeal. If the court members desire additional instructions, they must open the court so that the proceedings are on the record.

The Army and Navy, however, would return the Law Officer to his former status as a member of the court, where his legal mistakes could be made secretly without causing reversal on appeal.

In connection with this suggestion, Maj. Gen. Eugene M. Caffey, the Army Judge Advocate General, made the following statement:

"Experience has shown that, prior to the enactment of the present code when the Law Officer was a member of the court instead of an officer of the court, he was of greater assistance to the other members in explaining the intricacies of the legal problems involved than he is under the present system. Thus, the code has deprived the accused of a safeguard that he previously enjoyed."

General Caffey does not explain why the Law Officer today is unable to discuss the "intricacies of the legal problems involved" in open court where his words may be recorded. The truth is that hundreds of cases have been reversed under the Uniform Code because of errors in the legal instructions given to the court members.

If the military judges cannot accurately instruct the courts when they know their words will be reviewed on appeal, there is certainly no reason to believe that instructions will magically become more accurate because they are given informally in a secret session of the court. There is less reason to believe that the old procedure was a "safeguard" which was "enjoyed" by any accused.

LAW OFFICER . . . A PART-TIME ASSIGNMENT

The real problem is that the law regarding instructions is complicated, in civilian life and in the military. Civilian courts, however, have full-time judges who spend their lives perfecting their knowledge of this technical subject and who have hundreds of years of precedent to guide them. Duty as a Law Officer in the military is usually a part-time assignment and the officers concerned do not have time to become fully familiar with the law involved, particularly with only five years' experience under the code.

Nothing in the code prevents the military from making assignments as Law Officer a permanent duty, thereby creating a skilled judiciary. Not one branch of the service has yet seen fit to do so, however, and until that is done the part-time judges will continue to make mistakes.

Most citizens would probably agree that the solution is to improve the caliber of the judges, rather than to amend the law to make competent judges unnecessary.

As a member of the court martial, the Law Officer would lose his independence as a judge and again become only a legally trained member of the jury. Under the old system, the "law member", as he was called, conferred with the court members in closed sessions. He could change his rulings at any time during the trial. Although the court members could not openly overrule the law member on most issues, they could impress him with their viewpoints during a closed session.

If he later changed his ruling, the accused had no way of knowing the basis for the new decision and could only hope that some senior member of the court had not impressed the law member with rank rather than reason.

Even under the Uniform Code, the Law Officer is not a free man. Under the military system, a high-ranking officer is the "convening authority". He appoints the court members, the personnel of the prosecution and the defense, and the Law Officer. He refers individual cases to trial after his staff has reviewed them for "legal sufficiency". The Law Officer thus knows, at the time of trial, that his superiors have already approved the prosecution's case.

In a decision published last fall, an Air Force Board of Review found a case in which the Law Officer had ruled against the prosecution. The prosecutor obtained a recess and returned to the courtroom to announce that the convening authority disagreed with the ruling. The Law Officer reversed himself.

The board of review described the trial counsel's maneuver as a "* * * defiant act * * * apparently taken for the sole purpose of bolstering what had been, to that point, a losing position." Reversing the conviction, the board held "* * * that the trial counsel's solicitation and utilization of command authority could reasonably be interpreted by the law officer and all the members of the court to have ominously suspended above them the power and authority of their commander's office."

If law officers were assigned to Army, Navy and Air Force headquarters in the Pentagon, working out of convenient regional offices, they could be truly full-time judges independent of the commands in which they sit. Certainly the situation would not be improved by removing what independence the law officer may now enjoy.

Although the law officer could be more effective if independently assigned, the court members must ordinarily be chosen from within the command so that they are all available for trials when needed. The armed services have been persistent and ingenious in their efforts to control the court members. In September of 1953, a Navy court martial was made up of some members who had nothing else to do but act as professional jurors. The admiral, who was president of the court, a job comparable to that of the civil jury foreman, wrote fitness reports on these subordinates, based on his opinion of their performance on his court.

Reversing the case, the Court of Military Appeals held that, "A court member's freedom and independence of action must remain inviolate. For his actions and his motives he should be responsible only to God and his conscience."

One judge observed that "the reporting officer is so strategically positioned that he hears all, sees all, knows all, and can report on all. He is the captain who plots the course to be followed and the deviates are well known to him. A fair and just trial cannot flourish in that climate."

Another problem which the services seek to solve is the right of appeal to the Court of Military Appeals. In the opinion of the military lawyers, too many men convicted by courts-martial now ask the court to review their cases without listing specific errors in their requests. This causes delay in disposing of these cases, since the convictions do not become final until after the court denies these general requests.

ENDING THE INCONVENIENCE AND THE JUDICIAL APPEALS BOARD

The Air Force has asked Congress to end this inconvenience by establishing a three-man judicial appeals board for each branch of the service. Before asking the Court of Military Appeals to review his case, the accused would first be required to obtain a certificate of good cause shown from this new board. The accused would present his request to the appeals board and, if any one of the members agreed that his case had merit, he would be allowed to send his petition to the Court of Military Appeals.

Today, the last military review of a case is conducted before the Boards of Review in Washington, D. C. These boards, each composed of three senior legal officers, are actually a kind of appellate court. Both sides are represented by counsel and the opinions of the boards are published and distributed throughout the Armed Forces.

An interesting feature of the Air Force proposal is that it would not specifically forbid a member of the Board of Review from sitting on the new appeals board for the same cases. The accused might then be faced with the problem of convincing men who have already decided his case unfavorably that he ought to be allowed to carry his appeal higher.

The important feature of the plan, though, is that the services would completely control the right of the accused even to request that the Court of Military Appeals hear his case. Although the military lawyers have complained about the amount of work which the present procedure places on the court, the judges of the court have not protested and have described previous plans to limit appeals as undesirable.

The Court of Military Appeals makes its own rules of practice and procedure. If the judges ever decide that the situation is out of control, they can require each petitioner for grant of review to list the specific errors in issue and could refuse to accept petitions which do not do so. Such a procedure would appear more desirable than permitting the armed services to decide for themselves which cases should be aired in the highest court.

The armed services certainly have the right and duty to suggest to Congress any changes in the law which they feel necessary. The dangerous feature of the proposals made by the Judge Advocates General is their tendency to describe these amendments as economy measures or mere procedural reforms.

Maj. Gen. Reginald C. Harmon, the head Air Force lawyer, points out that "the most recent budget request needed to operate the Court (of Military Appeals) for 1 year amounted to $320,000." He predicts that the court's wartime cost would be four times the present expense if 12 million men were in uniform as in World War II. General Harmon also deplores "the added transportation costs arising from forwarding the records of trial to Washington, D. C." in wartime.

There is no doubt that military justice is expensive. Military justice is also big business—bigger than the business of the civilian Federal courts.

During 1954, there were 247,000 courts-martial of all kinds held throughout the world. A total of 18,594 cases were reviewed by boards of review in the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Coast Guard during the year and 1,829 cases were docketed by the Court of Military Appeals, less than 1 percent of the cases tried.

In comparison, 101,269 civil and criminal cases were brought in the Federal district courts during fiscal year 1954, 3,481 cases were filed in the civilian courts of appeals, and 520 petitions for writs of certiorari were docketed in the United States Supreme Court.

There is no doubt that curtailing the soldier's rights against self-incrimination, eliminating the thorough and impartial pretrial investigation, and stripping the law officer of his independence might cut the costs of operating the Court of Military Appeals, since the records which do somehow reach the court are likely to contain little to review.

Although it is hard to believe that some delay in the small percentage of cases which are appealed to the court would actually "jeopardize the success of military missions," as Admiral Nunn has predicted, it is also apparent that there are ways to keep cases from ever reaching the court in the first place.

The real question is, however, whether the possibility of a million-dollar wartime court budget, a bigger postage bill, and a few months' delay in handling less than 1 percent of the military cases are enough reason for taking from the serviceman rights given by Congress only after careful study and loud public outcry against drumhead justice during World War II.

WE MUST PREVENT IMPAIRING OUR NATIONAL BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of this session a tremendous amount of pressure is being exerted to bring about the enactment of S. 256.

S. 256 seeks to eliminate cumulative voting of shares of stock in the election of directors of national banking associations unless provided for in the articles of association.

A DANGEROUS BILL

Rarely has a bill so short in size and so brief in language had a wider effect on more people and carried with it more portent of danger.

EXISTING LEGAL PROTECTION SOUGHT TO BE DESTROYED

Since 1933 the National Banking Act has required that all national banks permit cumulative voting of stock by shareholders for the election of directors of such banks. The usefulness and the need for such right has become more evident year by year, and each year sees more State legislatures considering the enactment of a similar law. As of today, only seven States have no laws on the subject. Sixteen States have laws making cumulative voting mandatory. In 17 additional States cumulative voting is permissive.

Cumulative voting affords a minority representation on the board of directors and a voice in policymaking. It has never accomplished control. It prevents arbitrary and undisputed control of a board of directors by management or anyone else that can acquire a voting majority or control of 51 percent of the voting stock.

No one, no matter how biased, can give a single logical reason why minority stockholders are not entitled to representation on the board.

No one can deny that without cumulative voting, a minority of the stockholders can get no representation on the board, as a matter of right.

Unless this bill is defeated and existing law continued, an owner of 51 percent of the stock of a bank will elect 100 percent of the board of directors, and the owners of 49 percent of the stock will not be able to elect even 1 director.

All must admit that without representation on the board of directors there is no practical means of attacking the abuses of entrenched management.

The contention is sometimes made that since 1933 cumulative voting has not been resorted to in enough cases to continue the statutory mandate. It was not so resorted to because the mere right written into the statute was sufficient to require management to invite minority representation to the board, avoiding the necessity of a contest therefor.

This has reduced proxy contests and avoided contentious arguments at annual meetings. It must be remembered that national banks are not subject to the proxy rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Management of national banks, unlike that of other corporations, may solicit proxies from stockholders, at bank expense, in any manner it pleases, without notice to stockholders and without any supervision of any kind whatsoever of the proxy solicitation material.

The Federal Reserve Board has the right to remove directors of any national banks. It has attempted to use that power only once since 1933. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Comptroller of the Currency, by their power of recommendation, can eliminate undesirable directors.

IS THIS GOOD LEGISLATIVE PROCEDURE?

This bill was introduced in the Senate on January 10, 1955. No counterpart or similar bill was introduced in the House. A brief hearing was held on the Senate side on the morning of April 7, 1955, with six witnesses in attendance. The complete record, with the statements, questions, answers, and exhibits, consists of 29 pages. The bill was called up and passed the Senate on June 23, 1955. It was referred to the House Banking and Currency Committee on June 27, 1955.

The House committee's records, which under House Rules are available for inspection by every Member of the House, disclose that throughout 1955 and most of 1956, the chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee advised inquirers that he had no intention of scheduling a hearing on this bill. The first notice of any such hearing appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday, July 13, 1956, indicating that hearings would begin on Monday, July 16, 1956. There was no session of the House on Saturday, July 14, 1956, and few, if any, Members saw that CONGRESSIONAL RECORD until Monday, July 16, 1956, the morning scheduled for the commencement of the hearings. The written committee notices that the hearing would commence on July 16 were sent out on Friday, July 13, and were not seen by most members until the morning of July 16. One member of the committee complained that he knew nothing about the start of the hearing until 11:30 a. m. on July 16, although he had delivered a letter to the chairman about the matter on July 12, 1956.

Until July 17, 1956, the rules of the House Banking and Currency Committee provided that a quorum shall be a majority of the committee, to wit, 16 members.

At no time on the morning of July 16, 1956, were there more than 13 members present, and, during most of the morning, while witnesses were testifying, there were fewer than 7 members present.

On that morning, the witnesses were the Comptroller of the Currency and two bank officers, all supporting the bill. Most of the members were accordingly deprived of the right to ask questions of these witnesses. The Comptroller of the Currency was not invited to return for that purpose, even though the chairman was asked to make such request of him.

Neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor any representative from his office was asked to testify on the bill. If the Department submitted a report, it has never been made a part of the record.

The Comptroller of the Currency stated that the Treasury Department supports the bill. No one asked him what he meant by that. If he means himself, as a part of the Treasury Department, the words are surplusage. If he means the Secretary of the Treasury, he should have frankly added that he and the Secretary of the Treasury have consistently contended that only the Comptroller of the Currency has any jurisdiction over national banks and that the Secretary of the Treasury does not even have any right of review of the acts of the Comptroller of the Currency. We omit any reference to his behind-the-scenes influence.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was not invited to send a representative to testify. None appeared. If any report was obtained from it on this bill, it has not been made a part of the record. At least one board member is known to be opposed to this bill.

The Federal Reserve Board, which has indicated opposition to this bill, was not asked to send a representative to testify, and if any report from it has been received, it has been withheld from the record.

Examination of the committee files indicates that every witness who asked to be heard in support of the bill was given such opportunity. The same file indicates that many witnesses who asked to be heard in opposition to the bill were denied the opportunity to be heard. One representative of a very large shareholders' organization, the Federation of Women Shareholders in American Business, Inc., was denied the opportunity to be heard.

The majority report says that the Independent Bankers Association favors the bill, but no witness appeared on its behalf who could advise when, if at all, the stockholders had been polled on the subject and how many, who were not officers of banks, if any, indicated support of this bill. No statement by that association was offered for the record.

The testimony on behalf of the American Bankers Association, in support of the bill, should be discarded as worthless because it omits the above information and gives no details about any injury caused by the law.

The public hearing on July 16, 1956, lasted for less than an hour and a half. On July 16 the chairman directed an executive session at 10 o'clock on July 17, although that had been previously fixed as the time for the hearing of witnesses in opposition to the bill. Accordingly, there was less than 1 hour of public hearing on July 17. On July 18 and 19 there was 1¾ hours of public hearing, and on July 20 there was less than 40 minutes of public hearing. Beginning with the public hearings on the morning of July 17, the chairman, on his own and without authority from the committee, kept pushing witnesses to complete their statements, then limited them to 10 minutes of direct presentation, and limited the entire committee to 15 minutes for interrogation of each witness.

On July 19 the Chair announced that the committee would hear Members of Congress on the following morning at 10 o'clock, and at 11 o'clock the committee would go into executive session on the bill. Although a Member of Congress, who was also a member of the committee, was present and waiting to be called to testify at 10 o'clock, the chairman did not arrive and did not convene the hearing until 20 minutes after 10. The Congressman testifying had been authorized by 21 other Members of Congress to make statements on their behalf, indicating their opposition to the bill. At 11 o'clock on July 20, the chairman closed the public hearing, refused to permit the Member of Congress to complete his statement, and ordered the committee into executive session.

AUTHORITARIANISM AND TOTALITARIANISM ARE THE ANTITHESIS OF DEMOCRACY

The committee room was cleared and at 8 minutes after 11 o'clock, the chairman called the executive session of the committee to order and proceeded to consider the bill. At 11:45 o'clock there were pending before the committee a motion for the appointment of a subcommittee to make a complete study of the problem, a motion to substitute for that motion the pending bill, a motion to amend the substitute, a motion to limit all debate on the bill and on all amendments thereto to 5 minutes, a motion to amend that motion to limit debate on the bill and on all amendments thereto to 3 minutes, a motion that the committee vote on the bill, regardless of the pendency of the amendments, at 10 minutes to 12 o'clock. A point of order was made against the last motion, the point of order was overruled, an appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair, and on a rollcall vote his decision was sustained. A motion was then made to amend the motion that a vote be taken at 10 minutes to 12. At that point a motion to adjourn was made and a rollcall vote demanded. Thereupon a motion was made to report out the bill. By this time it was after 12 o'clock. The committee had no permission to sit while the House was in session and the House was in session. A point of order was made against the motion to report the bill. The Chair insisted he would call the roll on the motion to report out the bill. A point of order was raised to that. Without passing on the pending points of order and without taking a vote on the motion to adjourn, or any of the other pending motions, the Chair insisted on calling the roll on the motion to report the bill, which was not concluded until at least 3 minutes after 12 o'clock.

The procedure followed was contrary to the rules of the House and of the committee and did violence thereto. Members were deprived of the right to discuss the bill. They were deprived of the right to offer amendments. Even if there were any merit to this bill, it should be sent back to the committee for consideration in accordance with the rules of the House.

The same antidemocratic procedure by which this bill was sought to be foisted on the House of Representatives is a typical picture of what may be expected by despotic management if this bill became law.

The minority will be given no opportunity to be heard. The majority will drown out the voice of the minority and "railroad" it into silence.

The result may well flood the courts with the kind of stockholder-bank litigation that required statutory enactments, not to curb the stockholder-corporate litigation, but to give the minorities the information they were entitled to receive.

Today the information is provided behind closed boardroom doors in a spirit of fairness and so as to allay fears and suspicions. Deny this right by enactment of this bill and the information will be supplied by court order and in a spirit of acrimony.

DO MAJORITY STOCKHOLDERS NEED ANY PROTECTION FROM THE MINORITY STOCKHOLDERS?

Many Members are desirous of perfecting this bill so as to protect the rights of stockholders and depositors.

It is obvious from the testimony adduced before the committee that neither the Comptroller of the Currency nor the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation attempts to give stockholders or depositors that protection.

Some general statements have been made in support of this bill, to the effect that minority stockholders elected as a result of cumulative voting might be a disturbing influence, and might hurt the bank's reputation, and might destroy public confidence in the bank. Not a single instance of any such happening has been presented to the committee.

The bankers who so testified admitted, upon interrogation by members of the committee, that their banks have prospered despite cumulative voting.

In one instance, where the bank first had resorted to reducing the number of its directors in order to keep a director from being elected by cumulative voting, it subsequently invited that very director, as the representative of minority stockholders, to become a member of the board. The banker had no explanation as to why the dividends paid by the bank were the same for 2 successive years although in the second year its earnings were less than in the prior year. Nor had he any explanation as to why the amount of dividends did not change from 1 year to another when the earnings increased considerably. That was in years when the minority director had no place on the board.

Nor did he pretend that the majority of the directors were improvident when after the minority director became a member of the board, the board increased the dividend rate by 77 percent. While the banker contended that the publicity attendant upon the minority stockholders' attempts to get representation on the board had hurt the bank, he had no explanation for the fact that during all of that period, the bank's deposits and earnings were consistently increasing. He proudly admitted that the bank then was, and still is, reputed to be the best bank in the area.

The perils that the proponents of the measure sought to demonstrate to the committee are strawmen without substance and are based upon theoretical conjecture.

When one compares this committee's majority report on this bill with the statement of the Comptroller of the Currency, we wonder who wrote the report. The language is identical, including the punctuation.

Just a word about the figures in the report, which are lifted out of the Comptroller's statement. One hundred and sixty-seven shares are almost 17 percent of the total and exactly 33 shares short of 20 percent of 1,000 shares, one director is 20 percent of a board of 5. One hundred and forty-three shares are 23 shares short of 16⅔ percent of 1,000 shares and 1 director is 16⅔ percent of a directorate of 6. The same arithmetical regressive ratios prevail until we get to the last mathematical theory. Thirty-nine shares are exactly 1 share less than 4 percent of 1,000 shares, and 1 director is exactly 4 percent of 25 directors. Can a minority have less than one director on the board?

No one asked the Comptroller how few national banks have only 5, 6, or 7 directors and as few as 1,000 shares of stock. Except for the closely held one-man or family bank, there are none, and very few of the others. In any event, we are concerned here only with the bank whose stock is publicly held. The minimum capital with which the smallest national bank could have been started since 1933 is $100,000. With $1 par value stock, that means 100,000 shares, with $5 par it is 20,000 shares, and with $10 par it is 10,000 shares. At $100 par, which is unheard of, it is 1,000 shares. It has long been the policy of the Comptroller of the Currency that national bank boards be larger rather than smaller and very few, if any, have the minimum number of directors permitted by law.

No one could indicate to the committee a single instance where a director elected as a result of cumulative voting had ever even been charged with wrongdoing or indicted for a crime. Nor has anyone been able to name a single instance where a director or an officer recommended by minority stockholders or elected by minority stockholders as the result of cumulative voting, had been charged with wrongdoing or indicted for crime.

It stands admitted upon the record of this committee that not a single officer or director of a bank who has been indicted and convicted for embezzlement, larceny, forgery, or any other crime in connection with the operation of his bank, attained his position in his bank as a result of cumulative voting.

A president of the National City Bank who was indicted, but acquitted, for violation of the Banking Act was forced to resign because of that conduct. He was not the product of cumulative voting.

A former governor of the State of New Jersey, who committed suicide when his bank defalcations were exposed, was not the product of cumulative voting.

The State auditor of the State of Illinois, who just resigned because of check manipulations, had his dummy acting for him and a majority of the stockholders of a bank. That cannot be laid at the door of cumulative voting. They were forced upon the bank by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, of which the Comptroller of the Currency is a member.

No one contends that because some bank directors and officers are thieves and embezzlers and forgers, that majority stockholders should be deprived of their right to elect directors on that account. But the contention is now made that because occasionally a minority stockholder or a group of minority stockholders might elect a troublemaker as a minority member of a board of directors, all minority stockholders should be deprived of their rights.

It must be borne in mind that there has not been a single specific case pointed out at any time or at any place of the election of more than a minority of a board as a result of minority stockholders voting their shares cumulatively.

Never, but never, despite all the mathematical computations in this committee's majority report, has a majority of a board been so elected.

Instead of seeking legislation to protect themselves against a possible troublemaker, the proponents of this bill would destroy the entire system.

One method of protecting the majority against a troublemaker is regulation of the solicitation of proxies. It is high time that that was accomplished by statutory enactment.

The statute should provide that it is a crime to purchase proxies. It should also be a crime to solicit proxies by false or fraudulent representations.

The entire method of soliciting proxies should be done under supervision of one of the bank regulatory bodies or of the Securities and Exchange Commission, which has much experience with that subject matter.

The proxy solicitation on behalf of all stockholders should either be paid for by themselves or by the bank. There should not be one rule for one group and a different one for the other group.

But, most important, stockholders should not be deprived of their cumulative voting rights by the enactment of a statute which will deprive them of those rights as of the date of its enactment and with no means available to the stockholders to voice an opinion or a vote against it. That is what this bill would accomplish if enacted.

The very minimum of protection to which every bank stockholder is entitled is that the stockholders be given the choice to change their articles of association at an annual meeting to be held after the enactment of the statute, on proper notice to them, and such change should not be made effective until a substantial number of the stockholders take such action.

Almost every present day bank stockholder has acquired his stock since 1933, knowing that the law guaranteed him the right to vote his stock cumulatively.

This bill, without his consent, yes, against his will, deprives him of that very valuable right. Apart from any constitutional question involved, it is un-American, because it is unconscionable.

The argument is made in support of this bill that the law should not mandate what stockholders should do. We are told that they and they alone should make the choice. But by this bill, the same advocates deprive them of that very right. While taking it away from them, they tell the minority stockholders, "You can get that right back if, as and when you can get a majority of the stockholders to call a meeting for the purpose of considering your proposal," and, "if, at that meeting, you, the minority, can get the majority to give you the rights which are now given to you by law but which we now take from you by this bill."

One amendment sought to be offered to this bill was to continue the right of cumulative voting until any subsequent annual meeting at which, after due notice to all stockholders, they make the decision by a substantial vote to change the system of voting.

Another proposed amendment would regulate proxy solicitation. Still another would protect the bank against a bad director by setting up a procedure for his removal.

One practical effect of the enactment of this bill would be to drive into the national banking system, the State banks in those States where cumulative voting is either mandatory or permissive. It would put a premium on the State banks in 33 States leaving their State systems and going into the national system. This could be prevented by a simple amendment making State law on this subject apply to national banks.

This is a bad bill. In the language of the chairman before the bill was called up: "it is a vicious bill."

It should be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

HARMFUL TEXTILE IMPORTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include letters and newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, we have debated this afternoon a measure to alleviate the damage of tremendous floods, hurricanes, and water damage in New England and elsewhere throughout the country which were so prevalent last summer and fall. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, we should take some step to stop the tremendous flood of textiles coming into this country competing with both northern and southern textile mills.

As part of my remarks I include an editorial from the Boston American and another editorial from the Lowell Sun dealing with the terrific importation of textiles from Japan.

The editorials referred to follow:

[From the Boston American of July 21, 1956]

TIME TO LISTEN

The gentlemen in Washington—and that includes the State Department—must know that American manufacturers cannot compete with Japanese textiles.

For more than 3 years, every spokesman for the cloth-making industry has been telling them that.

And, on at least 2 significant occasions, the 6 Governors of New England made the warning official by presenting it in the form of a joint resolution.

But deafness seems to be a common affliction in the National Capital, since the repetitious complaining has accomplished about as much as a drop of water falling on the Rock of Gibraltar.

In fact, during the protest period, imports from Japan have increased by more than 700 percent, for the very good reason that Japanese manufacturers can buy American cotton cheaper than American manufacturers and then they further pare down costs by paying their employees no more than 15 cents an hour.

Tariff laws are supposed to protect the United States citizen from foreign exploitation and ruin.

But they can't be expected to accomplish much in the way of protection unless they are applied to Asiatics and Europeans hogging the American market.

LET'S SAVE WHAT IS LEFT

According to reports our New England governors have called for relief of the textile industry. Is this just another call of the wild? Or will the governors actually do something to save what is left of our once vast textile industrial empire?

Shedding tears over a sad situation rarely corrects it. Presumably, the governors have made some polite effort to help New England's textile industry, but they have not extended themselves, or else so many of our once flourishing mills would not now be empty.

The governors, according to a report from their meeting in Rhode Island, are going to urge the administration to slow down in taking action which might jeopardize important segments of the American textile industry. Particularly, the plea is directed at the Government's broad policy on the imports of Japanese textile products, which have already done so much harm.

It is consoling, perhaps, to realize that our New England governors are aware of this bad situation. Actions, however, speak louder than words, and there is no reason why they shouldn't muster their Congressmen, establish a beachhead in Washington and demand consideration for New England's surviving textile industry before Japanese competition erases the last vestiges.

Pleading for help and consideration in this distressing situation when foreign competition is knocking the props from under both industry and labor will not suffice—prior efforts along this line have produced no relief.

I also include an article by William F. Sullivan, counsel of the Northern Textile Association showing that many textile mills will go out of business if this importation does not stop.

The article referred to follows:

[From the Lowell Sun of July 18, 1956]

WARNS MORE NEW ENGLAND MILLS WILL CLOSE IF JAPANESE TEXTILE IMPORTS AREN'T STOPPED—COUNSEL FOR NORTHERN GROUP SEES MORE LIQUIDATIONS IN THE OFFING

BOSTON, July 18.—William F. Sullivan, counsel for the Northern Textile Association, says more New England mills will go out of business unless something is done to halt the large-scale import of Japanese textiles.

He said in an interview last night that Japanes textiles are coming into this country at the rate of 244 million square yards a year, an increase of 700 percent over 1953.

Sullivan said also that Japanese mills pay their employees 15 cents an hour and can buy American cotton cheaper than it can be bought in this country.

"No manufacturer in New England or elsewhere," he said, "can compete with that. It will eventually mean the liquidation of more mills, not only in New England but in the South."

In Lewiston, Maine, Denis A. Blais, area director for the Textile Workers of America Union, called on the city's merchants not to buy or sell foreign-made textiles.

I include also a statement from Mr. Seabury Stanton, spokesman for the Northeastern Textile Association.

The statement referred to follows:

[From the Lowell Sun of July 18, 1956]

ADAMS PLEDGES AID TO TEXTILE INDUSTRY

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Seabury Stanton, spokesman for the Northern Textile Association, says he has the promise of President Eisenhower's administration that it would work with industry toward solving the problem of textile imports.

Stanton met yesterday at the White House with Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams and other administration officials at Adams' invitation.

Stanton, an official of the Berkshire-Hathaway, Inc., said "Adams assured me that the administration recognizes the seriousness of the problem and intends to work with industry in an attempt to solve it as soon as possible."

CONGRESS MUST NOT ADJOURN WITHOUT PASSING VETERANS LEGISLATION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, again let me say I shall do everything within my power to prevent the adjournment of Congress before certain legislation is passed providing benefits for the veterans, the bill for increased compensation for our disabled, and the so-called pension bill for the older veterans of World War I.

During the war, Mr. Speaker, our soldiers were expendable. We must not let the veterans become expendable today.

Let me remind the House that both the House and the Senate passed a very discriminatory bill providing survivors benefits. I do not see how anybody in the White House, Army, the Navy Department, or the Marine Corps could allow Congress to adjourn, if they could help it—and I include the White House also—without trying to equalize the benefits of the other people with those who have high rank.

FACTS VERSUS POLITICAL PROMISES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress is about to adjourn. The legislative record of the 83d and 84th Congress will serve as a blueprint for the American people to determine in the coming presidential election whether the present national administration has succeeded or failed in carrying out the promises it made to the American people in 1952. There is strong evidence already that the American public will soon be bombarded with misleading political propaganda through radio, television, newspapers, magazines, and oratory.

I wish to make a brief review of the record as it relates to the fantastic promises made 4 years ago by the candidate for President and other Republican political leaders. The American public in September and October of this year must be on guard against one of the most highly financed, well-organized, and expertly conducted political propaganda presidential campaigns in the history of our Nation. The chairman of the Republican National Committee has already announced the contracting for choice television time amounting to over $2 million. This amount is very small compared with the additional millions be spent between now and November 6.

Any Member who has been a close observer of the legislative processes of the Congress and the activities of the "White House Palace Guard" toward certain legislation can readily see that the Republican campaign promises in 1952 were discarded by the big business quartet who took over the executive department in January 1953. This governmental regency is made up of Secretary of Treasury Humphrey, representing the banking interests; Secretary of Commerce Weeks, representing the manufacturing interests; Secretary of Agriculture Benson, representing the corporation farmers; and Secretary of Interior McKay, representing the power utilities.

In the following paragraphs, I will outline facts which I hope will convince the most partisan that the above is correct:

AGRICULTURE

The older folks in the Middle West discovered 20 years ago that the great depression of the early 1930's was started by reason of the lack of prosperity and buying power in the farm areas throughout the country. We learned then that when the farmer cannot buy automobiles, tractors, combines, refrigerators, and hundreds of other necessities, the factory and craft workers in the cities and towns are soon unemployed.

In 1933, when Franklin Delano Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress were given the responsibility to lift our country from the greatest depression in history, their first act was to pass legislation which would restore prosperity to the farmer. In the 1952 campaign candidate Eisenhower promised the farmers at Kasson, Minn., and Brookings, S.

Dak., that he would continue the Democratic farm parity program. He stated that he was not only for 90 percent of parity but thought it should be 100 percent in the market place. When the President appointed Ezra Taft Benson, at the request of the reactionary interests, a new Republican farm policy was started which immediately sent the American farm economy on a downward trend.

In the 20 years of Democratic administration—1933 to 1952—farm gross income rose from $2 billion a year to $31 billion, during the same period farm parity rose from 58 percent to 100 percent. During the last 6 months after 3 years of Republican policy, farm parity averaged 82 with a low of 80. A few months ago, the Democrats in Congress passed a farm bill which would have started the farmer back on the road to prosperity but the bill providing 90 percent parity, was vetoed by the President at the insistence of Secretary of Agriculture Benson. This administration has finally accepted the Democrats' soil-bank plan which Secretary Benson rejected last year as not being practical. By adopting this Democratic measure with an election in the offing, the Republican leaders hope that the farmer will forget his troubles until after the election on November 6. Nevertheless, the facts are that farm income has dropped in 3 years—1953 through 1955 inclusive—approximately $12 billion; farm mortgages have increased $1,100,000,000; and, farm bank borrowing by $1 billion; the livestock farm inventory has dropped $1½ billion. Over 600,000 small farmers have been driven from their land to join the crowded labor market in the cities by the "flexible Benson farm policy." These figures come from the Federal Bureau of the Census.

LABOR

In 1946, the Republican Party secured control of the 80th Congress and immediately proceeded to build up public opinion against the Wagner Labor Act. They passed the restrictive Taft-Hartley law which repealed or nullified the main provisions of the Wagner Act passed by the Democratic Congress and signed by Franklin Delano Roosevelt 10 years before.

Candidate Eisenhower in his 1952 speech both before the A. F. of L. and CIO national conventions stated that, if elected, he would remove the "union busting" provisions of the Taft-Hartley law. When he took office he made a good start by appointing the late Martin Durkin as Secretary of Labor. Evidently, Mr. Durkin was too active in urging the Republican Party to carry out its campaign promises to labor. Secretary Weeks and Secretary Humphrey cleverly proceeded through the White House back door to undermine Mr. Durkin and the Department of Labor. The promise which President Eisenhower made to Secretary Durkin that he would send a message to Congress recommending 19 changes in the Taft-Hartley law was revoked. When Secretary Durkin was informed that the message would not be sent to Congress, he resigned.

The present Secretary of Labor Mitchell, unfortunately is a Cabinet officer without portfolio. The Eisenhower "brain-trust" has turned all labor problems over to Secretary Weeks for solution. Not one promise that candidate Eisenhower and the Republican leaders made to organized labor in 1952 has been carried out. In fact, the National Labor Relations Board has been stacked with appointees whose former records with their big business connections have been decidedly antilabor. We know now that the President's speeches were made for nothing more than public consumption.

If the Eisenhower administration had been serious in its promises to labor, the power of the White House could certainly have persuaded a few of the 13 Republican members of the House Labor Committee to help carry out their party's promises to labor. The National Labor Relations Board with its newly appointed antilabor Republican membership has curtailed, postponed, or denied the vast majority of pending cases filed by labor unions before this semijudiciary body. Management cases are expedited and given very favorable consideration.

The prime reason for the success in so many States of the devastating and misnamed so-called right to work laws has been brought about with the aid, counsel, and prestige of the Eisenhower Cabinet.

HIGH COST OF LIVING

I hold in my hand the front page of last evening's Washington Star. It reads as follows: "Living costs suddenly hit all time high." The news item states in part:

> The Bureau of Labor Statistics disclosed today that the cost of living has reached an alltime high.

Millions of voters in October 1952 remember candidate Eisenhower being interviewed by housewives on television. He assured his interviewer that if he were elected President the cost of living would come down. We all remember ex-President Truman fighting year after year to keep the cost of living down. Since January 1953, the Executive Department has been silent and has made no effort to curb profiteering and reduce the cost of living.

TAXES

Secretary of Treasury Humphrey succeeded in forcing through the so-called rich man's tax bill which gives 73 percent of long run tax relief to corporations and only 9 percent to people with incomes under $5,000. The facts concerning this unfair tax legislation reveals that 80 percent of the American taxpayers only received 9 percent of the reductions in this Republican tax bill. When the Democratic Members of Congress fought to enact a tax bill giving an "across the board" $20 tax reduction credit to each and every taxpayer, opposition from the Executive Department defeated this legislation. Secretary Humphrey and this administration has also succeeded in increasing our national debt to an all time high and also increased interest rates on the same. The Democratic Members of Congress succeeded in blocking the bill sponsored by Postmaster General Summerfield to increase first class mail from 3 cents to 4 cents. If this bill were enacted it would be an additional tax of almost $300 million to the small bracket taxpayer.

SMALL BUSINESS

Since 1953, small business failures increased 21 percent. One of the main reasons for this is increased interest rates, tight money and refusal to process many loan applications. Since 1953, some 300,000 individuals and companies have applied to secure small business loans and of this number only 7,000 have received favorable action. This is a typical instance of an agency created under law to perform a certain task but now managed by an administration completely out of sympathy with the purpose of the law. Fearful of abolishing the Small Business Administration because of political repercussions, the Eisenhower brain trust has simply appointed people to head the program who do not believe in it. This process has been called repeal by appointment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

When social-security legislation was debated on the House floor in 1938, Republican leaders called it socialistic. Any expansion legislation since that time has been opposed by Republican leaders. Last week the White House palace guard opposed lowering the age limit for women from 65 years of age to 62, and the disabled to 50. Through a valiant fight by Democratic members the bill was enacted. In the Senate, social-security expansion won by a close vote of 47 to 45.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

The President, as a candidate in 1952 spoke in Chicago and New York City stating that the country needed 340,000 new schoolrooms. After 3½ years through Democratic efforts, we finally succeeded in debating the bill on the floor of Congress. After long debate and amendments a coalition of Southern Democrats and a majority of Republican members defeated needed Federal aid for school construction. The remarkable fact is that President Eisenhower or his palace guard did absolutely nothing to persuade party support in final passage for this much-needed legislation. This bill provided that the Federal Government would aid critical school areas to finance school construction for the next 4 years. The legislation did not provide for any Federal control over local schools whatsoever, although this type of false propaganda was used to defeat the bill.

NATURAL RESOURCES

Tidelands oil, Dixon-Yates, power, mineral, and timber giveaways are a few of the important windfalls which the Republican administration succeeded or attempted to bestow upon their political benefactors during the last 3½ years. Ex-President Truman vetoed several of these flagrant giveaways during his administration. Through the opposition of Senate Democrats, the Dixon-Yates giveaway was exposed and defeated. President Eisenhower wrote a letter when this deal was pending urging that the Government enter into the unfortunate contract. The administration through Attorney General Brownell is now defending a suit involving millions of dollars which the Dixon-Yates people are claiming as damage by reason of canceling the fraudulent contract.

The Dixon-Yates scandal will be a major campaign issue. Last week the power monopoly fought against the legislation which would permit the American public utilizing one of its last great power sites at Hells Canyon, Idaho. The Senate defeated the Hells Canyon project by a close vote. How long will the American people tolerate an administration which so wantonly disregards the rights of the American taxpayer to his God-given natural resources? Public power production in the West and at TVA was one of the main factors that contributed to winning World War II. President Truman in October 1952 in a speech in Montana dedicating Hungry Horse Dam said, and I quote:

> Take a good look at this great power development owned by the American people. If the Republicans win in November, it will be the last great public development of natural resources in a long time.

Those spoken words of President Truman were prophetic because this administration has diverted our natural resources to special privileged private interests since January 20, 1953.

MINIMUM WAGE—SLUM CLEARANCE

The Eisenhower palace guard actively opposed an adequate minimum wage but Democratic efforts finally succeeded in passing a $1 an hour wage minimum.

Slum clearance with proper public housing never has received enthusiastic support from the Eisenhower advisers. The President makes convincing speeches asking for housing and slum clearance but leaders of his party always do a good hatchet job on the legislation in committee and on the floor of Congress. No doubt the Republican leaders will repeat their vote-catching pledges on this much needed legislation in their 1956 platform.

Americans must remember that during the Roosevelt and Truman administrations the national income rose from 39 billion to approximately 300 billion. In January 1953, when we changed over to a tight money, high interest, trickle down economy, millions of working men and women in a short time felt the change in their economic status. That is probably one of the main reasons why the Democratic Party won the 1954 congressional election by the biggest margin accorded to either party in an off-year election since 1934.

President Eisenhower was the first President in this century who lost his Party's Congress in the first congressional election after taking office. The Republicans lost 9 governors in Northern States, including Maine, Pennsylvania, and New York, since big business took over the governmental saddle at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. In Indiana last November the Democratic Party increased its number of mayors from 28 to 72. This is evidence that the American voter is not misled by some newspapers and subsidized radio and television commentators, who devote columns and hours trying to sell this reactionary administration to the public.

FOREIGN POLICY

The Democratic Party under the leadership of President Truman established a foreign policy which, if properly administered and expanded, would present a solid front against the Kremlin and help curtail communism.

General Eisenhower in 1950, as the head of European defense, testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the Marshall plan, aid to Greece and Turkey, the Truman mutual security, and other programs saved Western Europe from communism. Today we have no policy in North Africa; the Formosa Straits area is ready to explode at any time, and the Middle East is a powder keg slumbering under an uneasy truce. The Truman 4-point program has been abandoned and replaced with armament agreements. The President of the United States did not know that tanks were being loaded at New York a few months ago to be shipped to Saudi Arabia. Nor did the people of the United States know that we were at the brink of war three times until the Secretary of State revealed the facts in a magazine article.

Mr. Bascom Timmons, a well-known Washington correspondent, said recently that in 40 years of covering Capitol Hill he had never found such cover-up, distortion, confusion, and censorship as that existing in Washington today. The U. S. News & World Report of March 23 stated that the Defense Department and the State Department are two separate operations on foreign problems without the proper discipline or direction from the Commander in Chief. One month ago Secretary Dulles publicly condemned neutral nations while our President had commented favorably on countries remaining neutral. Vice President Nixon, on his recent trip to the Philippines, joined Secretary Dulles in condemning neutrality, and especially India.

We must have a foreign policy that is courageous, consistent, and united. We must stop bluffing our enemies, boasting to our friends; and we must stop misleading the people at home. We must restore the prestige of America to the position it occupied before the Dulles bungling and confusion shattered world confidence in our leadership. America's free and prosperous democracy is the only hope for guiding all nations and races toward the path of world peace.

HUMANITARIANISM AND THE ATOMIC BOMB

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I arise to speak about a press statement of Lewis L. Strauss, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, on July 19, 1956, which speaks of nuclear weapons which create a minimum of widespread fallout hazard.

A distortion of fact was involved in this statement in my opinion. I am concerned over the repeated pattern of applying advertising agency techniques to alleviate the natural fears of hydrogen destruction which trouble our people and the people of the world. Huckstering is no substitute for policy as we grope for solutions to the atomic and hydrogen dilemma.

In one paragraph of Mr. Strauss' press release, he states:

> Thus the current series of tests has produced much of importance not only from a military point of view but from a humanitarian aspect.

How can anyone suggest that there are humanitarian aspects to hydrogen bombs? They are designed for destruction and contamination. They are the most inhumane device ever conceived by man.

If Mr. Strauss' motives are humanitarian I call on him to really implement President Eisenhower's Atoms for Peace plan. Only yesterday, this program suffered a defeat here in the House of Representatives when Mr. Strauss and the administration opposed a bill for the construction of reactors for the peacetime use of atomic energy.

If you can find humanitarianism in the use of weapons, and I doubt it, I call upon Mr. Strauss to support the suggestion of AEC Commissioner Thomas Murray that the United States accent the so-called small-yield weapons for use in military combat and in ground-to-air missiles for the defense of this continent. I believe these weapons are all but being ignored.

Two other statements in Mr. Strauss' press release are of great interest. I quote:

> Our tests to date have demonstrated that real progress has been made with respect to these objectives, including achievement of maximum effect in the immediate area of a target with minimum widespread fallout hazard.
> It has been confirmed that there are many factors, including operational ones, which do make it possible to localize to an extent not heretofore appreciated, the fallout effect of nuclear explosions.

Let us examine the facts: Explosions of a military nature utilizing atomic energy come from either a fissioning of heavy elements—that is, their splitting—or from the fusion of light elements—that is, their joining together.

But in any atomic weapon, fission is necessary. From every nuclear fission there is an attendant release of radioactive particles and a later radioactive fallout.

Thus for military atomic weapons, no matter how devised, there is attendant harmful radioactivity. I grant that some effects of this radioactivity can be reduced. A bomb can be detonated at a very high altitude and the immediate radioactivity and fallout can be reduced. However, such radioactivity as is released ultimately descends from the high altitudes for a postponed fallout. But of course the higher the altitude of burst the less the military effectiveness of the weapon.

Radioactivity can also be cut down by diminishing the yield of a weapon. If yield is to be reduced or military effectiveness diminished by high bursts it follows that the defense of the free world will require a greater number of weapons to accomplish our military objectives.

This year Senator ANDERSON recommended to the President that there be an increase in the production of special nuclear material for peacetime as well as weapons purposes. This suggestion was turned down by the President. I call upon the administration to tell us now if we must increase production and make more weapons to compensate for the loss of military effectiveness due to the doctoring of present devices.

No matter how much you change an atomic or hydrogen weapon there is still a great deal of radioactivity. An atom bomb or hydrogen bomb burst on a military target without dangerous radioactive fallout would be a miracle. Such a miracle has not been achieved.

Mr. Strauss' press release is designed to qualm fears. As for the American people, if a war were to occur, I am afraid that they would be struck not by Admiral Strauss' "humanitarian" bomb, unless, as a Washington Post editorial has stated, Admiral Strauss were willing to give his magic secret to the Soviet Union.

I would hope that the humanitarian expression in this press release did apply to the American people. Tomorrow, the Subcommittee of the Government Operations Committee, of which I am Chairman and which has been studying Civil Defense in the United States, will issue a report. I only hope that a few kind words are said in the administration about certain of our recommendations. For we recommend that the Federal Government initiate the only successful humanitarian approach—that is the construction of a system of shelters in which our citizens can find protection from the effect of hydrogen bombs. I believe that the time is at hand for a careful reexamination of our atomic energy and civil-defense policy. We are cutting our defense structures to the bone in dependence on hydrogen bombs. We have failed to consider and study war by other means with "small yield" weapons for battlefields rather than cities. We are ignoring the peaceful uses of atomic energy in an effort to satiate the desires of Admiral Strauss and certain utility interests. We have not told the American people the truth about civil defense and the catastrophic loss of lives which would result from a thermonuclear attack on the United States. We have ignored the need for a system of shelters for our people to repair to in the event of attack. We have brought forth no policy to meet the hydrogen dilemma.

THE PLIGHT OF AMERICA'S SMALL FARMERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS] is recognized.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons Americans are proud of their economic system and hold it up as a model throughout the world is our pattern of agriculture. We have built our agriculture around the family farm. Thus we have millions of families doing the bulk of their own work, making their own decisions, and living as first-class citizens in communities of their own choosing and their own building.

This pattern of family farming was carved out of our great frontiers almost from the beginning of the United States. The pioneers who moved our population front westward were families seeking to put their roots into the soil and establish their homes there. As a matter of national policy family farming has long been encouraged. In the Homestead Act of 1862, for example, Congress wisely decided to open the vast public lands to families with enough acreage to sustain themselves, rather than throwing the lands open without restriction to corporations and private exploitation.

Congress followed this pattern in the Reclamation Act of 1902 and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is full of references to a repetition of this pattern as the keystone of our land policy.

A stable population of families living on the land helped us to win two World Wars and, in peacetime, has helped us to share the great abundance of America's resources fairly among all of our population.

But recently we have seen signs of alarm among the family farmers of our country. Farms are becoming bigger and fewer. The Census Bureau reported last year that "there are 600,000 fewer farms in the United States in 1954 than in 1950"—a decrease of 11.1 percent.

The number of farms in 1954 was smaller than for any year since 1890 and the decrease affected every State except one and every county except 180. In West Virginia there were 81,434 farms in 1950, but only 65,583 four years later. That is a decrease of 12,851 farms, or nearly one-sixth.

For the Nation as a whole the Census Bureau reported that almost half of the decrease in the number of farms occurred in those of less than 50 acres in size and about two-thirds of the decrease occurred in farms with an annual sales volume of less than $1,200. These are signs of possible trouble among our rural families—and trouble for America—if the trend should be allowed to go too far. In some areas it has already gone too far, and in many parts of the world it was allowed to go too far centuries ago. An excellent analysis of this situation came recently from a rather surprising source, a column on March 11 by the well-known columnists, Joseph and Stewart Alsop, who write in the conservative New York Herald Tribune and in other papers across the country.

The decay of Rome—

quite certainly began when the hardy farm citizens whose valor had made Rome great ceased to be able to maintain themselves and their families by farming their small holdings. In hardly more than a generation, over great areas of Italy, the family sized farms were swept away. They made way for vast, consolidated, slave-operated, absentee-capitalist holdings which were the equivalent in those days of what we now call industrialized farms.

This same social change, whenever it has come over any great nation of the past, has invariably marked a beginning of an ending. All around might be the evidences of the most hectic prosperity, except on the little farms. But when the little farms went, it was as though the nation's healthy roots in native soil were stricken and withered; and in the end the nation was stricken, too.

The Alsop brothers, writing from the vantage point of Washington and New York City rather than from that of a farm, went on to deal with the lessons of history and to bring their analysis down to this date and this country:

The warnings of history need to be remembered, at the moment, for the rather simple reason that there would be no really grave American farm problem if it were not for the plight of the family-sized farms. Not all the big farms are prosperous, of course. But almost all of them can take care of themselves, and a great many of them are still enormously prosperous, like the industrialized rice growers recently described in this space, or the rather numerous industrialized cotton growers who can profitably produce cotton at 8 to 9 cents a pound but are now selling their cotton for 31 cents.

The people who are not prosperous are the folk on the family-sized farms. They are so unprosperous, in fact, that this Nation is virtually beginning to be divided into two nations. A single statistic tells the story. Per capita farm income has now declined to the level of $860 a year, whereas the per capita income of Americans off the farm now stands at the level of $1922. Farm folks are much less than half as well off as other folk in America.

They then warned, as we all must know, that if this condition persists, farm families will have to pull up their stakes, as the Roman farmers did, and seek better opportunities elsewhere. And they pointed out that there are plenty of signs here in America that this is happening.

They could have cited many more signs than they did. Net farm income has fallen about one-fourth in the past 3 years—from $14.9 billion a year to $10.8 billion a year.

Farm prices have fallen from an index at 267 at the beginning of 1953 to 247 in June of 1956. They hit a GOP low of 223 in December of 1955.

Farmers have been put in a gigantic squeeze by falling prices for their commodities on one side, and continuing high prices for what they have to buy in their production and in their living, on the other side. This squeeze has resulted in a drop in the parity ratio from 95 percent to 80 percent in 3 years.

Farmers are going deeper in debt in an effort to hold on to their land and their way of life.

Farm owners borrowed $2.4 billion on farm mortgage security in 1955, the largest amount since 1923, according to estimates of the Farm Credit Administration, announced June 5, 1956, by T. A. Maxwell, its Deputy Governor and Director of Land Bank Service.

The $2.4 billion estimate was 26 percent more than in 1954 and 219 percent more than the 1937–40 average.

Farmers of West Virginia have been hit by these price drops as much as any other farmers have been. From January of 1953 to June of 1956 they took the following cuts in grain crops they produce:

	Inauguration, Jan. 15, 1953	Now, June 15, 1956
Rye ..... bushel	$1.75	$1.45
Buckwheat ..... do	1.65	1.45
Corn ..... do	1.76	1.50
Oats ..... do	.95	.85
Barley ..... do	1.38	1.15

Some of our livestock commodities have been hit even harder. About 75 percent of the income of our West Virginia farmers is derived from livestock and livestock products:

	Inauguration, Jan. 15, 1953	Now, June 15, 1956
Milk ..... hundredweight	$5.60	$4.60
Milk cows ..... per head	160.00	115.00
Hogs ..... hundredweight	18.60	16.20
Beef cattle ..... do	19.70	13.30
Calves ..... do	29.10	19.00
Turkeys ..... pound	.39	.29
Chickens ..... do	.24	.20
Eggs ..... dozen	.551	.38

In spite of the fact that prices and income have declined month after month, the administration has failed to take any action. In fact its leaders have frequently preached that prices must come down further. Its leaders have also kept telling farmers that everything was getting better. The Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra Taft Benson, said a few months after he had taken office—April 7, 1953—that "our analysts anticipate that prices of farm products during the spring and summer will be steady." The parity ratio a few days later fell to 92.

In the summer of 1954—June 30, 1954—a few months after his Department statisticians reported a 4-percent drop in farm prices in 1 month, Benson said:

> It does not indicate a general weakening in the farm price structure.

Six months later the parity ratio had dropped to 86, but Benson said:

> I am convinced that for agriculture the road ahead will be smoother than the one we have been traveling.

Six months later—June 15, 1955—he said:

> I am confident we have seen the worst of the transition which agriculture goes through following every major war.

And 6 months later—January 16, 1956—he said that "a new buoyancy in the market place—and a new hope—a new vigor and zest—can be anticipated and surely it should be reflected promptly in prices and income."

The next official announcement of the parity ratio put it at 81 percent.

This is the same man who said on July 6 of his first year in office:

> I did not become Secretary of Agriculture to stand idly by while farmers suffer from high costs and falling prices.

Yet, today, July 25, 1956, the Washington Post and Times Herald headlines on its front page: "Living-Cost Index Hits Record High."

This reminds me of the two policemen who came upon a knifing victim in an alley. As one officer bent over the prostrate form, the other asked: "Is he really hurt."

"Two of the wounds are fatal," the first officer reported, "but the other one ain't so bad."

The small farmers have received even less help proportionately from this administration than have the big ones. In fact, there are many reasons to believe that this administration regards small farmers as something of a nuisance, something to be gotten rid of so that there will be more of the pie for big farmers.

Secretary Benson had no more than taken his oath of office and installed his top assistants when this attitude became public knowledge. On April 24, 1953, the Under Secretary of Agriculture, True D. Morse, told a meeting of farm editors that he felt "it would be better if the marginal farmer got out of farming and into industry." Assistant Secretary of Agriculture John H. Davis told the same meeting, according to the United Press, that "farming today can no longer be considered as a haven for those with less than average ability."

Another Assistant Secretary, Earl L. Butz, told the National Farm and Ranch Congress at Denver in March of 1955:

> Agriculture is now big business. Too many people are trying to stay in agriculture that would do better some place else. Farming takes capital and managerial capacity (the Denver Record Stockman, March 10, 1955).

Now it is true that the administration claims to be a great friend of the small or low-income farmer. In fact, the President sent Congress a special program to help these farmers early in 1955. Although there was nothing new in his program—it merely collected proposals which have been made for years and emphasized programs already in effect—his recommendations would have helped considerably if only his administration would pursue them vigorously. But the fact is that they went in the opposite direction the administration had been taking for more than 2 years.

In fact, the President put in charge of his new program Under Secretary Morse, whose attitude is less than sympathetic, if not hostile, to the problems of small farmers.

One of the recommendations was additional credit for low-income farmers, but the Administration has gone the opposite direction by at least three policies:

First. The loan funds of the Farmers' Home Administration, which are made available to small farmers only after local bankers are unable to justify loans, were slated for cuts in three successive budgets.

Second. The Administration's very first budget shows a cut of $1.8 million from the Truman budget for FHA administrative funds and its second budget shows a cut of $4.5 million, or 17 percent, from the previous appropriations for this important agency.

Third. The Department of Agriculture boosted interest rates on FHA loans by one-half of 1 percent in 1954. In addition it quietly raised the interest rates on special disaster loans from 3 to 5 percent, but soon after the press discovered this action, Congress forced the Administration to go back to the lower rate.

Small farmers need help but they have never asked for charity. They have repaid their FHA loans ahead of schedule and with interest. They have used Government programs in the past to put a foundation under their operations so that they could be first-class citizens in our rural communities. They need more of this help. Farmers whose operations are so small that they cannot earn a decent standard of living even when prices are high and growing conditions are favorable should be given the opportunity to enlarge their operations. This is why adequate credit is so essential and is also why the "tight money" policy of this Administration has hurt so many small farmers. The pattern of family farming in America must be watched over with great vigilance. It cannot be taken for granted, and it certainly cannot survive the economic wringer through which it is being wrung. It is a vital part of our democracy—economic, educational, spiritual and productive democracy.

To strengthen our family farms is to strengthen our entire Nation and by doing this we are setting an example which will help us win the victory in the battle for men's minds around the world.

NATIONAL BE KIND TO HUMANS WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] is recognized.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, we have a happy habit in the United States of commemorating an event, or honoring some person, or calling attention to a cause, or a national product, by having a day designated for that purpose. When we exhausted the days, we started on the weeks. I recall, for example, that we have recently celebrated National Irish Linen Week; National Kraut and Frankfurter Week; National Honey for Breakfast Week; National Hillbilly Homecoming Week, and Cat Week.

In fear of running out of weeks, we are starting to designate months, for example, "Clean Oil Month," or without such calendar limitations, "Better Bedding Time." In fact the appropriations subcommmittee on which I serve, is now putting up money for a Geophysical Year, and I look forward to an Interplanetary Decade.

Before we get completely away from the weeks, I want to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that May 6 to 12 was "Be Kind to Animals Week," and then to pass along to you, and the next Congress, a suggestion I received recently from two very distinguished constitutents of mine.

Both live in Riverside, the county seat of my home county. Both, as I said, are well-known citizens of the United States. I commend the suggestion to you, Mr. Speaker, and I now read the letter, in which it is made:

> The Honorable JOHN PHILLIPS,
> House of Representatives,
> Washington, D. C.
> MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN PHILLIPS: At a time when the world and our Nation is involved in many tensions, a thought for the other fellow and particularly for the Golden Rule, may help in some relaxation of these tensions.

Therefore, we, the undersigned residents of Riverside County, and of the 29th District in the State of California, having noted the solicitude expressed on occasion by the Congress of the United States and by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in declaring national weeks for special events, industries and organizations, note further that possibly through oversight, no particular observation has been made in regard to the treatment of the individual who lives in the United States by the individual who lives in the United States.

Therefore, we plead that a resolution be framed and submitted to the Congress of the United States, and recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which will fill the void for a greatly needed observance—a "National Be Kind to Humans Week."

We, especially one of the undersigned, do not deprecate the kindness and consideration which inspired a "National Be Kind to Animals Week." This one undersigned constituent feels that he can only reciprocate by observing a "National Be Kind to Humans Week." This should be a week during which all humans and animals in our country, will be called upon to give special consideration to the human individual—a dog's best friend.

We appreciate the loving thoughts which celebrate "Mothers Day" and "Fathers Day," but there is no set period during which the entire race of mankind is reminded of the Golden Rule, and to "do unto others."

A "National Be Kind to Humans Week" could serve as a reminder to all of us that kindness toward each other can help to make this a better world, and its influence might spread throughout the other weeks in the year.

We hope that you, our Representative, will join in the spirit in which this is sent, and that together, with our fellow-citizens, we can celebrate soon, a "National Be Kind to Humans Week."

Respectfully yours,

LEE DUNCAN.

RIN TIN TIN.

This letter, as you will see when I hold it up, Mr. Speaker, is written from Rancho Rin Tin Tin, Riverside, Calif., and is signed by Rin Tin Tin and by his friend and coworker, Lee Duncan.

On behalf of the Congress, I know you will want me to thank them both for the suggestion. In the final confused and nerveracking days of the session, I can think of nothing more appropriate than a suggestion that we establish a "National Be Kind to Humans Week."

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Turkey Celebrates 33d Anniversary of the Declaration of the Republic

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, when I came back from the Bandung Conference, I announced that I would address the United States Congress each time there was an anniversary of one of the 29 participating nations in the Asian-African Conference on friendly relations with the United States.

Inasmuch as the Congress will not be in session at the time of the event, I wish to take this opportunity to send greetings to the people of Turkey, President Jelal Bayar, and His Excellency Haydar Gork, Ambassador of Turkey, on the occasion of the celebration of the 33d anniversary of the declaration of the Republic, October 29, 1956.

Turkey has enjoyed uninterrupted independence since the formation of the Ottoman Empire in 1299. Republic Day stands for the Turkish people for what an independence day stands for any free nation. It is a day consecrated to celebrations in remembrance and confirmation of the principles of the Ataturk Revolution, which made the continuation of the independence of Turkey possible and on which the existence, freedom and way of life of modern Turkey is based.

Modern Turkey dates from October 29, 1923, when it formally became a republic with Mustafa Ataturk as its first president. The creation of the new republic marked the birth of the new Turkey. Under the dynamic leadership of Ataturk, a vigorous reform program was started and quick progress was registered in industrialization and modernization of the country. The major aims have been to increase agricultural, raw materials and industrial production; to encourage the investment of domestic and foreign capital and to expand Turkey's export trade to increase the income of the country and to produce goods from indigenous raw materials, thereby saving foreign exchange. Thus, Turkey has set up fine goals for the country. It is trying to turn Turkey from the backward country that it was three decades ago into a modern state equipped to exploit its rich resources so that it can both pay its way in the world and afford a steadily rising standard of living. A great deal has been done in this direction. Turkey's revolution has not been merely a change in government; it has been moving forward the calendar from the ox-cart age to the machine age.

Turkey has been held up as a shining example of how to make a peaceful transition from autocracy to democracy. Justifiably proud of its enormous progress in recent years, Turkey continues to work and plan for even greater economic development in the future. And to assume a climate where peaceful progress can flourish, it fulfills an invaluable role as one of the strongest and most determined partners in the free world's defense force.

In a notoriously troubled region, Turkey is looked upon as a solid bastion against Communist expansion, prepared both to defend its frontiers and to persuade its neighbors to guard their own. This stanch nation, which has made phenomenal strides in its relatively short history as a modern republic, has no delusions about the Communists and their aggressive intentions. "We Turks are proud of our freedom and we are ready to die for our freedom." So reads a sign at the last Turkish station in the foothills of the Caucasus facing the Soviet border—a simple declaration that is amply supported by Turkey's actions as a member of the free world's united defense forces.

Construction of Hells Canyon Dam

OF
HON. ESTES KEFAUVER
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a brief statement by me in connection with the vote on Senate bill 1333, to authorize the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Hells Canyon Dam on the Snake River between Idaho and Oregon, and for related purposes.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR KEFAUVER

The Hells Canyon bill has been killed and the blood is on the hands of the Republican Party and its leader, the President.

This is one time when White House lobbying and pressure was so forcefully used in a feverish attempt to defeat a bill that there is no doubt where the responsibility lies.

Two articles side by side on the front page of yesterday's New York Times show as clearly as anything just what is wrong with the present administration.

The headline of one article said, "White House Bids Senate Bar Dam at Hells Canyon—It Exerts Intensive Pressure To Reject Federal Power Bill."

The headline on the adjoining article read, "President Hears Prospects for His Program Are Slim."

Many Members on this side of the aisle have complained, and rightly, about the lack of Presidential leadership in this administration. If the prospects of the President's program are slim, responsibility must be borne by the White House itself. The kind of leadership which would get a program moving has not been exerted.

Yet in the instance of the bill providing a Federal high dam at Hells Canyon, all at once we see feverish activity on the part of the White House to defeat it. It is a remarkable thing that when what is at stake is a giveaway and a tremendously costly favor to a private power monopoly, this administration exerts every pressure known to it.

In this connection I call Senators' attention to an editorial in yesterday's Washington Post. It is a brief editorial and goes straight to the point. I quote it:

"The administration reportedly is using its influence to prevent any waivering Republican Senators from voting for the Hells Canyon bill when it comes up this week. Completely apart from the merits of this measure, why is it that the administration, which failed so dismally to prevail on the school construction bill and which has had great difficulty in getting its idea on foreign aid accepted, seems to be able to muster its strongest artillery for the essentially negative purpose of stopping legislation?"

I am glad that these newspapers are letting the people of the Nation know at last the true character of this administration.

Away All Boats—A Tribute to the Motion Picture Industry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WARREN G. MAGNUSON
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statment in tribute to the motion picture industry and a picture concerning the United States Navy, entitled "Away All Boats," which is a saga of amphibious warfare in the South Pacific in World War II.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAGNUSON—TRIBUTE TO MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY AND AWAY ALL BOATS

It is good that Americans are reminded from time to time of the great personal sacrifices which have been made by individuals throughout our country's history—sacrifices which have helped to establish and insure the freedoms we enjoy. We do not want to take for granted these contributions to our way of life.

The motion-picture industry of the United States has been notably helpful as an agency of reminder. Through the medium of the screen, in theaters over the land, film producers and exhibitors have frequently brought to our better understanding and appreciation what some of these tremendous sacrifices and patriotic efforts have been.

This type of cooperation is especially important now in view of the imperative need for more men to join the United States Navy. Pictures like Away All Boats, a saga of amphibious warfare in the South Pacific in World War II, should do much to bolster naval recruiting nationwide.

This new motion picture, currently being released, will be seen in Washington. I hope that every one of our citizens has the opportunity to see it. It is certainly one of the most realistic and spectacular film stories ever photographed. In addition, it should be an inspiration to young and old.

The picture was produced with the cooperation of the Department of Defense and the Navy, and reflects credit on our Armed Forces.

Rear Adm. E. B. Taylor, Chief of Information, of the United States Navy, has this to say of the picture: "Away All Boats, one of the great stories of World War II, is not only highly entertaining, but inspirational to a degree which places it among the finest motion pictures about the services."

Carl Sandburg, who might be called "Dean" among contemporary American writers, has this to say about Away All Boats: (It) * * * "is one of the best sea stories ever done, giving wonderful personality to a ship that has rare and strange adventures, bringing into fine focus the vivid human character of the ship."

The motion-picture industry is to be commended for its magnificent accomplishments in portraying stories of heroism and courage as they are reflected in momentous epochs of our Nation's growth and development. Away All Boats is such an achievement. I want to congratulate Universal-International, the film studio which made it. I want to pay special tribute to the producer, Howard Christie; president of Universal-International, Milton Raekhil; and to the director of the picture, Joseph Pevney; and particularly to the fine cast of players of Away All Boats, headed by Jeff Chandler, George Nader, Julie Adams, and Lex Barker.

Nor do I want to overlook the author of the best seller, from which the screen play was taken—Kenneth M. Dodson. Mr. Dodson's book has been transferred to the screen with dynamic grandeur. He should be as proud of the outcome as Americans should be thrilled to see the film version of Away All Boats.

The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico Fourth Anniversary

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEO W. O'BRIEN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Insular Affairs of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I wish to bring to the attention of the House Members that today the people of Puerto Rico are celebrating the fourth anniversary of the inauguration of their Commonwealth.

Exactly 4 years ago, that the Commonwealth came into being. Fifty-eight years ago, on this date, the Armed Forces of the United States landed in Puerto Rico. The message of freedom our troops carried to the Puerto Rican people came to full fruition on the 25th of July of 1952. Thus Puerto Ricans became a self-governing, free people, constituted by themselves into a sovereign body politic, associated with the United States in accordance with the terms of a compact which the Congress had offered them and which they freely accepted.

The relationships now existing between the people of Puerto Rico and the people of the United States are firmly established, because they have for their foundation the basic concept of freedom—of free determination. That this was the desire of the people of Puerto Rico can well be pointed to as one of the outstanding examples of how the principles upon which our institutions are based, when properly nurtured to a people, no matter what their previous political allegiances might have been, develop and fructify in any climate.

For since the founding of Puerto Rico by Juan Ponce de Leon in 1508, to 1898, when Puerto Rico was separated from its allegiance to the Spanish Crown, they had lived under monarchical institutions. They had attained a certain development but they had developed, also, a quest for freedom, which they considered could be attained only within the democratic institutions which had become the creed of the New World. Puerto Rico felt that it belonged in the New World not only geographically but politically and spiritually.

Being a small island with very difficult problems, lacking natural resources and having a very dense population, they have not sought to navigate by themselves over the troubled waters of international life, and their association to the United States for the 54 years previous to the creation of the Commonwealth, had developed in them a profound sense of solidarity with the people of the mainland. Since 1917 they were invested with United States citizenship. Thus, they proposed to Congress a new type of political unit within our system. The Congress in turn offered them the terms under which it could be accomplished. They accepted the terms and the Commonwealth was thereby born.

We should rejoice that the Commonwealth has been a success. We should take pride in the accomplishments of the people of Puerto Rico which must be viewed as being also our own accomplishments.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the membership to the plan for campaign financing initiated by the Democratic Party of Lancaster County, Pa., under the chairmanship of Dr. David R. Eaby.

This plan, called "Dues for Democracy," is one method for obtaining the funds necessary for political campaigns in times when the costs are continually rising. It obviates the obligations that may arise from the acceptance of single large contributions.

Five envelopes, with a covering letter, are sent out to large numbers of people. The people are asked to keep the envelopes carefully at hand, and at the first of each month to enclose a single dollar bill in one of the envelopes and mail it back to the Democratic Party when the regular monthly bills are being paid.

In this manner a total contribution of $5 is made to good political activity in a relatively painless fashion.

The success of the early returns from this plan indicates that it might well be duplicated elsewhere. The Democrats of Lancaster County are to be congratulated on their plan for financing political activity in the best democratic spirit.

Iran Celebrates the Birthday of the Shah

OF
HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, when I came back from the Bandung Conference, I announced that I would address the United States Congress each time there was an anniversary of one of the 29 participating nations in the Asian-African Conference on friendly relations with the United States.

Congress will not be in session when Iran celebrates the birthday anniversary of the Shah on October 26, 1956, hence, I wish to take this opportunity to send greetings to His Imperial Majesty Mohammed Reza Shah Pahlavi Shah-In-Shah in honor of this event.

Iran, usually known in Europe as Persia, has many thousands of years of recorded history, and museums of great cities the world over hold many relics that bear witness to her glorious past. Since early times, Iran has been both victor and vanquished, but it has always succeeded in maintaining its culture, traditions, and customs. In addition, it has also greatly influenced the invaders with its own high civilization.

Iran has made noteworthy contributions to world culture. Iranian artists and master craftsmen have produced superior examples of paintings, carpets, brocades, mosaics, ceramics, to mention only a few areas of achievement. Persian literature and philosophy has throughout the centuries enriched the minds of great writers and thinkers the world over.

In the past two decades Iran has been making steady progress in its economic affairs. During this period, substantial advances have been made in modernization and public works throughout the country. The government is aware of the towering economic problems confronting the nation and is exerting great effort toward seeking methods of improving all sectors of the Iranian economy. In its program of economic development Iran is placing major emphasis on agriculture, industry, development of mineral resources, expanding commercial activities, increasing exports, with the objective of raising the standard of living of the people.

Another major factor in the improvement of the country's economy has been the cooperation extended through the United Nations and the United States technical assistance programs which have been operating in Iran.

Spokesmen for Iran sum up her hopes and aspirations thusly:

As the basis for the progress of the nation has been laid, Iran looks toward the future with optimism. Iran seeks only peace and friendship with the rest of the world and the opportunity to provide a greater measure of well-being for all its inhabitants.

No more laudable policy could serve as the guide for any nation.

Live Musical Programs of the National Broadcasting Co.

OF
HON. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER
OF OREGON
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement on the live musical programs of the National Broadcasting Co.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR NEUBERGER

On Monday morning, July 30, 1956, the National Broadcasting Co. will initiate a new daily radio network program which will present the Nation's outstanding popular orchestras in 2 hours of "live" musical entertainment. This program, which will be titled the "NBC Bandstand," will be broadcast through the facilities of the National Broadcasting Co., and its affiliated stations and will reach virtually every home in the Nation.

This program deserves our attention I think, not only because of the magnitude of its conception, but because it is "live"—that is to say, the music is transmitted directly to listeners at the very instant it is played by the musicians. Moreover, the Nation's foremost bandleaders will be in personal touch with the listeners during the show. Such a presentation, in this age of recorded sound, should serve to stimulate and heighten interest in the popular music which is so much a part of our heritage.

The National Broadcasting Co.'s inauguration of NBC Bandstand and the consequent return of the "live" band to the radio network after years of transcriptions and recordings is particularly noteworthy because of the sensational interest it has created among the leaders in the world of music. NBC Bandstand has the enthusiastic support and backing of the American Federation of Musicians, James E. Petrillo, president; the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers; Broadcast Music, Inc.; as well as leading music publishers and musicians everywhere.

This is true Americana. Popular music has been woven into the fabric of life in this country ever since the days of the American Revolution, when the fifes and the drums of the Continental Army struck up the tune of Yankee Doodle. Down through history, we have always found songs to celebrate our victories, mourn our losses and mark the stages of our growth across the continent. Songs like Tenting Tonight, Over There, Home on the Range—all these and many more call up memories of the Nation's past.

In the same way, popular music has served to strengthen and preserve our distinctive regional cultures. The chanties that were sung by our seafaring men can still be heard today, and so can the immortal melodies of Stephen Foster, the songs of the prairies and the ballads of the mountains. Only in recent years, have we begun to appreciate the value of this vast body of music and now we see our musical scholars laboring to collect and preserve such songs lest they be lost forever.

Serious students and critics of popular music seldom give it much attention until it has ceased to be popular. So it is that today we read learned critiques of the same jazz music that was at the height of its popularity 30 or 40 years ago. It has taken about the same length of time for jazz to reach beyond the United States and make itself known in other countries. Today jazz can be heard everywhere outside the Iron Curtain and it has made us millions of friends.

In recognition of the vitality of popular music as a part of our history and culture, I consider the NBC Bandstand an important new landmark in American entertainment.

Col. George W. Combs

OF
HON. SAMUEL N. FRIEDEL OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. FRIEDEL. Mr. Speaker, in Washington, the news capital of the world, it is not easy for one reporter to win distinctions that cause him to stand out among his fellows. But such a reporter is Col. George W. Combs. As an example of the esteem in which he is held by his friendly competitors, he has been elected treasurer of the National Press Club 14 times, establishing a record in the 48-year history of journalism's largest professional organization. This distinction is illuminated by the fact that he has never sought the office; he has been drafted each year for the past 14.

On Freedom of Press Day last year, the Press Club unveiled its first official flag at ceremonies here. Casting about for a fitting speaker, one who symbolized the things for which the day and emblem stood, the newsmen selected Colonel Combs.

He spoke briefly, but his talk was a stirring affirmation of the constitutional right of the people to have the news reported accurately, fairly and fearlessly. His admonition to the press to preserve and protect that right might well be a text for today's schools of journalism, yet they came out of nearly half a century of practice, the fruit of a good newspaperman's life.

I had long been told of the legend of Colonel Combs and had been a faithful reader of his stories, and his column "Maryland in Congress," which always kept Maryland citizens abreast of all legislation of interest to our State. Following my election to Congress, it was my privilege to learn firsthand of his devotion to his work, and the way in which he regularly visited the Members of the Maryland delegation to discuss their activities on a personal basis.

It was with real regret that I learned of the Colonel's decision to retire. He will be greatly missed.

Under his guidance several of the newer recruits of the Washington Bureau of the Sun have learned the intricacies of covering Capitol Hill. The Colonel can retire with the confidence that these reporters will perpetuate the great traditions that George Combs established.

Commonwealth of Puerto Rico

OF
HON. HENRY M. JACKSON
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, today is the fourth anniversary of the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement concerning this achievement.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR JACKSON
COMMONWEALTH OF PUERTO RICO

My responsibilities as chairman of the Subcommittee on Insular Affairs of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs must of necessity keep my attention focused on the development of the off-shore areas within the political jurisdiction of the United States, whatever their present political status.

Today, I am happy to call attention to one of those areas whose present political status represents clear proof that our constitutional system will always offer the right solution to whatever problems of a political nature may arise under our flag. This is illustrated in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Fifty-eight years ago, to this day, the military forces of the United States landed in Puerto Rico as an incident in the Spanish-American War. The Spanish-American War was a war of liberation: Three years after the Treaty of Paris was signed, Cuba became an independent republic. In 1946, the Philippines became an independent republic. In 1952, Puerto Rico became a Commonwealth, voluntarily associated to the United States. The Congress in each instance has done for the peoples of these islands or groups of islands exactly what their people wished and had struggled for within the framework of the Spanish monarchy from which they were separated under the terms of the Treaty of Paris of 1899.

Before the Commonwealth, Puerto Rico was termed a possession of the United States. The people, gradually, under successive acts of Congress, assumed more and more responsibility in the conduct of their own affairs. Since 1900, Puerto Rico and the United States have lived in economic union. In 1917, the citizens of Puerto Rico were vested with United States citizenship. This created a fundamental link between the islanders and the mainlanders. In 1950, the Congress, recognizing the full political maturity attained by the people of Puerto Rico, offered them a compact embodied in Public Law 600, 81st Congress. Under the compact, the people of Puerto Rico were to adopt their own constitution. The relationships to exist between the new body politic and the United States were embodied in what is known as the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act.

Overwhelmingly the people of Puerto Rico accepted the terms of compact and within its framework created their Commonwealth. Congress ratified the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. The Commonwealth is now a fait accompli. It has been for 4 years. Today the people of Puerto Rico celebrate the fourth anniversary of their Commonwealth. I think we must congratulate them for their achievement. I think we should be proud of their achievements. The people of Puerto Rico have now as much control over their own political life as the people of any State of the Union. With few exceptions, the laws of the United States apply in Puerto Rico equally as if Puerto Rico were a member State of the Union.

The Commonwealth is indeed unique in our political system. The Spanish language lacking one word which would be the exact equivalent of Commonwealth, the Puerto Ricans call themselves an "Estado Libre Asociado". Retranslated into English this would mean a "Free Associated State". This is indeed a true description of their status. They have not been admitted into the Union, but they are associated to the Union, in a manner compatible with its Federal nature. And thus, in spite of distance, in spite of dissimilar historical origins and cultures, a firm bond of common loyalties and allegiances between the people of Puerto Rico and the people of the United States has been established and consecrated. Thus we practice what we preach in advocating freedom for all peoples. I believe it fitting to bring these facts to the attention of the Senate. I believe that the fact that Puerto Rico has so uneventfully attained the political status of its people's wishes, that they are enjoying freedom in security in association with the United States, cannot but help cement the sentiments of solidarity and cooperation so necessary for the entire Western Hemisphere in its determination to maintain these lands, presented to mankind by the genius of Columbus, as the bulwark of freedom, democracy, and peace, lands hallowed by free peoples who base their political principles in the unswerving respect for the dignity of man.

Iraq Celebrates 24th Anniversary of Independence

OF
HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, when I came back from the Bandung Conference, I announced that I would address the United States Congress each time there was an anniversary of independence of one of the 29 participating nations in the Asian-African Conference on friendly relations with the United States.

Congress will not be in session when Iraq celebrates her 24th anniversary of independence on October 3, 1956, hence, I wish to take this opportunity today to salute the people of Iraq, His Majesty King Faisal I, and His Excellency Moussa Al-Shabandar, Ambassador of Iraq, in honor of this occasion.

The day Iraq was admitted to the League of Nations as a full-fledged and sovereign member, October 3, 1932, marked the beginning of her era of independence. The Iraqis political background before that momentous event tells the familiar story of imperialism and colonialism. In the words of Mr. Adnan Pachachi, Secretary of the Embassy of Iraq:

Prior to the first World War Iraq was an integral part of the Ottoman Empire. As a result of the war and the disintegration of that Empire Iraq was placed under British mandate in accordance with article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations. The Iraqis who had hoped to gain independence after the overthrow of Ottoman rule were naturally disappointed with the arrangement and revolted in 1920. As a result of that revolt the British Government * * * agreed to the establishment of an national government with a wide measure of local autonomy. However, through negotiations lasting 9 years, Iraq, under the wise guidance of His Majesty King Faisal I, was able to terminate the mandate and gain for it full independence. In 1930 a treaty of friendship and alliance was concluded by which the British Government recognized the independence and sovereignty of Iraq and undertook to sponsor its application for membership in the League of Nations. When the Assembly of the League unanimously approved the admission of Iraq on October 3, 1932, Iraq became a fully independent and sovereign nation.

Since independence, the people of Iraq have continually devoted considerable efforts in the complex area of economic development with a view toward bettering conditions and raising living standards. In this connection, a generous portion of the Nation's revenues has been earmarked for economic improvement, new irrigation canals and ditches have been built; thousands of pumps have been installed along the riverbanks to supply water to the adjacent lowland. However, much remains to be done and other long term projects are planned which will eventually raise the level of living of the people.

The Great Circle Route to the Orient

OF
HON. CARL HINSHAW
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, on March 29, 1955, the California delegation, comprising 30 Members of the Congress, instructed a subcommittee to draw up its statement of position of the California delegation concerning its great interest in the Great Circle Route case. Following is the complete statement:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1955.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: No doubt you have examined the Pacific from a global viewpoint and are well aware of the fact that a great circle embraces in one hemisphere the entire Pacific Ocean and Antarctica, and in the remaining hemisphere lies most of the land mass of the world. On that great circle are Singapore, Taipei, Tokyo, Dutch Harbor, San Francisco and Los Angeles, Lima and Buenos Aires. The shortest route from Panama to Manila skirts the Bering Sea. It is to great circles that we must look for our air commerce routes, and that particular great circle connects our Pacific port cities with those of the Orient and Latin America.

That is why some days ago the Members of Congress representing the State of California met and unanimously agreed that we should present to you our considered judgment that the sound economic development of our State requires that the restrictions on Pan American World Airways' trans-Pacific route be not reimposed so that it may operate between our Pacific ports and the Orient over the great circle route.

We in California believe that with the great new long-range aircraft, we should have an opportunity to fly directly on the great circle route to the Orient and not be obliged, as we now are, to travel a needless and time-consuming extra 1,238 miles over the central Pacific. This is not only an unnecessary imposition upon people in California, but constitutes a heavy burden upon the taxpayers of the Nation when they are required to pay for the subsidy needed when passengers and mail are carried over the longer central Pacific route.

We are concerned with any further delay that would be incurred by a needless continuance of the restrictions which in their last temporary certificates, now up for review, prevented Pan American from operating a service between Tokyo, Seattle, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, and on to Latin America. Such an operation would provide a service over the direct route from Japan to the United States, connecting in California with established American-flag service to Latin America. The Canadians are now operating a competing route from the Orient over the Great Circle to Vancouver and on to Latin America. Routes connecting the Orient with Latin America over the Great Circle are important world trade routes with all of the economic, political, and military considerations which are involved. We in California feel strongly that we should have a competitive American-flag service.

In your letter to Acting Chairman Gurney of the Civil Aeronautics Board of February 1, 1955, you said, "I desire to hold in abeyance my decision concerning the use of the Great Circle route by Pan American pending further study and later report on the economic and technical feasibility and the military and foreign policy implications of nonstop service between the west coast and the Orient."

In view of the wide interest of California in this matter and the broad national interest considerations which are involved, the California congressional delegation met and authorized the undersigned subcommittee respectfully to urge that you reach a decision which will permit Pan American to fly the entire Great Circle above described, which she has long been prepared to do. Obviously, fair play dictates that the permission extend for the same 7-year period which you recently fixed in renewing Northwest's Pacific certificate.

Respectfully yours,
CARL HINSHAW,
Chairman, the California Delegation.
CECIL KING,
JOHN SHELLEY,
WILLIAM MAILLIARD,
CHARLES TEAGUE,
Subcommittee Members.

Mr. Speaker, I am now in receipt of a telegram from Mr. A. O. Beckman, president, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, Calif., supporting the view of the California delegation, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., July 24, 1956.

Hon. CARL HINSHAW,
House Office Building:

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce recently actively participated in Civil Aeronautics Board Docket No. 5031, known as the reopened Transpacific Certificate Renewal case. The proceeding was reopened by the Civil Aeronautics Board at the direction of the President of the United States to determine the single issue of whether Pan American should be authorized to use the great circle route to the Orient. Pan American inaugurated air service across the Pacific to the Orient from California Gateways in 1935 and has provided service since that time. However, Pan American was and has been denied the right to use the Great Circle route to the Orient even though it is more than 1,000 miles shorter to Tokyo via that route. Present route restrictions require Pan American's Tokyo service from California to stop at a mid-Pacific island en route. These mandatory circuitous routings have caused many passengers who would logically be routed through California Gateways to choose other more direct routes. Carriers not serving California Gateways advertise this fact and thereby attract additional traffic away from California Gateways.

The California businessman is already at a considerable disadvantage with his competitors for the Japanese and Chinese markets because of great distances involved. Certification of Pan American to serve Tokyo via the great circle route will considerably offset these handicaps. In another docket No. 7725 presently before the Civil Aeronautics Board, Northwest Airlines, who are presently certificated to fly the Great Circle route to the Orient from Seattle have applied for permanent authority to serve this route. We take no position as to whether this application should be granted or denied. However, we feel that if a decision is now to be made as to the permanency of the certificate for service to Tokyo from the west coast, there is no question but that Pan American who has been serving the west coast to Orient traffic for over 21 years should be given at least equal consideration along with Northwest. Failure to grant Pan American the Great Circle route on a certificate of duration equal to that granted to any other carrier would be manifestly unjust to Pan American and the west coast Gateways it serves. The matter of subsidy is not involved in either proceeding, since both Pan American and Northwest Airlines have been free of subsidy in the Pacific operations during and since 1955. However, if present routing restrictions are not lifted and if Pan American is not permitted to fly the shorter great circle route from California Gateways via Portland and Seattle to the Orient it does not appear that they will be able to remain in a competitive position and stay off subsidy. Tokyo at present occupies the dominant position as the gateway to the Orient. Over 50 percent of the total United States-Orient traffic is generated by Japan. More than 70 percent of this traffic moves through California Gateways. It logically follows that any consideration for permanent certification should be given to the primary Gateways and the carrier handling the traffic, in this instance Pan American. The Civil Aeronautics Board should give favorable consideration toward the permanent certification of this much needed more expeditious air route between California Gateways and the Orient which has already been established as convenient and necessary to the public.

A. O. BECKMAN,
President, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

A Disgrace to the United States

OF

HON. L. MENDEL RIVERS

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, we hear so much about discrimination against the colored people in the South. Always somebody claims that this kind of information hurts our cause in Europe. Further, they point to the fact that there is joy in Russia when information like this is broadcast to the world.

I wonder what these same people have to say when they read in the public press of the raping of a white girl by seven Negro soldiers in Bamberg, Germany. This kind of information does bring joy in Russia. Incidents of this kind, more than anything else, have caused us to lose more good will in Germany and the remainder of Europe, than all the incidents in America combined.

Mr. Speaker, to point out this fact I enclose newspaper articles on this subject. To be certain that the incident I have in mind cannot be questioned I have verified the newspaper reports, and I enclose herewith a letter from the Department of the Army, confirmed by the Department of State, to the effect that the raping of the white girl in Bamberg, Germany, was committed by seven Negro soldiers, whose names are included in the letter from the representative of the Department of the Army, dated July 23, 1956.

This incident has not appeared in any Washington paper, so far as I have been able to ascertain. I wonder why?

SEVEN SOLDIERS HELD IN ASSAULT CASE AT GERMAN CITY

BAMBERG, GERMANY, July 14.—United States Army commanders here promised today to do all they can to improve German-American relations, despite a wave of local German anger at GI's.

The Bamberg City Council Thursday demanded the withdrawal of American troops stationed here after the alleged criminal assault of a 15-year-old girl by seven American Negro soldiers.

The soldiers, all members of the United States 85th Infantry Regiment which came here last November from Fort Riley, Kans., have been arrested on formal assault charges.

GERMANS ANGRY AFTER SEVEN GI'S RAPE SCHOOLGIRL, 15

BAMBERG, GERMANY, July 13.—United States Army commanders moved quickly today to patch up strained relations with local authorities after the Bamberg City Council last night called for withdrawal of American troops from this Bavarian city.

The unprecedented demand was sparked by the alleged raping of a 15-year-old schoolgirl by seven American soldiers. Formal charges against the 7 were filed yesterday, less than 72 hours after the alleged assaults occurred.

United States 10th Infantry Division commander, Maj. Gen. Barksdale Hamlett, came here today to make a personal investigation of the case. He met Bamberg Mayor Luitpold Weegmann to inform him of the Army's action in the case.

The Bamberg City Council also decided last night to limit official German-American relations here to the "minimum necessary" and ordered American soldiers barred from the biggest outdoor swimming pool because they were "causing a public nuisance."

Army officials seemed taken aback by the city council resolution. It was the most vehement protest in a barrage of criticism by local authorities and the West German press against what the Germans claim is an increase in Allied—and in particular American—indignities. The United States Army has denied there is any upward trend in the number of incidents involving GI's, but added that it is "not standing on statistics."

[From the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier of July 17, 1956]

DISGRACE TO UNITED STATES

People of Bamberg, Germany, are incensed at the gang-raping of a 15-year-old girl by seven American soldiers. It is not difficult for us to sympathize with the fury of those townspeople.

Through insistent questioning the News and Courier has learned from the Associated Press that the seven United States soldiers are Negroes. The continued stationing of an army of occupation 11 years after the end of a war is irritating enough to a proud people. (The South bore Reconstruction the same length of time.) The assignment of Negro troops to an all white country is an additional affront. When the troops—of any race or color—behave like criminals, our country is degraded.

As to supplying Communist propaganda—a charge often hurled at Southerners who defend segregation—what couldn't the Communists do with the Bamberg story?

JULY 18, 1956.

Lt. Gen. WALTER L. WEIBLE,
Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Department of the Army, Washington, D. C.:

Advise me today if seven United States soldiers of the United States Army accused of raping 15-year-old girl in Bamberg, Germany, were white or colored.

L. MENDEL RIVERS,
Member of Congress.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., July 23, 1956.

Hon. L. MENDEL RIVERS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RIVERS: In further reply to your telephonic inquiry of July 20 regarding the incident in Bamberg, Germany, involving seven American soldiers, I am able to furnish the following information.

On July 9, 1956, in the vicinity of Armeestrasse, Bamberg, a German National, Erika Loos, born: October 1, 1940, allegedly was assaulted and raped by seven American soldiers. The soldiers accosted her while she was walking in a wooded area near Armeestrasse in company of a German national, Wilfried Pillukat, age 23 years.

The following soldiers are involved in this case: Pfc. Edward L. Brown, RA12472599, age, 18 years; Pfc. James E. Wilson, Jr., RA13529546, age, 18 years; Pvt. Raymond L. Kasey, RA13518257, age, 18 years; Clifton Franks, RA17428325, age, 20 years; Pvt. James Gordon, RA53193867, age, 23 years; Melton S. Carter, RA13347072, age 24 years; and Pfc. Fred R. Chandler, RA17440356, age, 21 years. All of these soldiers are assigned to Company H, 85th Infantry Regiment, APO 139, and, as you were previously advised, all soldiers involved in the incident were Negroid.

Preliminary investigation indicates that one soldier did not actively participate in the crime, but was present throughout the time the offense was committed. Another soldier attempted rape but did not accomplish the act. On July 11, 1956, all soldiers were charged with violation of article 120 (rape), Manual for Courts-Martial, 1951. All soldiers are now confined in the provisional guardhouse, Nuremberg subarea, APO 696, pending completion of a full investigation and probable trial by general court-martial.

I trust that this information will be of assistance to you.

Sincerely,

LEWIS F. SHULL,
Lieutenant Colonel, GS; Deputy Chief, Liaison Division.

A Fishy Shipping Bill

OF
HON. HERBERT C. BONNER
OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial and letter:

[From the Washington Post and Times Herald of July 24, 1956]

A FISHY SHIPPING BILL

Senators who watch the public purse ought to guard against a last-minute effort to slip through a new giveaway in the form of a shipping trade-in bill. This bill purports to encourage coastwise shipping operators to trade in old vessels to the Government at world market prices so as to promote the construction of new tankers. In the process it would confer a wholly unwarranted windfall on some operators. It would commit the Government, for example, to buy some 35 tankers from the Pan-Atlantic Steamship Corp. at $1,600,000 each even though the company purchased these self-same tankers from the Government 9 years ago for approximately $960,000 apiece.

Surely it is not necessary to permit artificial enhancement of this sort in order to encourage new ship construction. This is precisely the problem that dogged the Government after World War II and led to some messy scandals. World market values can hardly be a valid criterion for ships acquired from the Government at low prices, in this instance Pan-Atlantic, after using the depreciation tankers for nearly 9 years, would end by getting back nearly twice what it paid for them. Other shipping operators, some of them enjoying operating subsidies, would benefit in similar fashion. Such brazen invitations to raids on the Treasury tend to discredit worthwhile efforts to modernize the merchant marine.

The House passed the Bonner bill on the unanimous calendar after a slippery maneuver that brought the measure up when few members were on the floor. Courageous opposition led by Representative ZELENKO previously had prevented approval. In the upper House Senator WILLIAMS has fought the bill vigorously, and he ought to be joined by others who see the bad precedent it would set. Obviously the bill would be a wonderful bargain for the shipping companies, but for the taxpayers it would be no bargain at all.

UNITED STATES
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON
MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES,
Washington D. C., July 24, 1956.

Mr. ROBERT H. ESTABROOK,
Editorial Page Editor,
The Washington Post,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ESTABROOK: I have read with interest the editorial appearing in the Washington Post this morning, A Fishy Shipping Bill.

I never inject myself in the editorial policy of the papers, yet I do think papers should be careful in the slanting of their editorials, and in the correctness of the facts on which they are based. Evidently the writer of this editorial did not take occasion to read the bill itself, the report, or the hearings.

The fact of the matter is that over the past 18 months of this Congress the Merchant Marine Committee has held many days of hearings, examining every phase of merchant shipping, in an effort to find ways and means of getting new ideas and new life into water transportation. The inability of domestic shipping to revive or even survive with traditional methods of cargo handling and traditional ships was painfully evident from all of the testimony. The Pan-Atlantic Steamship Corp. is one of the first existing operators to develop a workable proposal. In fact, in my 16 years as a member of the Merchant Marine Committee of the House of Representatives, this company is one of the few that has advanced a new idea in coastwise waterborne commerce.

The bill would authorize the charter of war-built T–2 tankers from the Reserve Fleet under 5-year firm charters at a rate based on the current going rate of charter hire for charters of that duration. The charter period would begin with the delivery to the charterer of each pair of tankers by the Government. The charterer would be obliged to build on each tanker, at his own expense, a new superdeck, costing approximately $200,000 each, in order to fit the vessel to carry trailer bodies full of dry cargo. The deck installation would have to be in accordance with plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of Commerce and by the Secretary of the Navy. At the expiration of the charter and the return of the converted tanker, in class, to the reserve fleet, the superdeck would remain on the vessel and be the property of the Government. The idea of fitting superdecks on tankers was employed with tremendous success in World War II, to permit the carriage of fully assembled aircraft and other vital military supplies overseas to the war zones. The Navy strongly endorsed the proposed type of conversion, and testified that in such case the tankers would be more valuable at the expiration of the charter period than they are at the present time.

In addition, at the time of receiving delivery of each pair of tankers under charter, two C–2 dry-cargo vessels would be traded in to the Government for an allowance of credit to be applied against the cost of construction of one completely modern, high-speed, 32,000-ton combination cargo-tanker ship of not less than 18 knots speed. The superdeck, speed, and size of the new combination ships to be built were strongly endorsed by the Department of Defense. The program for delivery to the operator of the chartered tankers in pairs and the trade-in to the Government of the dry-cargo vessels in pairs would run concurrently. Thus, any default by the operator in carrying out his obligations to proceed with the desirable new construction would mean forfeiture of the valuable trade-in vessels.

The bill provides an allowance for the value of the traded-in C–2 dry cargo vessels of an amount equal to whatever the world market value might be on the day of trade-in, to be applied directly to the building of the new vessels. The payment would be made directly by the Government to the shipyard.

In the event of enactment of the legislation, Pan-Atlantic's program contemplates charter of 20 Government-owned tankers, the trade-in of 20 12- to 14-year-old C–2 type dry cargo vessels, and the construction of 10 new cargo-tank ship vessels.

In order to achieve its purposes, the bill provides that the entire program must be started within 2 years from date of enactment. The authority of the bill is available to any operator who can meet its conditions.

I might call to your attention that the C-type vessels, of which the C–2's are one class, were the best and most modern dry-cargo vessels built in the World War II program. It was testified that the acquisition by the Government of these vessels would up-grade the Reserve Fleet, and that they are far too valuable for national emergency reserve purposes to be permitted to be sold foreign.

When this proposal was made I directed the committee staff, along with the attorney for Pan-Atlantic, to collaborate with the Maritime Administration in drawing up a bill to be submitted to the committee, which bill I introduced. The Maritime Administration objected to the fixed charter and the fixed allowance for the traded-in dry-cargo vessels. The committee felt that the charter rate for this length of time was fair. Under present law, the Department of Commerce has authority to allow the foreign value for traded-in vessels, which price was therefore fixed in this bill as being fair to the operator if the Government denies him the right to dispose of his property to his best financial advantage.

Now, with respect to the procedure in the House, this bill was placed on the Consent Calendar. It was objected to. I announced that I would go to the Rules Committee for a rule, which I did the afternoon after the Consent Calendar was called. Later the Rules Committee called us for a hearing on the application for a rule. We were before the committee 2 days. The bill, as usual, remained on the Consent Calendar. I was called out of town because of the death of a very close friend. When I returned to the House, the Consent Calendar was being called, and this bill had been called and passed, without objection, before I reached the floor. Had I been present, I would have brought to the attention of the House that a rule had been requested, but I would not have objected to the bill, because I have utmost confidence and faith in its fairness and its constructive purposes.

Finally, I wish to call to your attention that there is no provision in the bill whatsoever which would, as your editorial reads, "commit the Government, for example, to buy some 35 tankers from the Pan-Atlantic Steamship Corp. at $1,600,000 each."

A copy of the bill and report are enclosed.

With assurance of my high esteem.

Sincerely yours,

HERBERT C. BONNER,
Member of Congress, Chairman.

Cambodia Celebrates Its Third Anniversary of Independence November 9, 1956

OF
HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, when I came back from the Bandung Conference, I announced that I would address the United States Congress each time there was an anniversary of one of the 29 participating nations in the Asian-African Conference.

Because the House of Representatives will not be in session at the time of the event, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the people of Cambodia, His Excellency Khim Tit, Premier of Cambodia, and His Excellency Nong Kimny, Ambassador of Cambodia on the occasion of the celebration of the third anniversary of independence of Cambodia, November 9, 1956.

On November 9, 1953, Cambodia achieved real and complete independence. That was the date when the French Government turned over to His Majesty Norodom Sihanouk, former king of Cambodia, effective command of the National Army and full military power throughout the kingdom. At the same time it granted the Royal Cambodian Government full political, economic, financial, diplomatic, and judicial powers as well as control of the police.

At the end of World War II. King Sihanouk succeeded in getting France to renounce its protectorate over Cambodia. On January 7, 1946, a modus vivendi was signed giving Cambodia a certain measure of autonomy. Three years later a new agreement was signed on November 8, 1949, which recognized Cambodia as an independent state associated with France in the French Union. This independence was nonetheless too theoretical, since much of the power and many services were still in French hands.

During the same period King Sihanouk set in motion the transformation of the absolute monarchy into a constitutional monarchy and the creation of a unicameral legislature elected by universal adult male suffrage. A constitution was promulgated on May 6, 1947.

In June 1952, anxious to give his people and his country real freedom, the King decided to take the powers of government into his own hands and to engage in an all-out campaign for full independence. The open defiance of the French by King Norodom echoed far beyond the confines of Cambodia.

The main theme for the campaign, later called the Crusade for Independence, was that to be able to ask the Cambodian people to fight the Communist menace, it was necessary to grant them complete liberty, to give them courage and a reason for fighting. The people would have no incentive to sacrifice and die, only to see their country still dominated by a foreign power.

In the words of His Excellency Nong Kimny, Ambassador of Cambodia:

His Majesty then initiated negotiations with France. These talks were long and difficult. The King himself traveled to the United States, Japan and Thailand in an attempt to draw world attention to the indomitable will for liberty which the Cambodian people were displaying. This liberty was a primary condition for uniting the nation to defend itself against Communism.

At the end of almost 2 years of constant effort, on November 9, 1953, Cambodia obtained full and true independence. It was this independence that permitted King Norodom Sihanouk to unite his people under the banner of the battle for independence and against the menace of Communist invasion. It gave them the will to defend their liberty and the determination to repulse an overt Communist attack in June 1954. It gave them the courage and incentive, in international diplomacy, to negotiate on equal footing with the Communist powers concerning the armistice agreement of Geneva (July 21, 1954).

Only a year before energetic King Sihanouk succeeded in achieving complete freedom from the yoke of colonialism for his kingdom. He was not prepared, therefore, to see the newly won independence bargained away at Geneva. It was a David and Goliath scene as Cambodia stood its ground. At Geneva the Cambodian delegation was the only one to obtain advantageous concessions for its country.

Only by granting full independence to the Asiatic peoples can the Communists be deprived of the contention that they are liberating those peoples from colonial rule. Full sovereignty for all people is the only way to rally them at this hour to the cause of the West and to persuade them that it is in their own interests to fight to the death against the Communists.

As Cambodia approaches a new year of national life it is my hope that she will continue to maintain her independence and I sincerely wish for her peace and prosperity.

Cumberland University, Famed Tennessee Law School, Continues To Serve the Nation

OF
HON. JOE L. EVINS
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I ask unanimous consent to include the reproduction of an article written by Mr. Hugh Walker which appeared in the July 22, 1956 edition of the Nashville Tennessean magazine concerning Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tenn., in the district which I have the honor to represent.

Cumberland University for more than 100 years has produced outstanding leaders in this Nation. Many of these leaders have served in Congress and several are serving at the present time. Friends and former students of this great institution will be pleased to learn that while the celebrated law school at Cumberland University will continue to function in its traditional manner, the literary department of the school will be reopened in the fall semester.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to further request that there be reproduced in connection with this article, so that the articles appear jointly, another article which appeared on March 28, 1949, outlining the first century of progress of Cumberland University.

The articles follow:

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY

(By Hugh Walker)

Like painted clocks and watches everywhere, the clock in the tower of Memorial Hall at Cumberland University says its 18 minutes past 8.

Some say those painted faces mark that tragic moment in history, back in 1865, when Abraham Lincoln died. Others contend it is the time of day when the hands are in balance on the dial, and best display the name of the watchmaker.

Be that as it may, the people of Lebanon tell you the big clock tells the wrong time of day.

They are sure that it's just before the dawn at Cumberland.

In September, they're going to reopen the "lit school," more formally known as the school of arts and sciences.

There is a feeling of happy anticipation in Lebanon now that the historic old school "on the city's western border" will again open her doors, offering a liberal arts education to boys and girls of middle Tennessee.

"Folks here in Lebanon have always been proud of their university," Allison Humphreys, Jr., a Cumberland graduate whose law career has carried him to assistant attorney general of Tennessee, said last week. "They are proud of the culture it created, the scholars it graduated, the growl of the big red Bulldog on the football field."

Now, through a happy marriage of town and gown, the people of Lebanon and Cumberland's administrators are shaping a future for the school they believe will be bright.

Only through the continued operation of the university law school has Cumberland retained unbroken her link with the past. During the 5 years that the School of Arts and Sciences has been closed, the law school has never missed a class. Attendance has been small—but regular.

Now the university (it once had many schools) will reopen with the freshman class of a 2-year college, offering courses in secretarial science, English, languages, physical education, mathematics and science, biology, chemistry, music, voice, and religion.

Thirty students have already signed for the freshman class—and school officials are hoping for a round hundred. Scholarships given by Lebanon firms, clubs, and individuals are expected to swell the total.

Out on the campus, during the hot summer days, there is a growing sense of expectancy, of a long-worked-for event about to happen.

The catalog is printed. The classrooms with their tall windows and old-fashioned desks, are painted and clean. The grass is freshly cut.

Equipment in the new cafeteria is gleaming and ready for use. In the library long rows of carefully dusted books await the student who would "explore the frontiers of man's achievement."

The new president, the dean, the business manager, the registrar, members of the faculty—all are working with an eye on the calendar. They have geared their efforts to be ready for the great day when the bell rings, the doors swing open—and the new students come buzzing down the hall.

For Dr. Charles Havens, Cumberland's boyish 33-year-old, brown-eyed president, the battle is nearly won. As Lebanon's chosen "commanding general" in the campaign to revive the institution, he is in a good position to judge.

"Cumberland will open," says Havens, "and move forward, a step at the time."

The people in Lebanon don't doubt it. They believe every word of it. And they have said so with hard cash. "Havens is the man for the job," said a young doctor. "If it can be done, he will do it."

"Havens is just the man we were looking for," said a Lebanon druggist. "The people want the university to operate, and he will make it go."

A young educator remarked: "A college will be worth more to Lebanon than a new factory."

It is easy to see that the attachment between Havens and the community is mutual. The young educator, puffing his pipe and singing and whistling as he works, has brought a great reserve of brain and muscle to Cumberland. People appreciate his spirit and drive—in the best tradition of the historic Cumberland Bulldog.

"This is a democratic and cosmopolitan community." Havens said. "There are many people here who are truly educated. They don't care how much money you've got, or what kind of car you drive. If you're working, they're for you."

Havens came to Cumberland from Martin Junior College at Pulaski, Tenn. He received his A.B. degree from Centre college in Kentucky and his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees at Vanderbilt university.

Upon assuming the presidency early last year, Havens was faced with the immediate task of moving the law school from Memorial hall to its historic quarters at Caruthers hall, on West Main street, two blocks from the main campus.

The move required money, and there was none for the purpose. Havens went to the alumni for help. The old grads came through.

More than 21,000 law books were transported in handmade crates to the "law barn," as it is affectionately called by the students. A secondhand truck was secured and president, professors, and students pitched in to make the move in 35 truckloads.

Havens knows exactly what he is working for.

"We are going to have a liberal arts college," he said. "We are tied to no sect, church, or denomination. We have no thought control and no 'party line' of any kind, and we never will have.

"Our school will be founded on the principles of Christianity, democracy, and freedom.

"We are not going to try to imitate the big universities. An intercollegiate athletic program, at this time, would be an overextension of our ability. We will encourage intramural athletics and physical education, and when we grow big enough we'll see about taking on others our size.

"I believe that a successful school must have good teachers, good meals, clean classrooms, and clean toilets. We will have them."

Havens beams with pride as he ushers his visitors into the refurbished and historic Caruthers Hall, built in 1877 and named for Judge Robert L. Caruthers, founder of the university. In spotless rows the 21,000 books are arranged in perfect order, including the latest books and documents in the legal field. He is proud of the fact that the university, out of its slender resources, is spending $5,000 a year to keep the law library up to date.

The school of arts and sciences has been closed since 1951. In that year the Southern Baptist Convention, which had operated the university since 1947, returned the school to its original board of trustees, purchased the Ward-Belmont college property, and moved to Nashville to establish and operate Belmont Baptist College.

The law school, with Judge Sam B. Gilreath in charge as acting president of the university, never did close, but temporarily moved its operations to Memorial Hall.

Cumberland has had a long and proud history. The school was organized in 1842, the main building being located on College Street, Lebanon, about a mile from the present campus. Judge Caruthers was president of the first board of trustees.

Cumberland was originally a Cumberland Presbyterian Church school. In 1906, following a merger of the churches, it became affiliated with the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. The university since 1951 has not been affiliated with any church body.

More than 8,000 lawyers received their degrees from the school of law. The most famous was Cordell Hull, of Carthage, Secretary of State under Franklin D. Roosevelt during World War II. The office building of the law school faculty is named for Hull, and a lounge in the building displays an oil painting of the distinguished statesman.

Many Members of Congress, Supreme Court Judges (State and Federal), 9 United States Senators and 9 State governors were graduated from Cumberland.

Ex-Govs. James V. Allred, of Texas, and Fuller Warren, of Florida, received their law degrees at Cumberland, as did Judge A. B. Neil, chief justice of the supreme court of Tennessee, and the present Governor of Florida, Leroy Collins. Many prominent members of the Nashville bar and a good portion of the Tennessee State Legislature are Cumberland graduates, and Gov. Frank Clement was a student there.

At various times during its long history the university has operated a school of theology, a preparatory school, a medical department (in Memphis), a school of music, a business college, and the Cumberland annex, the former Lebanon College for Young Ladies.

In 1863, during the War Between the States, the main building of the university was burned to ashes.

Goodspeed's History of Tennessee relates that the building was set afire by a Confederate soldier, a former Cumberland student, who became incensed at Federal occupation of the university campus.

"Endowment, buildings, and real estate were swept away," wrote Dr. W. P. Bone in his History of Cumberland University. "All that the school had left were its debts and its good name. But the institution still lived in the hearts of men."

It was at this time that the legend of the phoenix became a part of Cumberland's history. Dr. W. E. Ward, an alumnus of the college of arts and founder of Ward Seminary, Nashville, visited the ruins of the burned buildings.

On the one column still standing Ward wrote the word "Resurgam" (I will arise), and later the motto "E cineribus resurgo" (I arise from the ashes) appeared on the university seal.

The phoenix, ancient and legendary Egyptian bird of immortality, is pictured on the seal, rising from the fire of its own cremation with a great flutter of golden wings.

Cumberland yearbook is called "The Phoenix," and the spirit of "rising from the ashes" has helped the school through many a crisis.

But students at Cumberland, and professors, too, have enjoyed their lighter moments on the gently sloping, shady campus.

In the fall of 1934 Judge Albert Williams of Nashville, then a member of the law school faculty, addressed the entire student body during the weekly "assembly" at Caruthers hall, at the start of the school year.

"Cumberland has produced many great men," said the judge proudly. "Her graduates serve in the Congress of the United States. Some of our boys have become great lawyers and judges, great teachers and preachers." Then he looked the students straight in the eye.

"And some of our boys," he continued, "are in State penitentiaries. What will you do, and what will you be, when you leave Cumberland?"

Cumberland had fine athletic teams, and in the old days her red-shirted Bulldogs held their own against such teams as Sewanee, Vanderbilt and Georgia Tech.

It was against this last-named team, however, that the doughty Bulldogs came to grief in a manner never equalled anywhere in the United States, before nor since.

In 1916, just prior to World War I, its athletic program impaired by growing demands of the military, Cumberland had no football team. It did, however, have a contract to go to Atlanta and play Georgia Tech, for which the Bulldog team was to receive the then-considerable sum of $400.

As the date for the game approached, an enterprising law student named George Allen conceived the idea of "making up" a team on the spot, traveling to Atlanta by rail and engaging the redoubtable Yellow Jackets according to schedule.

The young promoter found plenty of "takers" and everything worked out as planned—except that Tech won the game 222 to 0. The Yellow Jacket backs just ran until they were exhaused, charging up and down the field.

Cumberland's greatest gain of the day was a two-yard loss.

The story is told by the old grads that a Bulldog back, having received the pass from center, dropped the ball, and it bounced in the direction of a teammate.

As the charging Yellow Jackets bore down, the fumbler yelled, "Pick it up! Pick it up!"

"Pick it up yourself," said the other back. "You fumbled it!."

Now a golfing companion of President Eisenhower, Allen was also a friend of President Truman and President Roosevelt. He is author of the book, Presidents Who Have Known Me.

Surviving members of the two teams who played in the 1916 game are planning a reunion this fall in Atlanta.

In modern times the university had its best football team in 1934, when the team won a never-to-be-forgotten 14 to 0 victory over Sewanee. The team's captain, quarterback Lindsey Donnell, led the Nation that year in number of yards gained from scrimmage.

Back in 1842 the citizens of Lebanon put up $10,000 in cash to bring Cumberland to the town, and from that day to this it has been the people of the community, with the loyal help of the alumni, who have kept the school going. Practically all the $10,000 came from the original board of trustees, which included Jordan Stokes, Sr., Robert L. Caruthers, and Josiah S. McClain, the first white child born in Wilson County.

In 1895, when Memorial Hall was completed, it was announced that $20,000 was still due the contractors. The greatest part of the money previously used, Dr. Bone writes, had been raised in Lebanon, and Lebanon had been apparently drained dry. It was simply a question of getting $20,000 more from people who thought they had already done their utmost.

Judge E. E. Beard, the school treasurer, said "We can raise the money, and we will." He made a stirring appeal, the people of Lebanon dug deeper, and the money was raised.

It was in a similar situation, in the spring of 1954, that the people of Lebanon contributed $56,000 toward the opening of the university this fall.

Druggist Homer Shannon explained the bond of affection between "town and gown" in Lebanon: "Lebanon people love the school. Many of them went to school there. They have put their money into it because they want it to live, and it will."

Lebanon banker Roy Cripps said: "In Cumberland Lebanon has a valuable cultural heritage, passed on to us by great men of another generation. We are not going to let it die."

Athens Clay Pullias, president of David Lipscomb College, is a graduate of both the law and literary schools at Cumberland, and a member of the board of trustees.

"Cumberland University has achieved a tremendous place for itself in the unique history of American education," Pullias said. "I am confident that as the school population doubles in the next 15 years the school will develop another generation of outstanding public servants, in the rare image of Cumberland men and women of the past."

In Nashville Edward Potter, Jr., president of the Commerce Union Bank and chairman of Cumberland's board, said:

"I am not an alumnus of Cumberland, but I came from Watertown and Smithville, and I have known and admired the school's history and tradition for a long time.

"I like the kind of men that Cumberland turns out. As long as it lives, and as long as I live, I am going to support the school."

Recently, Dr. Lacy Laban Rice, former president and chancellor of the university, was in the Cumberland observatory repairing and adjusting the fine telescope he gave the school several years ago.

Working for love and not for money, Dr. Rice labored from dawn to dark at his task. He first joined the Cumberland faculty in 1894. He is 86 years old.

Lebanon people close to Cumberland agree that one man, more than any other, has kept Cumberland's charter and name in Lebanon, and had never lacked for determination and faith in the fight to reopen the Lit School. He is William D. Baird, once a football and baseball star at Cumberland, now mayor of Lebanon.

Over in Caruthers hall President Havens has put small plaques on the walls. They say that the paint was given by one Lebanon firm, the paper and plaster by another, the venetian blinds by still another. The electric drinking fountain, the portable aluminum ladder, the librarian's desk and chair—all are gifts of people who love Cumberland.

Havens' "buck a month" club, organized among graduates of the law school, brings in a small but steady trickle of dollars from men who want the old school to survive.

Rubbing his chin and thinking of the people who are helping him, Havens said thoughtfully: "They don't come any better."

And because of that, he believes, old Cumberland will open her doors this fall, and resume her rightful place in the many-towered Camelot of American education.

And once again the great bird will rise from the ashes, with a mighty fluttering of wings.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY, FAMED TENNESSEE LAW SCHOOL AND HISTORIC CHRISTIAN EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION, ENTERS SECOND CENTURY OF PROGRESS

(Remarks of Hon. JOE L. EVINS, of Tennessee, in the House of Representatives, Monday, March 28, 1949)

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, Cumberland University, located at Lebanon, Wilson County, within the Fifth District of Tennessee, recently rounded out its first hundred years of service as a great southern educational institution.

On the occasion of this great and famed old university entering upon its second century of progress, I desire to commend the record of service and achievement of this historic school in Tennessee, and to add my own tribute to the rich tradition of accomplishment which has characterized the long existence of Cumberland University both as an academic and literary institution and as a school of law.

The tributes and felicitations to Cumberland University have been many and deserved. Some of the tributes have taken a material form and constitute an expression of confidence in the future of the institution. Other tributes have been in words of appreciation for the great work and great contributions of this Tennessee institution. These expressions emphasize the role of importance in Southern education that has ever been the part of Cumberland University.

Cumberland has produced many outstanding leaders for our country. From its halls have passed young men and women who have taken their places in the fields of Christian education, the legal profession, and other phases of public service, and in that highest calling—good citizenship.

Cumberland University counts among its distinguished alumni, a Secretary of State; 2 Justices of the United States Supreme Court; 16 United States Senators, one, the distinguished Senator from Idaho, the Honorable Bert H. Miller, being now a Member of the United States Senate.

In this body, Mr. Speaker, many sons of Cumberland have served with distinction. I am pleased to note, Mr. Speaker, that more than a hundred Members of the House of Representatives of the United States have been educated at Cumberland University. Of that number, 12 may be counted today as Members of this present body.

These distinguished alumni include our colleagues the Honorable Thomas G. Abernethy, Mississippi Fourth District; Hon. Antonio M. Fernandez, New Mexico at Large; Hon. Oren Harris, Arkansas Seventh District; Hon. Wright Patman, Texas First District; Hon. Omar Burleson, Texas 17th District; Hon. Frank L. Chelf, Kentucky Fourth District; Hon. Morgan M. Moulder, Missouri Second District; Hon. Anthony F. Tauriello, New York 43d District; and five members of the delegation from the State of Tennessee, including the dean of the Tennessee delegation and national president of Cumberland University Alumni Association, Hon. JERE COOPER, Ninth District; also Representative ALBERT GORE of the Fourth, and TOM MURRAY of the Eighth District of Tennessee. As the Representative of the Fifth District, in which Cumberland University is situated at Lebanon, it was also my own great privilege to have attended this great school in Tennessee.

The continuing progress in education at Cumberland University has been noteworthy in every respect and its citations for advancement and continuing excellence have been numerous. It was of interest to the alumni as well as the countless friends of Cumberland when the American Bar Association added its own accolade of deserved praise with official scholastic recognition of the excellent attainments of Cumberland's School of Law. This recognition was richly merited.

As a tribute to this institution, I should like to quote briefly from G. Frank Burns, writing in the Lebanon (Tenn.) Democrat:

"The real gift of the Cumberland University School of Law, looking back over the century * * * is not its graduates who have won fame and renown but rather the spirit of faith in the lasting tenets of democracy, passed on, like an unfailing torch * * * to five generations of young men and women."

The worth of this fine old school lies in its achievement of fine men and women, humble and great. Its external growth from a one-room institution of learning a century ago to its present plant of fine buildings is but the material evidence of its surging and progressive spirit.

Recently, the president of Cumberland University, Dr. Edwin S. Preston, visited Washington and called upon President Truman and invited him to visit Cumberland University in Tennessee. There was also a meeting of Cumberland University alumni in the Washington area on the occasion of Dr. Preston's visit in the Capital at which some 70 alumni of the university gathered to hear an address by Dr. Preston and a report on plans for the second century program at Cumberland University.

In this connection I desire to include in the RECORD a portion of a transcription which was presented at this meeting and entitled "The Romance of Cumberland University"—a great and inspiring story written by Col. Dixon Merritt, of Tennessee.

I request that this be included in the RECORD because of the general interest in the progress of this famed law school in the heart of Tennessee and because of the best wishes which countless friends extend to Cumberland as it begins its second century of progress.

The story is as follows:

"THE ROMANCE OF CUMBERLAND—THE STORY OF A CHRISTIAN INSTITUTION

"That May morning of 1842 was a great day for a university to be born and the name by which it was christened—Cumberland—was already a great name not alone in history and geography but even then in education. The place, too, was great. Lebanon, the city of cedars, the city of settled and seasoned culture, the city where Sam Houston had practiced law—Sam Houston, Governor of Tennessee, the "Raven" of the Cherokees of Oklahoma, the hero of Texas independence. Three of Lebanon's citizens—a governor, a Congressman, and a Supreme Court Justice were members of Cumberland University's first board of trustees appointed in that good national year of 1842.

"Eighteen forty-two—how long ago was that? The gulf is hardly to be spanned by a mere measure of years. Stephen Collins Foster was publishing his first song and furnishing a musical setting for the Old South. Missouri and Arkansas were America's farthermost west. John Tyler in the Presidency was muddling the Whig Party's greatest opportunity, and Clay and Webster were maneuvering, each striving to be the one to supplant him, and Hayes and others were maneuvering to lead the Democratic Party back to mastery.

"But best-laid plans of mice and men—no one of the four were to succeed though Clay won the Whig nomination. In the cool of the shade of the Hermitage, 18 miles west of Lebanon, sat Andrew Jackson, worn out with 8 years in the Presidency, with a long life of unparalleled turmoil. He sat and planned—planned deeper and better than the recognized leaders of either party. It was his protege, James K. Polk, who was to lead the Democrats back to power to crush the mighty Clay in his final bid for the Presidency, to win for the United States Texas and the all but illimitable lands beyond—the new Southwest which was to furnish from that day to this so large a part of the patronage of the new university. In that decade, Tennessee, heart of the old Southwest, was in a position almost of dominance in varied fields. For 1842 was the middle year in that remarkable stretch of 44 years during which Tennessee placed one of its sons on a national ticket in 8 of the 11 national campaigns.

"Into that kind of Tennessee, Cumberland University was born. Its early years were lush, green years. The civilization of the Old South was at its high tide and plenty rode on a springing harvest.

"The general assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the people of Lebanon thought it hard to find the funds to get the university going. When did people anywhere not think it hard to raise money for any cause? They thought it hard then, but a quarter of a century later in the great war's bitter aftermath they looked back with longing on those early days and knew that the first great task was an easy one. From 1842 to 1860—only a little while, the space from babyhood to a high-school diploma—in that 18 years the alumni of Cumberland University had come to fill in large measure the places of importance in the wide land. Some of them were already in the Congress of the United States, where from eight decades down to the present, Cumberland University graduates were to outnumber those of any other university in the United States.

"Other and more numerous sons of Cumberland were in the branches of State and Federal courts of both original and appellate jurisdiction. They were filling chairs in colleges all over the United States and were administering the affairs of colleges and seminaries and other educational institutions. Still numerous others were in administrative positions in the church bodies, were in the pulpits of important churches, and were carrying Christian civilization to far places on the mission fields of the world.

"Cumberland was powerful—a young giant in a young land and its prospects opened out fair and full to a glorious future.

"The great red flower of war sprang up and shadowed the land. Prejudice and passion and hatred raged. Brother's hand was at brother's throat and all the splendid fabric wrought through the prosperous years was ready to split into tatters. Lebanon was not on the whole secessionist and Cumberland was not. A majority of its trustees, mostly citizens of Lebanon, opposed secession and a number of them remained staunch Unionists through all that followed. The faculties were divided and students, of course, were divided also. Cumberland's magnificent building stood deserted not destined to withstand the shock of war—that building lay in ashes before the end, but there remained wrecked amid the ashes a lone Corinthian column, the building pitiable, but it was a valuable asset, for there was found written upon it, when friends of the university returned, the single Latin word 'resurgam,' in translation 'I will arise.' The word was marked up there with a piece of charred wood by Dr. W. E. Ward, an alumnus, who stood sorrowfully among the ashes of his alma mater. That word scrawled in charcoal became the voice of faith crying among the desolation and Cumberland did arise, not bigger, but stronger, than in the booming years before the war. Friends who in the old days had given of their wealth now gave of their poverty and the institution struggled into motion.

"The new day had fully dawned and the board of trustees recognized it by conferring upon Judge Nathan Green, Jr., the title of chancellor rather than that of president. For more than 30 years Chancellor Green directed the affairs of the university. For 63 years he occupied one of its chairs of law. Yet his position cannot be called unique because he had a faculty hardly less notable than himself for length of service. His great colleague in the law school, Dr. Andrew B. Martin, taught for 40 years; Andrew Hayes Buchanan taught mathematics in Cumberland 45 years and made his living through working during vacations with the United States Geodetic Survey; William Duncan McLaughlin taught Latin and Greek 45 years and made his living milking cows; and John Iradelle Dillard Hinds taught chemistry for 31 years and supported himself by filling prescriptions in the drug store. Walter Verrell Vester taught for 44 years; Winsted Paine Bone, 47.

Against such a record of devotion, brick and mortar and money and bonds do not count. Out of a century of that tradition of special training and Christian service what has Cumberland produced?

It is easy to see and measure the fruit of this as of other trees—they are on the topmost branches. Of the thousands of Cumberland University alumni who have done the world's work in common ways, no record stands out, but among the lot have been almost 450 ministers of the Gospel. There have been some 50 college and university presidents, some hundred college professors, 116 Congressmen, 11 Governors of States, some score of Federal judges, 2 United States Ambassadors, 2 Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and 1 Secretary of State of the United States. In all, more than 12,000 public servants have been numbered among Cumberland alumni.

Judged by its fruit, it is a goodly tree which early in 1946 the Tennessee Baptist convention received from the friendly hands of the trustees who had conducted the affairs of the university under Presbyterian auspices. At that time, Tennessee College for Women, a Baptist institution located in Murfreesboro, was incorporated into the university. Since then the convention board of trustees and administration of Cumberland University have diligently labored and constantly toward developing a strong and practical second-century program. There has been no pruning of the tree—there will be none. There has been some strengthening of the branches. The school of law, lustiest, shall it be said, of the branch has been strengthened and enlarged in its program in accordance with recommendations of leading educators and representatives of the legal profession.

On the other main branch, the college of arts and sciences, Cumberland stands stanchly by the liberal arts' ideas. One of the immediate goals is attainment of approval by accrediting agencies, and these goals, if not definitely in reach, are clearly in sight of attainment. Drawing closer to attainment is a larger and better faculty and adequate buildings for administration. Close to the heart of the sponsors is the goal of a large residence for women where special facilities and opportunities will be provided.

The second-century program does not contemplate a different Cumberland—it does contemplate a stronger edifice on its existing foundation. It is not expected now or ever that Cumberland will become large. It will remain a small Christian institution. As such it will continue to afford opportunity for broad basic education and specialized training in a few selected fields to a limited number of young men and young women without regard to Christian affiliation. Thus Cumberland University faces the future. May the promise of the future ahead measure up to the performance of the century that is passed.

National Guard in Danger

OF
HON. B. W. (PAT) KEARNEY
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of warning members of this House that the National Guard is in profound danger.

Once again our National Guard, which has never failed our Nation in repulsing enemies from abroad, is faced with a fight for its very existence.

This is not a struggle for survival against the forces of alien aggression. The National Guard could handle such a battle by itself. Now this mortal threat which is leveled at the guard, and all it stands for, exists, unfortunately, within our own Government.

I regret that it is necessary to inform this House that once again the Army General Staff has embarked on a power grab that, if not stopped, and stopped soon, will destroy the National Guard and every vestige of the civilian control of the military that is a keystone of our form of government.

I am aware that Congress, and particularly this House, has frequently in the past repulsed the Army General Staff's grab for power.

The Nation, and the National Guard, are deeply indebted to the Congress for the resolute manner in which it has rebuffed the plans of the Army General Staff.

Ever since the Army General Staff came into being, it has waged a vicious vendetta against what the National Guard stands for.

Why? Simply because the guard, with its decentralized control, its broad base of citizen participation, and its belief in civilian control of the military, has been an implacable obstacle to the Army General Staff plans for imposing the Prussian military system and organization over our Nation.

I need not remind this House that such a supreme general staff has been the goal of the Army General Staff. I am sure that we all believed that Congress had once and for all settled the matter in 1946 and 1949 by vigorously rejecting the Army General Staff demands for a supreme staff. This Congress did in the most pointed and unquestionable terms by rejecting the Army General Staff's Collins plan—which would have planted such a system in America. In addition, Congress also wrote into the National Security Act the most emphatic prohibitions against a supreme general staff.

We thought that by law we had defeated the proponents of this plan and in so doing we had erected a permanent protection for our National Guard.

Such prohibitions against a supreme general staff were imperative if the National Guard were to survive. The moment a supreme staff is created in this country, the National Guard will start to die. As history has proved, National Guard types of military forces cannot survive the Prussian type of highly centralized militarism under a supreme general staff.

Ever since prior to World War I the National Guard has been both an obstacle to, and a target of, the Army General Staff.

It is no secret that the Army General Staff has starved, squeezed, and impeded our National Guard. But because the guard is strong in heart and the democratic philosophy on which it is based is consonant with our form of government, the guard has persevered and survived in spite of the Army General Staff.

Is there any wonder, then, why Congress and our National Guard have both opposed every attempt to induce acceptance of the single Chief of Staff-supreme general staff system in the United States?

In a sense Congress and the National Guard are both vitally interested parties. The Prussian system would mean the end of the National Guard and it would also sound the doom of civilian control over the military.

The danger I refer to is not rumor. It is not speculation. It is not imagination.

It is real. It exists at this very moment.

The documentary evidence is conclusive. The master plan for creation of a supreme general staff has been drawn by the Army General Staff. The moment it goes into effect our democratic institutions go into decline.

The greatest citizen army in the world's history, our National Guard, at this very moment has a knife poised at its throat.

There is no secret about the Army General staff blueprint. It was published with all basic points in the New York Times of June 24, 1956.

Our Nation is indebted to the New York Times for exposing this plan to destroy civilian control of the military by erecting a Prussian-type of supreme staff.

This is what the Army General Staff's master plan would do:

First. Convert the Department of Defense into a supreme general staff.

Second. Put a super single chief of staff in command of the great supreme general staff and all the Armed Forces.

Third. Eliminate the civilian Deputy and Assistant Secretaries of Defense.

Fourth. Replace them with military officers.

Fifth. Give the super chief of staff control over manpower, industrial requirements, weapons requirements, and national strategy. He would be the most powerful man in the world.

Sixth. Although the Secretary of Defense and the President would be nominally superior to the super chief of staff, as well as Congress, they would get only such information and "facts" as the chief of staff decided they could have.

Seventh. The military services would be merged into one huge armed force, in accordance with the whims of the super chief of staff.

Eighth. The inevitable result would be the elimination of the National Guard.

Ninth. The Marine Corps, too, would be eliminated. Like the National Guard, it has no mention and no place in the master plan.

Tenth. The Secretaries of the Military Departments are also eliminated.

Each of these features in themselves are loaded with disaster for our Nation. As a whole, this Army general staff plan would be the end of our form of government.

Congress and the people are entitled to know what is going on in the Pentagon.

Secretary Wilson, speaking at Quantico recently, condemned the Prussian single chief of staff system and service merger.

Yet at the very moment he was speaking the Army general staff was pushing its master plan to accomplish what Secretary Wilson publicly condemned.

Secretary of the Army Brucker has also demonstrated his awareness of this vital issue and has publicly announced his strong opposition to the integrated single service concept. Despite this, however, his general staff officers have prepared an official staff paper which is a blueprint for the very type of organization which Secretary Brucker has condemned. The very fact that the Army general staff officers would dare to write and secure the publication of such a plan vividly illustrates the stubborn persistence of the supreme general staff proponents, and the difficulty which Secretary Brucker encounters in exercising civilian control over the general staff.

This Army supreme general staff plan would destroy every iota of civilian control over the Army. It would even eliminate Secretary Brucker's job. This demonstrates the bold arrogance of the Army proponents of this plan. More than this, however, it indicates in a most compelling fashion the Army general staff's deep and shocking lack of gratitude toward Secretary Brucker who has proved to be one of the most able and loyal Secretaries the Army has ever had.

Congress must not let this Army general staff blueprint for Prussianism succeed.

It is contrary to every principle of military efficiency.

It is contrary to every sacred principle of our form of government.

It is, also, contrary to every major provision of the report of the Hoover Commission task force on national security.

It is cause for alarm and indignation on the part of every citizen.

It would be the death knell of our National Guard.

Because of the great service of the New York Times in exposing this Army general staff master plan for usurping the powers of Congress and the civilian authorities over the military, Congress and the Nation are now alerted.

In the face of an alerted nation, the Army general staff will not be able to put into effect its plan to convert our Nation into a general-staff state.

Eleventh Anniversary of Independence of Indonesia

OF

HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, when I came back from the Bandung Conference, I announced that I would address the United States Congress each time there was an anniversary of independence of one of the 29 participating nations in the Asian-African Conference on friendly relations with the United States.

Because Congress will not be in session at the time of the event, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the Indonesian people, President Sukarno, and His Excellency Moekarto Notowidigdo, Ambassador of Indonesia, on the occasion of the celebration of the 11th anniversary of independence of Indonesia, August 17, 1956.

By far one of the most important of the southeast Asian countries recently emerged from colonial status into nationhood is Indonesia. The question of Indonesian independence was a burning issue in the postwar era. The rapidity with which Indonesia became the focus of international attention was likewise phenomenal.

Surprising though the strength of the Indonesian independence movement may have been to the outside world, various nationalist groups in the East Indies had been developing since as early as 1905. Western ideas infiltrated mainly in the wake of economic penetration. Not only did a small intellectual class receive European education, but the traditional life of the villages changed with every decade. With the war's end the colonizing power in Indonesia was faced with a fait accompli—Indonesian independence. On August 17, 1945, the Indonesian people proclaimed their independence. Therewith the sign was given to break forever the traditional colonial bonds.

Despite persisent attempts through military force, economic pressures, and widening of internal cleavages, restoration of colonial rule was impossible. Fortunately Indonesian leaders understood the gravity of the problems facing a nation in such a period of transition.

Dr. Sukarno vigorously enunciated the democratic principles and ideology of law to which the new Republic would be dedicated. He spoke of a psychological foundation of free Indonesia, a philosophy with deep thoughts and spirit and thorough desires on which to erect the building of free Indonesia, stable and eternal.

Dr. Sukarno made the following appeal to his people:

> If we want to live as a nation, a free nationality, a free member of the world, to live with humanism on a democratic basis in a society with social justice in peace and security, then we must not forget one condition to make this true: We must struggle, struggle and struggle again. Don't think that with the creation of free Indonesia our struggle comes to an end. No, I tell you, in free Indonesia our struggle must be carried on, only in another form. We shall fight on together as one united people.

Indonesia strongly desires peace. In the words of Mohammed Hatta:

> Only in a peaceful atmosphere can it rehabilitate its war-damaged economy and lift its citizens out of the poverty in which they have lived so long.

The Republic realizes that cooperation with other countries is essential. It has made the United Nations the focal point of its overall policy of seeking good relations with all other nations. Indonesia is intent upon pursuing a policy of peace and friendship with all nations on a basis of mutual respect and noninterference with each other's structure of government.

Writing in the periodical Foreign Affairs, April 1953, Mohammed Hatta very aptly delineated the guiding philosophy behind Indonesia's foreign policy:

> Talk of the brotherhood of man in a world in which racial discrimination makes possible the existence of such a policy as "apartheid," or talk of everlasting peace in the atmosphere of the cold war, indeed seems incongruous. Be that as it may, the Republic of Indonesia feels it its duty to strengthen the ideals of peace, however weak its voice or feeble its power. It believes that these ideals will become reality in the long run. It believes in the commonsense of mankind. The peoples' desire for peace, as opposed to their lust for war, becomes stronger from century to century. Evil often prevails over the forces for good and destroys what civilization has built up over the ages. But man, rational by nature, will eventually make a positive and definite choice of good over evil, peace over war. The discovery of weapons of war which become progressively more terrifying and destructive will strengthen men's love of peace and arouse hatred of war. It is this conviction that leads the Republic of Indonesia to believe that the struggle for world peace is today a policy based on reality.

This explains why the Republic of Indonesia has not alined itself with either the American bloc or the Russian bloc in the existing conflict, and why it is not prepared to participate in any third bloc designed to act as a counterpoise to the two giant blocs. To do that would merely create new suspicions and new enmities. And though Indonesia's policy has often been termed one of neutrality, it is not that either. "Neutrality" has a precise meaning in international law, defining a condition of impartiality toward belligerent states. * * * As a member of the United Nations, the Republic of Indonesia cannot adopt an attitude of neutrality. It is committed to international solidarity. * * *

But in practice, of course, international solidarity has not been achieved; world solidarity has cracked into two pieces. Under present conditions it would not be possible for Indonesia to be other than neutral if a war broke out. The existence of war is a special case in the life of nations. * * *

Western nations tend to hold that there is no middle position for the weaker countries, and that they must choose. * * * Indonesia plays no favorites betwen the two opposed blocs and follows its own path through the various international problems. It terms this policy "independent," and further characterizes it by describing it as independent and "active." By active is meant the effort to work energetically for the preservation of peace and the relaxation of tension * * * through endeavors supported if possible by the majority of the members of the United Nations.

Some Comments on the Joint Policy for Land Acquisition on Reservoir Projects

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN P. SAYLOR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the joint policy for land acquisition on reservoir projects approved by the Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of the Interior January 13, 1954—Order No. 2744, as published in the Federal Register—provides for the acquisition in fee title of the bare minimum of land in connection with such projects. By action of its board of directors, meeting at Rolla, Mo., June 20, 1954, the National Wildlife Federation protested that this policy tended to ignore the wildlife and recreational values adversely affected, or created, by such developments. The federation pointed out that the general public, which pays or helps pay for Army Engineer and Reclamation projects, has a right to expect access to Federal reservoirs for recreational purposes. Furthermore, the failure to protect wildlife and recreational values, or to take advantage of the opportunities created by many such projects to enhance wildlife and recreational values, is the opposite of conservation. The federation's resolution follows:

The board of directors of the National Wildlife Federation, representing through its 47 State affiliated wildlife organizations more than 3 million sportsmen-conservationists, respectfully urges the Department of the Interior and the Department of the Army to give reconsideration to section 6 of Order No. 2744, approved January 13, 1954, for publication in the Federal Register establishing a joint policy for land acquisition on reservoir projects for the following reasons, to wit:

1. The values of federally financed impoundments of water used in seeking appropriations in Congress take into consideration recreational and wildlife values to the general public.

2. The tremendous increase in the numbers of hunters, fishermen and recreationists in the United States requires full utilization of all recreational resources to meet increasing demands.

3. Nonreimbursable Federal funds invested in governmentally financed impoundments and structures are derived from taxes imposed upon all citizens of the United States. Fair and adequate development of wildlife and recreational values alone can justify the taking of such tax money for local and sectional flood control and irrigation projects.

Under the present policy the general public will be denied the enjoyment of recreation and wildlife values reasonably incident to a coordinated and comprehensive development of such projects. On the contrary the greatly enhanced benefits and increased land values will accrue not to the public, but to the riparian owners of contiguous land. Wildlife and recreation values, including adequate public access to and public use of impounded water and contiguous riparian land, should be protected by acquisition of reasonable land areas in depth above the high watermark of all such federally financed projects.

Legislation like H. R.159 and H. R. 160, providing for reconveyance of lands acquired for the Belton and Whitney Reservoirs in Texas, has been proposed as retroactive application of the Army-Interior joint policy. Several similar bills, pertaining to other Federal reservoirs, have been introduced. Two such reconveyance bills were enacted during the 1st session of the 84th Congress, one applying to the Jim Woodruff Reservoir, Georgia and Florida, the other to the Demopolis Reservoir in Alabama.

The National Wildlife Federation and other conservation organizations did not protest the Jim Woodruff and Demopolis Acts because the language specified that lands required for public purposes should not be reconveyed. It seemed clear that Congress previously had provided for recognition of wildlife management and public recreation as public purposes in the Coordination Act—Public Law 732, 79th Congress—and in section 209 of the Flood Control Act of 1954, which reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Army is also authorized to grant leases of lands, including structures or facilities thereon, in reservoir areas for such periods, and upon such terms and for such purposes as he may deem reasonable in the public interest: Provided, That leases to nonprofit organizations for park or recreational purposes may be granted at reduced or nominal considerations in recognition of the public service to be rendered in utilizing the leased premises: Provided further, That preference shall be given to Federal, State, or local governmental agencies, and licenses, or leases where appropriate, may be granted without monetary considerations, to such agencies for the use of all or any portion of a reservoir area for any public purpose, when the Secretary of the Army determines such action to be in the public interest, and for such periods of time and upon such conditions as he may find advisable: And provided further, That in any such lease or license to a Federal, State, or local governmental agency which involves lands to be utilized for the development and conservation of fish and wildlife, forests, or other natural resources, the licensee or lessee may be authorized to cut timber and harvest crops as may be necessary to further such beneficial uses and to collect and utilize the proceeds of any sales of timber and crops in the development, conservation, maintenance and utilization of such lands.

As a matter of fact, under the specific authority of the aforementioned laws, the Army had granted a 25-year license to the Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission of Florida to manage 7,273 acres of the Jim Woodruff Reservoir lands as a waterfowl-management and public-shooting area.

The Army insisted, however, that under Public Law 300 of the 84th Congress, 1st session, even the lands licensed to the State of Florida had to be sold back to the former owners. This resulted in a nationwide controversy and in introduction of H. R. 11197 by Congressman BOB SIKES. The purpose of Mr. SIKES' bill, which was passed by the House July 23, 1956, is to hold in public ownership the excellent waterfowl marshes on the Florida side of the Jim Woodruff Reservoir.

Since the disillusioning Jim Woodruff experience, the Wildlife Federation, the Wildlife Management Institute, and other conservation organizations have opposed reconveyance legislation unless amended to provide adequate protection of the public interest in the wildlife and recreational values. H. R. 159 and H. R. 160 contain no such protective language. Amendments approved in committee further restrict consideration of conservation values by changing the words "public purposes" to "project purposes."

The conservation groups also have indicated these bills, and other pending reconveyance bills, because they propose the sale of project lands to a favored group at a price which does not reflect the increased value accruing as a result of the expenditure of public funds. It is a sheer hand-out to the former owners or to the speculators who have cornered the options.

The nationwide significance of this problem was discussed by Mr. Harold Titus, the noted conservation editor of the magazine Field and Stream, in the issue for August 1956. The article by Mr. Titus follows:

While South Dakota conservationists watched fences go up and food and cover plants flourish on seven new game-management areas along the Fort Randall Reservoir, residents of Florida and Georgia just about abandoned hope that the Jim Woodruff Reservoir on their boundary would ever support similar projects. Bewildering shifts in Army engineer land policies had game officials in those Southeastern States completely confused and frustrated.

It has been reported in these columns that land acquisition around new impoundments constructed by Federal construction agencies is being curtailed. Instead of purchasing enough acreage so that public access and public recreational areas on newly created water would be assured, it now appears that in most cases the shoreline is to remain in private ownership. Furthermore, on certain projects where descriptions bordering the reservoirs have already been acquired, those portions which are not to be flooded seem due to be sold back to former owners at bargain rates. At least this is the interpretation placed on recent Army decisions by several of the country's largest national conservation organizations.

The situation came to attention when the Army reversed itself on an agreement involving the Jim Woodruff Reservoir. Back in January 1955 a 25-year license was granted the Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission to set up a game-management area on 72,000 acres of lands along the reservoir that had been acquired by Army engineers. Then, a few weeks ago, Army brass informed Florida that, after all, the land in question would serve no public purpose, that because it fails to do so the Army has no authority for retaining it, and that it would be offered for sale to former owners. Top-notch waterfowl marshes on the Georgia side of the impoundment also appeared to be going up for sale to private parties.

The Georgia Conservation League made a roaring protest, and Congressman BOB SIKES of Florida introduced a bill to prevent reconveyance of any lands that Florida can use for public purposes. The fate of these efforts may have been decided by the time this reaches print. And the chance that South Dakota isn't going to benefit from those Fort Randall improvements may possibly have materialized as well.

This is no localized controversy. Plans for wildlife projects on Engineers Corps lands are pending in Texas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Minnesota, and Mississippi, according to the National Wildlife Federation. If the Army's current determination to reduce all reservoir ownership to flooded acres prevails, many hopes entertained by conservationists for needed recreational facilities are going out the window. As this is written, the situation is far from clear.

Robert Dinwiddie: Grandfather of the United States

OF

HON. HARRY FLOOD BYRD

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD remarks by me and others in connection with Dinwiddie Day, celebrated at Portsmouth, Va., on July 6, 1956, honoring Robert Dinwiddie, Grandfather of the United States.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY SENATOR HARRY F. BYRD, OF VIRGINIA

Truly great events in history and the leaders who determined their outcome have often been blurred by subsequent occurrences. Nevertheless, with the passage of time, sometimes centuries, key figures in such events tend to emerge into their due stature.

One such leader in American history was Robert Dinwiddie, Lieutenant Governor and Commander in Chief of the Colony and Dominion of Virginia, from July 4, 1751, to January 12, 1758. His career is significant for the key part played by him in American colonial government and westward expansion.

It was my privilege to participate in some of the preliminary planning for the commemorative program in his honor in Portsmouth, Va., held on July 6, 1956, which was officially proclaimed by Mayor Fred A. Duke as "Dinwiddie Day."

The chairman of the committee for Dinwiddie Day arrangements was a well-known civic leader of Portsmouth and Norfolk County, Frank D. Lawrence. A notable part of the program was the renaming on July 6, 1956, of the principal hotel of Portsmouth as the Governor Dinwiddie and of its ballroom as the Washington Room, in honor of the colonial governor and his young protege, George Washington.

It is eminently fitting that the principal address was made by Counselor Ronald William Bailey of the British Embassy in Washington as the personal representative of the Ambassador, Sir Roger Makins, and that the special guests included members of the Dinwiddie family of Virginia.

Called to order by Chairman Lawrence, who also acted as toastmaster, the program started with the British and United States national anthems, sung and played by Rev. Ernest K. Emurian. The invocation was given by Bishop William A. Brown.

Among his first comments, Toastmaster Lawrence summarized the background of the occasion. The first feature event was the unveiling of a splendid portrait of Robert Dinwiddie, painted by Maurice Gompf of Portsmouth especially for this ceremony, and also a portrait of George Washington. The toastmaster then revealed that the original suggestion for naming the hotel as the Governor Dinwiddie was made by Capt. Miles P. DuVal, a native of Portsmouth, who spoke briefly stating that the idea had grown out of his reading the excellent biography of Robert Dinwiddie by Louis K. Koontz.

REMARKS OF REV. ERNEST K. EMURIAN, INTRODUCING RONALD WILLIAM BAILEY

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen, 15 years ago, in those anxious months that preceded the fighting on the North African Coast in World War II for the control of Egypt and the Suez Canal, the British diplomatic offices in these strategic regions of the Near East were scenes of vitally important negotiations concerned with the problems of defense against pending invasions.

A young British diplomat, then on his first assignment in his country's foreign service, was stationed in these areas. Observing events from exceptional vantage points, he witnessed the unfolding of momentous historical crises—a memorable start for any young career officer.

A graduate of the University of Cambridge in England, where he was awarded the degree of master of arts, our speaker entered the British Foreign Service in 1939. After serving at Beirut in Lebanon, and Alexandria and Cairo in Egypt, he was appointed to the Foreign Office in London. Returning to Beirut in 1949 as First Secretary, he served, while on that assignment, as Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in 1949 and again in 1951.

Transferred to the British Embassy in Washington in 1952, he was promoted in 1955 to be Counselor and Head of the Chancery, which position he now holds.

Thus, in our speaker we have one whose years of study, training, and observations of historical crises combine to qualify him eminently to address us on this occasion.

May I present Counselor Ronald William Bailey.

Before making his address, Counselor Bailey read the following message from Ambassador Makins:

"On the occasion of Dinwiddie Day, I am happy to send my good wishes to the people of Portsmouth who are commemorating the life and service of one of the most outstanding of Virginia's colonial governors. Robert Dinwiddie labored hard for the cause of understanding in friendly commerce between Virginia and Britain and for the growth and development of this Commonwealth. I rejoice that two centuries later his ambitions in both directions have been so amply fulfilled."

ADDRESS BY RONALD WILLIAM BAILEY

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen, I am happy to be here with you in Portsmouth on this auspicious day and in such distinguished company.

The English visitor to the United States always feels particularly at home in Virginia, partly because of the traditional southern hospitality which is so readily and generously extended to him, partly because of the historic links, and also because almost every city and village bears a familiar English name. I was brought up in and near Southampton, England, and from there it is but a few miles to Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight. From here in Portsmouth, Va., it is equally but a few miles to Southampton and Isle of Wight Counties.

An Englishman feels at home, too, because he finds here, perhaps more than anywhere else in this great country, a sense of the order and stability and tradition which he flatters himself is so especially characteristic of his own homeland.

In language, in government, in law, we have a common background, springing from the English settlements on these shores in the early 17th century, the continual immigration of English-speaking peoples over the years, and the unceasing intellectual and political exchanges between our two countries. The ties of Britain and Virginia are cemented, moreover, by a surprising amount of personal contact, by businessmen and sailors and tourists.

Britain is by far the largest overseas customer for Virginia tobacco, and therefore you have many business links with us. One interesting point is that in order not to harm the Virginia trade, no tobacco was allowed to be grown in England from the 17th century until 1910. Even now, the conditions under which it may be grown are so onerous that only a very few people, and those mostly in my own county of Hampshire, actually grow it today.

In a naval area such as this I have no need to remind you of the sea. Many of your vessels put in regularly at British ports, and a large proportion of our Navy has at one time or another been within a few miles of where we are today, while merchant shipping maintains a steady exchange of commerce.

We diplomatists quickly come to learn that there is a limit to what we can do to foster international understanding and good will. Understanding depends so largely on national attitudes—and national attitudes depend on individual people. Personal contact can do ten times as much as anything else in making people feel kindly towards other nations; ties of business and commerce, and arrangements for the exchanges of teachers and students and clergymen and civic leaders are the best vaccine against those twin diseases, Anglophobia and anti-Americanism. The diseases are very much in the decline, and they will be eliminated, as surely as polio and other scourges.

Despite the violent rift of 1776, and the period of suspicion which followed, the good relations between the English-speaking peoples on the two sides of the Atlantic have been restored. For me it has been a great experience to be able to play my small part in working together with my American colleagues in such intimate cooperation upon the problems and challenges which beset the world today.

I am particularly honored to be asked to represent my Ambassador this evening, and to be called upon to address you on the subject of a great figure who was an example of the bonds which tie Britain and Virginia together, and who was destined to play such an important part in the historical development not only of Virginia but also of the United States of America.

Let us cast our minds back a little over 200 years. On November 20, 1751, there sailed into the Tidewater Robert Dinwiddie, the appointed Lieutenant Governor of Virginia, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, Elizabeth and Rebecca. Although in name the Lieutenant Governor, the governorship properly was an honorific title. In fact, Dinwiddie was known and carried out his duties with all the authority and panoply to which the rank entitled him, including residence in the governor's palace at Williamsburg.

What manner of man was he? He was then some 58 years of age, already quite elderly by the standards of those times, having been born in Scotland in 1693. His father was a businessman engaged in the import and export trade, and he himself had begun life in the same way. At the age of 30 he had been appointed a collector of customs in Bermuda, and because of his vigilance and zeal in exposing a long-practiced system of fraud, he received the appointment of Surveyor-General of Customs of the Southern Ports of the Continent of America in 1738. For a time then, he appears to have made his home in Virginia. In 1749, and for 2 years or so, he is said to have carried on business in London, trading with the Colonies.

A portrait of the Governor is described in the "Dinwiddie Papers" of the Virginia Historical Society (which are the main source of my information) as being "noble in its expression of earnest purpose, candor and benignity." There is no doubt that he was, as we shall see, a conscientious, shrewd and hard-working official.

What sort of country did he find? In a dispatch to the board of trade dated January 1755, he gives a very detailed description of the land, the system of government, the production, and the imports and exports. The principal items of production and export were tobacco, iron, beef, and pork, Indian corn and wheat, together with skins, furs, and two mysterious items called snakeroot and jenzang. A footnote to the report explained that jenzang was ginseng. But I must confess that that was not very explicative. So I consulted the Encyclopaedia Britannica, which explains that it is used in China as a medicine to encourage vitality. Apparently in price it varies from $6–400 per ounce, but although it is said to have special powers, the action of the drug appears to be entirely psychological. The Encyclopaedia Britannica is equally skeptical about the efficacy of snakeroot as a cure for snake bite. But at least these were valuable exports.

The total annual value of all the exports is given as somewhat less than a million dollars. Imports to an almost equal value consisted of all the necessaries for clothing, tools and ironware, together with strong beer and "other family necessaries." The population and prosperity of the colony were fast increasing and new towns were constantly being founded. Among these in the first year of Dinwiddie's governorship was this very Portsmouth where we are tonight.

The population of Virginia was given by Dinwiddie, using a calculation based on the number of those paying tithes, as some 295,000, or less than one-tenth of what it is now. There were then 49 counties, fewer than now, but all of them bearing present-day county names. Those to the west were evidently larger and have since been subdivided. Norfolk County is given as having a total population of some 7,500 souls. It was about this period that the West, a near West though it was, began to appear in American life. Alexander Spotswood, who was Governor of Virginia from 1710 to 1722, had explored the country of the Blue Ridge with his Knights of the Golden Horseshoe and had penetrated as far as the Shenandoah Valley. That was some 30 years before, and since then there had been further movement and settlement toward the west. But the French, supported by Indian allies, having crossed Lake Erie, were pressing down the Ohio River, establishing themselves in what is now the Pittsburgh area of Pennsylvania and raiding the most westerly British settlements.

Meanwhile, in 1749, 2 years before Dinwiddie's arrival in the colony, the Ohio Company had been organized, partly to aid in securing for the English control of the valley, and partly to trade with the Indians. They had a pathway blazed joining a series of small fortified posts to connect Cumberland on the Potomac with the Monongahela River. The first general manager was the Virginian, Thomas Lee, who died in 1750. He was succeeded in that capacity by Lawrence Washington, the elder half-brother of George. Lawrence in turn died in 1752 and George Washington succeeded to the managership of the family estates at the age of 20. He was a skilled surveyor, and he excelled in all outdoor pursuits. He assumed the somewhat nominal duties also of adjutant of 1 of Virginia's 4 military districts. It is probably, therefore, no mere coincidence which led Governor Dinwiddie in the following year to select George Washington to go on a special mission into the Ohio Valley.

Britain and France being officially at peace, Governor Dinwiddie decided first to convey a warning to the French to desist from their encroachments into the Ohio Valley lands claimed by the British Crown. One messenger having failed to make contact with the French Governor, Dinwiddie decided to send George Washington. He was commissioned on October 31, 1753, his post of adjutant giving him the rank of major. He and his small party laboriously made their way, under difficult wintry conditions, to the French headquarters near Lake Erie and saw the commanding officer, who received him with courtesy, but left him in no doubt of the French intention to take possession of the Ohio Valley.

The difficulties of traveling in midwinter in these untrod areas are vividly described by George Washington in his account of the journey, and how, having tried to cross a partly frozen river by raft, he and a companion were forced to spend the night on an island and next morning were able to complete their crossing of the river on the ice, which had fortunately formed as a bridge by the time dawn broke.

In the meantime, the Governor had been turning his mind to the preparation of military power to resist the penetration by these hostile forces of the far-flung parts of the State of Virginia. But it was no easy task, for there were no regular forces in the area, and the settlers, most of whom were small freeholders, were reluctant to leave their lands in the coastal plains for the discomforts and hazards of a military expedition in distant parts, leaving no one to control and run their small farms.

But Governor Dinwiddie, as his correspondence shows, was painstaking and persevering in the extreme. He tried, without much success, to enlist the support of the neighboring States. He used considerable powers of persuasion upon them, but most of them preferred to take the easy course and let things be. He had the difficulty common to all governments—and individuals for that matter—of raising enough money for their purposes so that he could provide the wherewithal for such troops as could be recruited.

In January 1754, in a letter to Lord Fairfax, Governor Dinwiddie said he proposed to dispatch forthwith 200 men to protect those already sent by the Ohio Company to build one of their forts, and that he had commissioned Maj. George Washington to command 100 men to be raised in Frederick County and Augusta. Washington made for Winchester, Va., which was a meeting place with friendly Indians and one of the last outposts before the frontier country. He learned that the French had occupied a fort which they named Fort Duquesne on the present site of Pittsburgh. In a skirmish he attacked and took some prisoners who were sent to Williamsburg. But just over a month later the French brought up reinforcements, and after 9 hours' siege he was forced to capitulate. The French let him and his men go, after having disarmed them and extracted a promise that Virginia would not build another fort in the Ohio Valley for 1 year.

In February 1755, the metropolitan forces for which Governor Dinwiddie had appealed arrived in Virginia under the command of General Braddock. Governor Dinwiddie attached great hopes to the ability of these forces to assume the offensive and drive the French out of this part of the frontier. Unfortunately, although Braddock's forces consisted of 1,300 well-armed men, chiefly regular, and were attacked by only some 300 French and Indians, they were caught divided and off their guard. Braddock died of his wounds, but Washington, who was an aide-de-camp of the general's with the honorary rank of colonel, escaped unhurt, even though he had 4 bullets through his coat and 2 horses shot from under him.

This defeat was a great blow to Governor Dinwiddie, and he was highly annoyed both at the conduct of some of the men and also at the decision of Colonel Dunbar, who after Braddock's death had assumed the command, to retreat and take up winter quarters in Philadelphia.

With great energy, even though he no longer had the support of the regular troops, he set about strengthening and reorganizing the Virginia Regiment. He appealed to the Burgesses urgently for funds, making them realize that as a result of this unexpected defeat the rich lands of Virginia lay wide open to invasion. The Burgesses were galvanized into support and produced adequate sums. Dinwiddie worked indefatigably, obtaining supplies, sending out recruiting officers, and helping to organize the Virginia Regiment into an efficient group. In particular, he was concerned to find a suitable leader. Dinwiddie was a man of considerable perspicacity, and he had come to appreciate those qualities which were already to be seen in Washington as a young man and for which in the judgment of history he is so renowned.

On August 14, 1755, he appointed Washington, then 23 years of age, colonel of the Virginia Regiment and commander in chief of all the forces "now raised and to be raised for the defense of this His Majesty's Colony and for repelling the unjust and hostile invasion of the French and their Indian allies." With this commission went detailed instructions on the recruitment, organization, and pay of the Virginia Regiment. Roads were built and forts constructed and, although no major engagements ensued, Washington was able, with his force of 700 men, to prevent any further French incursions during the remaining period of Dinwiddie's governorship. (Shortly after, more metropolitan forces expelled the French and Fort Duquesne was renamed Pittsburgh after the British statesman.)

But Governor Dinwiddie was by now 64 years of age. He had suffered a stroke and partial paralysis, so that he asked to be relieved of his governorship and to return to England. Permission was granted, and he set sail in January 1758, maintaining his administrative correspondence to within a short time of his departure. As a token of his esteem he gave many books from his library to William and Mary College, where they unfortunately perished by fire. On his arrival in England, he made his home in Bristol, but continued to take great personal interest in the affairs of Virginia, and on a number of occasions intervened with the metropolitan government in London in support of Virginian interests. He died in 1770 at the age of 77.

I must add that Robert Dinwiddie's coat of arms bore the motto in Latin "Ubi Libertas Ibi Patria" (Where There Is Liberty There Is My Fatherland). Those are the sentiments which the English peoples have carried with them to the four corners of the world and where they have taken firm root, as in this very soil of America.

Such then was the man we are honoring this July 6, which the Mayor of Portsmouth has decreed shall be known as Dinwiddie Day. This hotel has now taken his name. Dinwiddie Street passes its door and appropriately follows a course parallel to Washington Street.

George Washington is known as the Father of the United States, and because of the part which Governor Dinwiddie played in the discovery and commissioning of this young man as the commander in chief of the armed forces of Virginia, it has been suggested that he should be known as the Grandfather of the United States of America

Certainly he is a man who merits the highest honor from Virginians, from Americans, and from Englishmen. In a time when your land was in its infancy, he came out from England and gave his strength and his health for the defense and the expansion of Virginia. A loyal Englishman, he was a loyal servant of Virginia, too. He would, I think, have been distressed had he lived another score of years and seen the rift between the two countries he had served.

But if he could return here today, I do not think that he would be saddened by what he saw. He would rejoice at the fabulous success and prosperity of Virginia and of the United States. And he would rejoice to see that the political separation of Britain and America, under the inspired leadership of his protege, George Washington, had not brought to an end the feelings of brotherhood nor the commercial ties which linked the people of the two countries in his own day. I think that if Dinwiddie were able to return here now, he would be able to see that, even if the future did not take quite the course he expected, the things that he stood for—the prosperity and the friendship of our peoples—have been achieved as abundantly as he could ever have dreamed.

RESPONSE OF JOHN MARSHALL DINWIDDIE

Mr. Toastmaster, distinguished guests and fellow Virginians. It is a great honor for me to represent the Dinwiddie family of Virginia and it gives me much pleasure to be here with you tonight. Up in my home in Alexandria, we know a lot about George Washington, because it was his hometown, and about his association with Governor Dinwiddie.

There is a street named Dinwiddie here in Portsmouth. Arlington and Richmond, Va., have one and so does Pittsburgh, Pa. And there is Dinwiddie County in our State. I dare say that the present generation knew very little of their meaning until Mr. Bailey's enlightening talk on Governor Dinwiddie here tonight.

I think it is a wonderful thing for Mr. Lawrence and his associates to rename their hotel the Governor Dinwiddie. They are to be congratulated for they have made history here tonight in focusing attention on Governor Dinwiddie, who not only helped establish Portsmouth, but who did so much to make possible the founding of our Nation.

Thank you very much.

San Francisco Host to National Japanese American Citizens League Convention

OF

HON. JOHN F. SHELLEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, may I call the attention of my colleagues in both the House and the Senate to the 14th biennial national convention of the Japanese American Citizens League—JACL—which will be held in San Francisco over the Labor Day weekend, from August 30 to September 3, with headquarters in the historic Sheraton-Palace Hotel.

JACL, as most Congressmen are aware, is the only national organization of Americans of Japanese ancestry; its name identifies its constituency and the reasons for its being. All of its members are native-born or naturalized citizens of the United States; most, but not all, are also of Japanese ancestry.

Its twin slogans, which express its purposes and objectives, as well as summarize its activities and achievements, are "For Better Americans in a Greater America" and "Security Through Unity."

CONVENTION PROGRAM

The convention begins with a meeting of the national board, composed of the elected officers and district council chairmen, on Thursday morning, August 30. The national council, composed of the official delegates representing 88 chapters and members in 32 States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Hawaii, and Japan, begins their deliberations the following day, Friday, August 31. Climax of the convention is the traditional banquet on Labor Day, when the outstanding Japanese American in the United States for the past 2 years will be announced as the Nisei of the Biennium. The last such award was presented to Sgt. Hiroshi Miyamura, Gallup, N. Mex., Congressional Medal of Honor winner and one of the 10 outstanding young men in the Nation as selected by the United States Junior Chambers of Commerce. Guest speaker at the banquet will be Maxwell M. Rabb, Secretary to the Cabinet of the United States and adviser to the President on minority problems. The final event will be the Sayonara ball on September 3.

For the first time, special events will be held for the newly naturalized citizen parents, for the ladies, and for the younger citizens. And Convention Queen Sharon Nishima of Sacramento, representing the host district council, will reign over the festivities.

Jerry Enomoto, immediate past president of the San Francisco host chapter, is the convention chairman.

OFFICERS TYPICAL AMERICANS

Typical of the cross-section of America that comprises JACL are its officers.

National president is George Inagaki, of Venice, Calif., a former nurseryman recently turned real estate salesman.

National vice president is Ken Tashiro, of Orosi, Calif., a farmer.

National vice president is Tak Terasaki, of Denver, a pharmacist.

National treasurer is Dr. Roy Nishikawa, of Los Angeles, an optometrist.

Board secretary is William Mimbu, of Seattle, an attorney.

Thousand club chairman is Shig Wakamatsu, of Chicago, a chemist.

Dr. Thomas T. Yatabe, first constitutional national president, of Chicago, a dentist, and Hito Okada, immediate past national president, of Salt Lake City, Utah, an insurance agent, are also members of the board.

Chairman of the Pacific Northwest district council is Dr. Kelly Yamada, of Seattle, another optometrist.

Chairman of the northern California-western Nevada district council is Yas Abiko, of San Francisco, a newspaper publisher.

Chairman of the central California district council is Jin Ishikawa, of Fresno, another attorney.

Chairman of the Pacific southwest district council is Dave Yokozeki, of Los Angeles, an attorney and motion picture executive.

Chairman of the intermountain district council is George Sugai, of Payette, Idaho, a businessman.

Chairman of the mountain-plains district council is Robert Horiuchi, of Denver, an accountant.

Chairman of the midwest district council is Abe Hagiwara, of Chicago, a social worker.

Chairman of the eastern district council is William Sasagawa, of Philadelphia, an engineer.

National director is Mas Satow of San Francisco; Washington representative is Mike Masaoka of the District of Columbia; Pacific southwest director is Tats Kushida of Los Angeles; and legal counsel is Frank Chuman, also of Los Angeles.

SAN FRANCISCO APPROPRIATE SITE

The city by the Golden Gate, which I have the honor to represent in the Congress, is particularly appropriate for a gathering of this kind, for no other city in America has been more closely identified with Japanese Americans and their destiny than San Francisco.

Gateway to and from the Orient, it was through this port that the first immigrants from Japan arrived three quarters of a century ago, to make their own significant contributions to the building of western America. It was here that the Treaty of Peace was signed 5 years ago, opening a new and greater era of friendship and cooperation between the United States and Japan.

San Francisco has always been closely associated with the Citizens League movement since its inception in the midtwenties. One of the earliest chapters was organized here. In 1929 in San Francisco, a meeting of the California chapters decided to federate into a national association to promote the citizenship of the then young Japanese American minority and the welfare of persons of Japanese ancestry in this Nation, who at that time were subjected to considerable legal and other forms of racial discrimination. Though the First Biennial National Convention was convened in Seattle in 1930, and the Second Biennial 2 years later in Los Angeles, the Third Biennial which established the present organizational structure of the JACL was held in this city by the Golden Gate in 1934.

National headquarters before the war was, and at the present time is, located in San Francisco.

Probably its most memorable meeting was in the spring of 1942, when an emergency meeting of the National Council was held in San Francisco to determine the course of action which Japanese Americans should take in a war in which they were too often confused with the enemy. It was decided that Japanese Americans would agree to cooperate with the Government in their own evacuation, although they thoroughly disagreed with the necessity for such action and the reasons for what has been described as "our worst wartime mistake."

But, the dedicated loyalty of the Japanese Americans was demonstrated in that mass movement, and the Government and the public at large were forced to reappraise the devotion and allegiance to the United States of these unfortunate victims of wartime hate and hysteria.

"CHANGING PERSPECTIVES" THEME

Symbolic of the changed and improved status of Americans of Japanese ancestry is the convention theme, "Changing Perspectives."

Using the tools of democracy, JACL has in the 10 short years since the end of World War II, been able to provide that leadership which has enabled Americans of Japanese ancestry to be accepted as welcome and worthy partners in the American way, whereas a decade ago they were held to be suspect by their own Government.

Through the Congress particularly, and State legislatures as well, JACL has been able to eliminate legal sanctions which at one time numbered more than 500 discriminatory statutes directed against people of Japanese ancestry. The great and priceless privilege of citizenship at long last, in 1952, at a time when the 12th Biennial National Convention was in session in San Francisco, was granted to loyal resident alien Japanese. At the same time, the Japanese Exclusion Act of 1924 was repealed and token immigration from Japan authorized under our quota system. The courts of the United States and of the several States, struck down as unconstitutional, laws which discriminated against those of Japanese ancestry solely on the basis of race and, at that time, "ineligibility" to citizenship. The American public at large has come to recognize Japanese Americans for what they are—individual citizens who have demonstrated in combat and at home during World War II that their loyalty is second to none.

Now that their legal status as first-class Americans has been secured under JACL's leadership, "Changing Perspectives" as the convention theme offers some 2,000 or more official delegates and boosters, a challenge to chart the future program and objectives of the JACL in the light of the greater opportunities now available to all Americans of Japanese ancestry.

It is my hope that the members of the JACL will never forget or abandon the basic purposes of the organization. I believe there will always be a valid place in our country for community and national service through active citizens groups dedicated to the goal proclaimed in JACL's mottoes, "For better Americans in a greater America" and "Security through unity." The spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion to a splendid cause which have always characterized and motivated both the JACL leadership and membership should also be retained, for these are rare qualities which are sorely needed in this troubled world today.

I know that my colleagues in Congress join with me in the wish that the 14th Biennial National Convention to be held in San Francisco over the Labor Day weekend will result not only in enjoyment and fellowship for JACL members, but also in the formulation of constructive and forward-looking plans and programs which will bring a greater measure of happiness and prosperity to our Japanese Americans and to their fellow citizens in the years to come.

Report of Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOE L. EVINS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a brief statement on the report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy.

Copies of the report have been provided to the Speaker, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, the chairmen of the Armed Services Committees of the House and Senate, the chairmen of the Appropriations Committees of both the House and Senate, and to the President of the United States.

In this connection, there is also included a copy of a letter from the President to Dr. James P. Baxter III, Chairman of the Board of Visitors.

The 1956 Report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy and the letter indicated follows:

REPORT OF BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY, 1956

To the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Speaker, House of Representatives.

1. APPOINTMENT OF BOARD

The Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy was appointed in accordance with the provisions of sections 1055–1056 of title 10, United States Code. Pertinent extracts from the code are appended to this report, marked exhibit A.

2. PERSONNEL OF THE BOARD

The membership of the Board as constituted for the year 1956 was as follows:

Senators: RICHARD B. RUSSELL, Georgia, chairman of the Committee on Armed Services; LISTER HILL, Alabama; WAYNE C. MORSE, Oregon; CHARLES E. POTTER, Michigan.

Representatives: CARL T. DURHAM, North Carolina, representing CARL VINSON, Georgia, chairman of the Committee on Armed Services; AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY, Pennsylvania; JOE L. EVINS, Tennessee; CHARLES B. HOEVEN, Iowa; EDWARD T. MILLER, Maryland.

Presidential appointees: Gen. Lucius DuB. Clay, chairman of the board, Continental Can Co., New York, N. Y.; Dr. John S. Dickey, president, Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H.; Dr. Leonard Carmichael, Secretary, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C.; Dr. Francis M. Dawson, dean of the College of Engineering, State University of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa; Dr. James P. Baxter III, president, Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.; Dr. John A. Hannah, president, Michigan State University, East Lansing, Mich.

Col. Charles J. Barrett, professor of foreign languages, United States Military Academy, was appointed Executive Secretary for the Board by the Superintendent, United States Military Academy.

3. PRELIMINARY DATA

In the summer of 1955 the Chief of Legislative Liaison, United States Army, consulted with Members of the Congress concerning suitability of dates for the annual visit. After consideration of all factors affecting the choice, the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy notified the members whose terms extended into 1956 that the period of February 2–4 had been designated for the visit. Announcement of those dates was sent to all new members as notification of their appointment was received.

The Superintendent likewise caused to be distributed to all members certain reports and informational material, and a suggested program for the visit. A list of the data furnished is appended as exhibit B.

4. CONVENING OF THE BOARD

Present for the annual visit were the following members: Mr. Kelley, Mr. Evins, Mr. Hoeven, General Clay, Dr. Dickey, Dr. Carmichael, Dr. Dawson, Dr. Baxter, Dr. Hannah.

Dr. Baxter was unanimously elected Chairman of the Board of Visitors for 1956.

Illness and pressure of congressionall business combined to prevent the attendance of Senator RUSSELL. Illness also caused the absence of Mr. DURHAM. Conflicting responsibilities made it impossible for Senators HILL, MORSE, and POTTER and for Mr. MILLER to participate in the visit. The members of the Board actually in attendance were beset by similar conflicts and many of them were forced to arrive late or to depart early. All of them devoted the maximum available time to the inspections and deliberations of the Board.

Dr. Dickey was in attendance on the first day of the visit only and departed shortly thereafter for a 3-month mission in Europe. He therefore did not participate in the preparation of this report.

5. PROCEDURE

The program followed by the Board in its visit is appended hereto, marked exhibit C.

It is appropriate to note that the annual visit began with snow, rain, and icing conditions, and that the review which terminated the formal part of the visit was held in a snowstorm. Except for travel delays, the visit was not appreciably affected by the weather.

6. COMMENTS

(a) Morale

1. Cadets: The Board in all its contacts with cadets found evidence of excellent morale. Cadets are proud of the Military Academy, proud of its role in the history of our country, and proud of their part in maintaining the standards for which the Military Academy is known. The Board has been informed that the period after Christmas leave, and particularly that part of it which immediately follows the semiannual examinations, is a time of low spirits. If what the Board saw is low spirits, no concern need be felt for the morale of the Corps of Cadets.

2. Remainder of the command: The officers and enlisted men observed by the Board were alert, intelligent, and interested in their work. They seemed to be deeply aware of their part in accomplishing the mission of the Military Academy and to find their reward in realization of the importance of the tasks entrusted to them.

(b) Discipline

Problems of discipline appear to be effectively handled and high standards are being maintained.

(c) Curriculum

The Board realizes that the curriculum of the United States Military Academy is tailored to the mission of preparing its graduates for a single career; i. e., that of an officer in the military service of our country. The Board is, however, greatly interested in the extent of extracurricular endeavor, principally in the educational field, which is open to all cadets, particularly those who are intellectually gifted. Seminars in progress at present range from the commonplace problems of personal finance to the more abstruse matter of relativity. The Board also notes with approbation the widespread interest of the cadets in debating, which should bear dividends in effectiveness of expression and the ability to make a logical presentation.

(d) Instruction

1. Academic: The Board is pleased with the methods of instruction in use at the United States Military Academy, and particularly with the maintenance of small sections, in which individual work and participation are possible. To some extent this lessens the rigidity of the curriculum, permitting the more able students to penetrate more deeply into the subject matter while others accomplish only the minimum.

The Board was impressed with the caliber of the instructors it observed in the classrooms. They appeared not only to be thoroughly conversant with their subjects but also to possess those qualities which permit them to draw their students into discussion, thus permitting the latter to derive the benefits of active participation in group work.

2. Military: No actual tactical instruction was observed. The Board visited the instruction plant of the Combined Arms Detachment of the 1802d Special Regiment where it saw adequate and well-maintained equipment and talked with several instructors, particularly with noncommissioned officers who conduct the weapons training and the basic tactical training of the cadets. Training aids are up-to-date and embody many interesting features. It is believed that the military instruction is up to the standards of the Military Academy.

(e) Physical equipment

The conversion of the riding hall to academic space has now begun, and is tentatively set for completion in September 1957.

Removal in 1957 of the academic activities from the present West Academic Building will permit the first step to be taken in alleviating the crowded housing conditions of the Corps of Cadets. More than two-thirds of the cadets are living 3 in a room designed for 2 occupants. Beds, study tables, clothespresses, and racks for the equipment of three cadets occupy most of the available space. While no health problem appears so far to have arisen, and the morale of which mention has already been made is excellent, a very distinct disadvantage to the cadet exists in the lack of suitable study conditions. Were study rooms available in the barracks, present conditions would be immensely improved. But since the cadet lives, works, and sleeps in the same crowded room where the distractions of 3 occupants greatly outnumber those of 2, he cannot devote to his studies the attention which they merit. Considering his limited study time, he is working under an academic handicap.

It is to be noted that the overcrowding is most prevalent in the fourth class, which is precisely the one in which the cadet is often faced with the need to develop new habits of concentration in the preparation of his daily tasks.

The facilities for housing cadets at West Point are substantially below the standards maintained in civilian colleges and universities which provide housing for their students.

It is planned to convert the West Academic Building, after 1957, into additional housing space for the Corps of Cadets. Its location immediately adjoining the present barracks area contributes to the desirability of the plan. It will not eliminate the overcrowding, but any reduction of the overcrowding is a step in the right direction.

It is the belief of the Board that the plans for conversion of the West Academic Building to barracks space should be carried to the point where the work may be started immediately upon release of the building. Meanwhile planning for barracks space in addition to that to be obtained by conversion of the academic space to be outdated in 1957 should be undertaken, and actual construction should be accomplished as soon as possible. Expansion of the Corps of Cadets beyond the figure which is currently projected should be deferred until the physical plant is made adequate for its housing.

(f) Fiscal affairs

Though all major items of equipment are available for training the Corps of Cadets and for maintenance of the Military Academy, there is apparent a sensible economy in administration. No indication of extravagance or of assigning high priority to the procurement of minor items has been seen.

(g) Filling cadet vacancies

Currently the Corps of Cadets is below its authorized strength and it was also below strength before the departure of those who failed the first term's work. The Military Academy has not been filling its vacancies at a time when civilian institutions of learning are being deluged with applications. The Military Academy is in competition with civilian colleges for the same outstanding young students. The education at Government expense which is characteristic of the service academies is offset by the scholarships, some of them carrying both tuition and board, which are available in many colleges today.

It is important that the Military Academy obtain its share of the outstanding young men who enter college each year. Any tendency toward mediocrity in the officer corps of our military services must be combated in every possible way.

It is currently proposed to increase the number of Presidential competitive appointments to the Military Academy. These appointments have been reserved for nearly a century for the sons of members of the regular components of the Armed Forces. Increasing the number of appointments from this source would permit the admission of a greater number of young men familiar with military life and possessing a high degree of motivation for a military career.

Authority exists under the law for appointment of qualified alternates and qualified competitors to fill vacancies which exist after the composition of a new class has been determined. A limiting factor here is the size of the pool of qualified prospects. There are many young men of suitable academic ability, character, and leadership potential who are not eligible for Presidential appointment and who would be interested in a military career and enrollment in the Military Academy were they aware of its opportunities.

It is suggested that inconsistencies of geographical distribution, lack of familiarity with the approaches to Congress, or the accident of birth into a family without service connection, be offset by authorizing the Superintendent to fill vacancies still existing after the entrance of a new class, plus the qualified alternates and qualified competitors whose admission is currently provided for by law. A suitable procedure might conform to the following outline: Any interested young man could make application for admission directly to the Superintendent; the applicant would be required to establish his eligibility for admission as prescribed for all prospective appointees; the Superintendent could then select from this group the individuals to fill any remaining vacancies, considering the same factors which are used in the selection of the qualified alternates and the qualified competitors.

It is a certainty that there are young men in the country today who are unaware of the opportunity West Point offers, or who consider appointment to the Military Academy unobtainable. Greater dissemination of information about the Academy is necessary and the Board is pleased to note the scheme of expanded publicity which was reported to it. It is hoped that these proposals may be immediately implemented in order that the country at large, and particularly its eligible young men, may know more about the Military Academy.

The Board hopes that the Corps of Cadets may be soon returned to its authorized strength and that every measure, including necessary legislation, will be taken to assure that the annual quota of admissions be filled.

(h) Possession of money by cadets

For many years receipt of money from outside sources by cadets was prohibited. This was in the interest of democracy; it placed all cadets on a plane of financial equality, making it impossible to distinguish the rich man's son from the poor man's son.

In past years—the exact time is not known to the Board—the prohibition was removed. Possession of outside funds is now both recognized and tolerated. Though changing norms of social behavior undoubtedly have their effect among the cadets, there remains a question concerning the desirability of preserving the former standards in money matters.

In view of the increased compensation recently authorized for cadets, an increase which it was expected would be sufficient to permit all cadets to graduate free of debt, it is believed that study should be given to the desirability of returning to the democratic principle which was in force for so many years.

(i) Status of permanent professors

There is at West Point a devoted group of officers who have been selected for the 21 permanent professorships (the dean of the academic board is included). In addition to their educational qualifications, they possess the characteristics and abilities sought in general officers. Five of them were actually general officers before they accepted their present responsibilities; in the past 10 years there have been 2 others, 1 of whom is now retired, 1 deceased.

While these patriotic officers have been devoting their finest efforts to the preparation of tomorrow's leaders in our Army, many other officers of no greater ability or promise have been promoted to general-officer rank. And whereas in the small Army of 50 years ago there were relatively few colonels and that grade carried considerable importance, today's expanded numbers have so submerged the professors of the United States Military Academy as greatly to diminish their prestige.

The Board considers it unjust that professors should be denied the opportunities for advancement in rank and recognition to which their qualifications would entitle them in other military fields. In the view of the Board their responsibility for training future military leaders is fully as worthy of recognition and rank as are the assignments of other general officers of the Army. Since promotion is the most tangible recognition of worthy performance of important duties, it should not be denied to outstanding officers willing to make a lifetime career of training future military leaders.

The Board believes that the relative importance of the direction of instruction at West Point vis-a-vis that of other general officer assignments has not been properly evaluated. It believes that steps can be taken within the general-officer ceiling figure whether as now established or as it may later be amended, to permit recognition of the worth of distinguished teaching officers at West Point. It believes that the time has come for providing suitable advancement for meritorious officers whose service to the country has been distinguished, deserving, and apparently insufficiently appreciated.

(f) Chaplain, United States Military Academy

The moral and the spiritual are among the most important phases of instruction at the United States Military Academy. This Board has reviewed, and concurs in, the comments of the Board of Visitors for 1955 concerning the chaplaincy at West Point. The present method of selection of the Chaplain should be continued. The pay of the office should be sufficient to attract to it young clergymen of suitable caliber. In addition, the size of the Corps of Cadets is now such as to require the time and labors of more than one man. Currently an assistant is provided, utilizing the chapel fund for his payment. It is proper that the need for an assistant be recognized and that provision be made by the Government for his maintenance and remuneration. Legislation has been introduced (S. 2137) to authorize the appointment of an assistant and to establish a suitable pay scale for both clergymen. This Board considers the proposed legislation worthy of support.

7. RECOMMENDATIONS

The Board makes the following recommendations:

(a) Barracks

That detailed planning be undertaken so that the present West Academic Building may be converted to barracks space for cadets as soon as the building can be released from its present use; also planning for the construction of sufficient additional barracks to permit housing all cadets, two to a room, with adequate additional study space in all barracks buildings.

(b) Filling cadet vacancies

That the Superintendent be authorized to fill the corps of cadets to its authorized strength each year, after the new class and qualified alternates and qualified competitors have entered, from among those qualified young men who have made application to him and whose academic ability, character, and leadership potential warrant their selection for a military career. Such procedure, if adopted, must not jeopardize the present method of filling vacancies by congressional appointment nor reduce the number of appointments to which each Member of the Congress is entitled.

(c) Dissemination of information

That every step be taken to inform the youth of our country of the opportunity which West Point offers, and to interest them in the military career, so that the Military Academy may receive its share of the talented young men who enter college each year.

(d) Possession of money by cadets

That a study be made, with report to the Board of Visitors for 1957, of the feasibility and desirability of limiting the amount of money in the possession of cadets to that which all receive alike from their cadet pay.

(e) Improvement of status of permanent professors

That the senior officers permanently assigned to the Military Academy receive the same opportunities for increased rank and recognition to which their qualifications would entitle them if serving at stations other than West Point.

(f) Chaplain, United States Military Academy

That the present method of selection for this important post be continued, that the chaplain's pay be set at a figure which will provide him a living comparable to that in other important posts of the Protestant clergy, and that he be given the necessary assistant in his ministration to the United States Corps of Cadets.

8. CONCLUSION

The members of the Board of Visitors, as citizens of the United States, take pride in the work of the United States Military Academy and in the spirit which characterizes the performance of all who are connected with it. In our judgment the loyalty and enthusiasm of the Corps of Cadets, reflecting the same qualities in the members of the faculty and of the staff, would be an inspiration to every American. It is our belief that the Military Academy is accomplishing in full measure its mission and that its graduates go forth today with the same high ideals and same fine qualities which have made their predecessors worthy defenders of the American way of life.

Dr. JAMES P. BAXTER III,

DEAR DR. BAXTER: I have reviewed the Report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy with great interest, and have forwarded it to the Secretary of Defense for further study and initiation of appropriate action on its recommendations.

It is gratifying to me, as I am sure it was to the Board, that the conversion of the riding hall to academic space is underway, and is expected to be completed in the fall of 1957. It is encouraging to see the recommendations of a previous year being brought to fruition. I hope the suggestions now presented for further improvements in the physical facilities, so as to permit housing all cadets two to a room, as well as those concerning the filling of cadet vacancies can meet with the same favorable results.

Through this report—and through the interest and effort that lie behind it—you and the other members of the Board continue to make a valuable contribution to the future of the Military Academy. Please convey to each member who participated my sincere appreciation.

Sincerely,

DWIGHT EISENHOWER.

The Plight of Independent Agencies

OF
HON. ALBERT GORE
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech delivered by me on the subject "The Plight of Independent Agencies."

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PLIGHT OF INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

We are entering on that recurring period in our national life when the record of an administration is subject to review in detail in order that the people may express their choice at the polls on the basis of information and understanding. And when, as it appears will be the case in November 1956, one of the candidates for the Presidency is the man invested with the authority of that high office, a more searching examination of his administration must necessarily be made. Those of us who belong to what the British call the "loyal opposition" are gratified indeed that we can present our case, confident that our voices need not be mute in sympathy for suffering, that we need not be silent in compassion. We are glad that the President has regained strength and hope that he will be able to take responsibility on the hustings for the acts of his administration.

This is the way it should be. It would be dangerous to our institutions if the electorate in November were denied the opportunity to analyze the record of the past 4 years, to comprehend in all its implications the somewhat novel concept of the Presidency presented by this administration, to judge if such a concept has resulted in honest and in responsible Government, and to decide if such a concept is adequate to meet the challenge of the next 4 years.

I refer to the concept of the Presidency implicit in a system where the Chief Executive assures the people of the Nation of his honesty and good intentions, his faith in the maxims that govern decent human conduct, while he permits his subordinates and his aides to take such actions which repudiate his promises, ignore his publicly stated intentions, and without his interference they proceed to run the Government according to their private and personal understandings or wishes as to his administration's objectives. This is what happens, I believe, when a President is unable or unwilling to identify those routine and ministerial functions appropriate for delegation, and as a consequence surrenders to his subordinates excessive executive powers, beyond the powers contemplated by Constitution, statute or by tradition. By such delegations the office of the Presidency has been diminished in the Eisenhower administration as the requirements of the office have been adjusted to fit the deep-rooted habits, inclinations and necessities of the President.

I do not now wish to discuss the results in terms of America's prestige abroad, nor to speculate about the effect in chancelleries around the world as the cacophony of conflicting views expressed by officials of this administration assaults their ears. Nor am I going to discuss the confusion in the Congress and the Nation with respect to our Nation's requirements for defense, as divergent views are aired, and contradictory evidence is sifted to get at the truth, while we wait in vain for the responsible Chief Executive to exert the powers of his office to support his public promises.

I wish to discuss the results of the policy of delegation of his responsibilities by the Chief Executive in one specific field, an area concerning which I have some personal knowledge and with respect to which the essential facts I will present as illustration are in the public domain.

I am going to discuss the record of this administration with respect to the conduct of the independent agencies of Government during the past few years. My indictment is a harsh one, for I believe that never since 1887 when the oldest of the independent agencies now existing, the Interstate Commerce Commission, was created by the Congress has there been such a deliberate effort to make those agencies subservient to the demands of partisan objectives. I believe that never before has there been a studied usurpation of their powers, a deliberate erosion of their integrity, and a calculated sabotage of the purposes for which they were created.

For this the President of the United States must accept responsibility, for this attempted prostitution of the Independent Agencies has been undertaken by his personal secretariat as they have seized for their domain responsibilities deliberately assigned by Congress to other officials, responsibilities never intended to be discharged from the Executive Offices at all. This illicit transfer to the Office of the President of the power to decide issues intended by the Congress to be determined elsewhere has achieved a centralization of authority without accountability wholly foreign to the traditions of democratic institutions, and alien to the spirit in which the independent agencies were created by the Congress.

The unauthorized transfer of power has not been openly attempted. It is not acknowledged, although the record is plain, nor is its significance fully understood. But the transfer has been made, and the schemes of irresponsible cabals in secret have been substituted for the planning of responsible officials. With arrogance and with contempt the will of Congress has been defied as the Bureau of the Budget and the secretariat of the White House have undertaken to control, to manage, to subvert the purposes and to corrupt the administration of the independent agencies of the Federal Government.

This is not forthright government. Honest government is not achieved by the simple assembling of eminent men to play on a so-called "team." Honest government is achieved by faithful execution of the laws enacted by the Congress. When Congress created independent agencies it intended that they should be independent, in fact as well as name. Congress did not intend those agencies to become subordinate divisions of the Bureau of the Budget nor the organization at the White House. These agencies, usually headed by boards or commissions, were set apart from the old-line departments of the executive establishment deliberately. Their isolation was intended to shelter them from the pressures of partisan politics. The bills of divorcement were not accidentally contrived. In each case the nature of their responsibilities was such that in the judgment of the Congress it appeared to be essential that these specific agencies should be insulated from the shifts in partisan fortunes reflected in the quadrennial elections. The statutes creating the major independent agencies are not alike. Nor is there necessarily any similarity in the tasks assigned to them. Some, like the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Federal Power Commission, perform regulatory, quasi-judicial, or quasi-legislative functions. Others, like TVA and AEC, are distinguished by great managerial responsibilities.

Some of the boards and commissions were given long and staggered terms by statute to assure that continuity in program and policy would be unaffected by changes in administration. By statute some boards and commissions are bipartisan. Others are nonpartisan, nonpolitical in composition. The arrangements and the safeguards differ, but in each case the purpose of the Congress was the same. These great independent agencies were intended to be kept out of politics, to discharge the jobs entrusted to them on the basis of law and fact, in fairness to the people their responsibilities affect. That was the clear intention of the Congress, an intention deliberately ignored by this administration. Today we find the independent agencies of Government whirling at the partisan center of Government, the White House, not moving calmly on the political periphery as Congress intended, and as their responsibilities require. We find the men appointed to administer their affairs subservient to the politicians in the Bureau of the Budget and the White House, the almost faceless secretariat who undertake to run the Government in the name of the President of the United States.

This is something new in Federal administration. It is a total change in climate. Only 10 years ago the Atomic Energy Commission was created. The awesome nature of the tasks before it made it clear that its decisions should be unaffected by partisan considerations, and the confidence of the public required evidence of its total separation from political pressure. The requirement was so self-evident that, to the best of my recollection, it caused no particular comment that a Democratic President appointed to the first Commission four Republicans and one man described as an Independent. No Democrat was chosen. No one commented on the political significance of his selections. There was no political significance.

The first Commission was composed of Lilienthal (then an Independent in politics; in 1952 announced his affiliation with the Democratic Party); Strauss, Republican; Pike, Republican; Waymack, Republican; Bacher, Republican (Dr. Bacher was a scientist; his political affiliation is not given in Who's Who; it is stated by his friends that he is a registered Republican).

Those five Commissioners were expected to act not as Republicans, or Democrats, or political independents, but as public servants invested with specific responsibilities under their statute. They were not members of a partisan team. All that is changed. Today it is not rare, it is commonplace in fact, for the press to refer to the AEC Commissioners by partisan tags, to identify the opinions, and the testimony, of Commissioner Murray, for example, as those of the sole Democratic holdover remaining in office, and the Chairman of the Commission is most celebrated for the end runs he attempts on the partisan team of which he is a member. Today the heads of all the independent nonpolitical agencies of Government are expected to be members of a political team, and the plays are called by the Bureau of the Budget in the Office of the President.

Now the Bureau of the Budget has important functions to perform, legitimate functions that are essential to the administration of the executive establishment. But nowhere among its duties can be found the responsibility of managing the independent agencies of Government. Yet that is precisely what the Bureau has undertaken to accomplish under the present administration. That is exactly what was attempted in the case of Dixon-Yates. The illicit exercise of power was the source of the corruption, now acknowledged. There would have been no scandal at all, if at the very beginning the will of Congress had been recognized, if each agency concerned had performed the functions assigned to it by statute, if accountable officials had made the decisions, and the Bureau of the Budget had been restrained in its calculated program of usurpation.

In that one episode—the affair of Dixon-Yates—we can see what has happened to some of our independent agencies of Government during the past 3 years. In that one episode we can see what happens when the Bureau of the Budget and the Office of the President usurp authority, defy the statutes adopted by the Congress, and endeavor to marshal the independent agencies of Government in support of the narrow partisan objective they assume to be desired by the Chief Executive. In that one episode we can observe the methods employed, the devices used. From the history of that one episode we can appraise the understanding or attitude of the President with respect to the place and function of independent agencies in the executive establishment, his comprehension of their statutes and traditions, his concern for their integrity. In that episode with its lengthy public record we are free to judge the ethical standards, the probity, and the wisdom of his advisers. From that one episode the people can consider just how much of the routine of Government safely can be delegated to his subordinates by the President of the United States, just how much compliance with the acts of Congress he has demanded of his agents as they discharge his delegated duties.

Let me make clear that I do not rise to say "we told you so." I am not going to discuss the "Answer of the United States" filed in response to the claim for damages asserted by the private power combine as a consequence of the order of the President that the contract I am discussing should be canceled. Suits for breach of promise are somewhat foreign to my experience. In this, as in other cases, the courts must determine the degree of injury, if any, sustained by castoff favorites. I am concerned with a question of public morality, of administrative probity. I am using Dixon-Yates as a case study of what happens when men attempt to pervert the statutes enacted by the Congress. I am using Dixon-Yates to show what happens when the Bureau of the Budget, and the Office of the President, usurp responsibilities for which other men are accountable under the law. I am using it to show what happens when political considerations are permitted to abrogate statutory obligations, and I am using it to demonstrate how little the actions of his subordinates have reflected the public statements of the President, how long such statements have been used to conceal wrongdoing.

So far as the public was concerned, I suppose, the story of Dixon-Yates began on June 17, 1954. Then the President of the United States, clothed in his constitutional powers as head of the executive establishment, advised by his Attorney General, ordered the AEC, over the objections of a majority of the Commission, to contract with Dixon-Yates to provide a supply of power to deliver to TVA primarily for sale by TVA to the city of Memphis. But there was a story behind the story, and that tale began in early November of 1952 when the State I have the honor in part to represent, the region, and the Nation, read the promise of a candidate who said:

"If I am elected President, TVA will be operated and maintained at maximum efficiency."

What private commitments had been made on his behalf I do not know. What conflicts arose between public and private assurances, I am not aware, but it was early apparent that the President of the United States regarded the future of TVA as a troublesome problem about which he preferred to remain uninformed. The continuity of its efficiency was one of the routine problems delegated to his staff. It is a matter of record that he never conferred with members of the Board of TVA to get the facts. Under the new concept of administration, the President, elected by the people, responsible to them for the execution of the laws enacted by their representatives in Congress, made an exception of those statutes administered by "holdovers." Responsibility for the nonpolitical, nonpartisan agencies of Government was delegated to the politicians, and the men who decide who will see the President failed to recognize that the members of the Board of TVA were not holdovers by chance or political ineptitude, but by deliberate design, because the Congress planned it that way. Their terms of statutory length were specifically intended to provide a new administration with the advantage of advice based on knowledge of the problem of the law, of the facts. The men selected by the President to manage his time refused to recognize that holdovers were simply officials accountable under the law. They were not hostile politicians, nor were they saboteurs. They were men of honor, administering the laws adopted by the Congress. Throughout the Government they were ignored, as the politicians took over the area marked "nonpolitical" by the Congress.

In the case of TVA the responsibility for management appears to have been delegated by the President to Mr. Joseph Dodge, a banker of Detroit, then Director of the Budget. He passed the test of party regularity no doubt, and the more exacting standard of personal compatibility. The weakness of the delegation lay in the fact that Mr. Dodge knew nothing whatsoever about the problem, that he had never taken the special oath required by Congress for that particular job. The rules of the team to which Mr. Dodge was appointed prevented him from consultation with the responsible officials, but happily for his peace of mind he had connections in the world of finance, and there was made available to him "for the payment of expenses only" the services of one Adolph Wenzell, a vice president of First Boston Corp., well known as a private utility financing house, and Mr. Wenzell was secretly established at the Bureau of the Budget to plan the future of TVA, to determine, we are asked to suppose, how the promise of the candidate that "if I am elected President, TVA will be operated and maintained at maximum efficiency," would be honored by the Chief Executive of the Nation. Mr. Wenzell conferred, but not with TVA. There were rounds of conferences and consultations about the future of TVA, consultations with AEC and FPC, with private utility magnates who had fought the TVA for over 20 years. There were no consultations with the men who were charged under the law with responsibility for the agency's management, none with the men who were sworn to uphold the act as it was adopted by the Congress.

And slowly out of all the secret meetings Dixon-Yates was born. With that act the illegal transfer of power was clear. The Bureau of the Budget in the Office of the President had seized in secret the responsibility given by statute to the Board of TVA. With that act, the intention of the Bureau of the Budget under this administration was crystal clear. The Bureau was prepared to nullify the acts of Congress which have created independent agencies of government. The Bureau had assumed control, and in secret from a central point the independent agencies of government were expected to be run. The destruction of one independent agency, TVA, was the objective the team was first required to take, and as it developed one of the consequences was the surrender of the integrity of other independent agencies as their chairmen were ordered into play. The Chairman of the AEC, Admiral Strauss, was on the team. He overrode the objections of a majority of the Commission he heads to play a leading part. The newly appointed Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, Mr. Kuykendall, was assigned a position. The Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission won his letter, and the Attorney General of the United States gave his nod of approval to the assault on TVA. The team was solid, well-trained and coached. Each man was in position behind the then Director of the Budget, Mr. Rowland Hughes, who had succeeded Mr. Dodge, when, on June 15, 1954, Mr. Hughes recommended to the President of the United States that he should assert his constitutional powers as head of the Government and order the Atomic Energy Commission to enter into a contract with Dixon-Yates.

It was Mr. Hughes who had piloted the negotiations to this conclusion. It was Mr. Hughes who deceived the President about the facts in the situation, but there is no record that the President subjected him to serious questioning, and we can assume the Director of the Budget thought he was responding to the President's desires. There is no record in the whole affair to indicate that the President made a searching examination of the facts. There is no suggestion that he was aware, or that he cared if he understood about this gross invasion by one independent agency of the jurisdiction of another. Mr. Hughes may have realized, in small degree, the vulnerability of the arrangement he proposed. Adroitly he inserted a concluding sentence in his memorandum, a sentence intended to insulate the President against the doubts which might be stimulated by public discussion of the contract so secretly negotiated.

He wrote in this final sentence of his memorandum to the President:

"Hearings are scheduled for the very near future in the Congress, at which Admiral Strauss and his staff will explain the terms of the proposal prior to actually entering into the contract. These hearings, if held, will undoubtedly bring out further orations about the TVA."

Well, Mr. Hughes was right. There was some oratory. In the hearing room and in this Chamber the illegality and the unwisdom of the contract was debated at considerable length. But Mr. Hughes was correct in the judgment about the effect on the President. The oratory which he had taken pains to discount in advance had no influence at the White House, and during the debate a deluge of misinformation about the TVA, a barrage of vicious attack, flowed in a steady stream to the Senate from the Bureau of the Budget, and from AEC. The "team" was hard at work, its confidence unshaken.

Our arguments were ineffective here, the Congress adjourned, and plans for Dixon-Yates went forward at the White House, at the Atomic Energy Commission, in the Securities and Exchange Commission, all coordinated under the watchful eye of the Director of the Budget. Plans went forward, but problems multiplied too.

By mid-August the President felt obliged to advise the press that the entire record of the Dixon-Yates negotiations would be made public. He appeared to believe that such a promise of "full disclosure" would give the people confidence in the probity of the whole proceeding, a confidence somewhat shaken by that time. Partial and selected disclosure was considered adequate by his subordinates, however, and the record shows that the public promise of the President was not respected by the subordinates to whom he delegated performance. Months later it was discovered that on order from the Bureau of the Budget, the name of Wenzell had been stricken from the chronologies of events made public. The President had spoken to the people to reassure them. But the Bureau of the Budget had spoken to AEC. In August, of course, no one outside the "team" knew there was this significant deletion. No one could contrast the public statement of the President with the private performance of his aides. No one but members of the team knew about Mr. Wenzell, and they were silent. His function as the architect of TVA's destruction was a secret within the inner circle. His participation in the Dixon-Yates was hidden.

In August of 1954 little was known of the steps by which the President had been led to make this calamitous decision. The partial record released in response to the direction of the President outlined only a part of the history. Before the whole story was revealed there had to be hearings before committees of the Congress, repetitive and wearying, as official after official refused to answer questions on the grounds of his confidential relation to the White House. There had to be hearings before the SEC on questions raised by the State of Tennessee and the distributors having contracts to purchase power from TVA. Long and tedious sessions were endured before the facts were developed. If the controversy was reported to the President, we may assume that the legal issues raised, the discussion of equities involved, the questions of probity presented were all explained away as the "oratory" so sagely predicted by the infallible Mr. Hughes.

But the slow disclosure of the truth was under way, and at length the name of Wenzell was added to the lengthening roster of personnel involved in Dixon-Yates. The public first heard of Mr. Wenzell, long of First Boston and late of the Bureau of the Budget, when on February 18, 1955, a Senator rose in his place in this Chamber. The distinguished senior Senator from Alabama, Mr. HILL, first brought to the attention of the Congress and the public notice of Mr. Wenzell's participation in the affair. The Senator corresponded with Mr. Hughes about it in an effort to get the facts, and his later testimony revealed that the Director of the Budget had discussed the matter with the President and that he had advised the Chief Executive that the charges of the Senator from Alabama were not based on fact. They were probably described by Mr. Hughes as more "TVA oratory" for the President to ignore.

The explanation of the presence of Mr. Wenzell offered to the Senator from Alabama by Mr. Hughes underestimated the sagacity and the knowledge of his inquirer. Mr. Hughes advanced the peculiar explanation that Mr. Wenzell had been employed as a consultant by Mr. Dodge to study TVA's methods of cost allocation and accounting. That was all. Now the Senator from Alabama knew, if Mr. Hughes and Mr. Dodge did not, that a study of TVA's accounting procedures did not require the importation of an investment banker from New York. He knew that under the law TVA's power accounts are kept according to standards prescribed for utilities by the Federal Power Commission, that they are subject to annual audit by the General Accounting Office, and that they have been widely praised by persons not necessarily fully approving of the program entrusted to TVA by the Congress to manage. The recent Director of Internal Revenue, T. Coleman Andrews, for example, testified before a committee of the Congress when as a member of the General Accounting Office staff he was in charge of TVA's annual audit. He said:

"TVA probably has the finest accounting system in the entire Government and probably one of the best accounting systems in the entire world. It is an excellent system. There is no private enterprise in this country that has any better."

This devious explanation for the presence of Mr. Wenzell in the Bureau of the Budget was not good enough for the Senator from Alabama. It was not good enough for the senior Senator from Tennessee, who later summoned the banker to testify before the committee over which he presided, and before whom the outline of the story was finally revealed. It was not good enough for anyone with an inquiring mind, or a reasonable fund of relevant information.

It was good enough for the President of the United States, however, although it was indicated in correspondence between Mr. Dodge and Mr. Wenzell, later presented to the Senate committee, that the President had known about the presence of Mr. Wenzell in the Bureau, that he had read and commended his written report. If he had in fact read the lengthy document, he knew that it was no report of accounting matters. It was a charter of dismemberment for TVA. But the explanation given by Mr. Hughes to the Senator from Alabama was repeated by the President 4 months later. And even later when general understanding of the role of Mr. Wenzell was fairly clear, a record of a conference with the press reveals this final reference to Mr. Wenzell:

"Question. Mr. President, on the basis of what you have been told about the role of Adolphe Wenzell in this Dixon-Yates contract, do you regard that role as proper?

"Answer. Indeed, yes." (From the President's press conference, July 6, 1955. New York Times, July 7, 1955.)

Apparently the President had not been told enough about the activities of his subordinate to form a reasoned judgment, and he was too complacent and indifferent to find out for himself.

It is true that the President was deceived by his advisers, but it is just as true that the deception was easy to accomplish because he was so ill-informed and indifferent to the basic problems. If the basic issue had been recognized he would never have suffered the humiliating consequences he must now endure. He would never have so belatedly discovered that the contract he personally ordered in his capacity as head of the Government was conceived in fraud, that it was illegal in execution, and that its real objectives were concealed. He would never have intervened as he did, with a personal letter to "Dear Stub", the chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, to demand a "waiver" of the statutory period for consideration, a "waiver" that the Department of Justice of the United States now admits the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy could not legally grant. He would never have signed a letter incorporating in its text the long familiar contentions of the private power lobby, which has for more than 20 years tried to nullify the acts of Congress creating TVA. If the President had understood the issue he would never have presented Mr. Wenzell to the public in the guise of a consultant employed in connection with a study of bookkeeping problems. He would not have told the public that the banker's role was "proper." If the President had understood the issue he would not have permitted the grave questions raised by responsible officials to be dismissed as "oratory" by his aides.

It is true, as I have said, that the President was misled by the advisers he had selected. It is true that at the time they presented a united front. In July of 1954 the President told the people through the press that the Attorney General had advised him of his right to order AEC to enter into the contract over the objection of a majority of the Commission. In October the records of his conferences disclose the limitations of his information but he assured the public that the Federal Power Commmission considered Dixon-Yates a proper contract, and further, as justification for his decision, the President remarked that the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission "was at the focal point of making this contract," and added that he "couldn't think of any man in Government whom he trusts more as to his integrity, his commonsense and his business acumen."

This is an extraordinary concept of the responsibility of the President, who was willing to substitute the "commonsense and business acumen" of Admiral Strauss for the provisions of statutes enacted by the Congress. The President should have been aware, if Admiral Strauss was not, that his good opinion of the admiral's "business acumen" endowed the latter with no right to use the prestige of the great agency he heads to promote the scheme hatched in the Bureau of the Budget to destroy the TVA. The President should have been aware of that.

The power of the President to decide is a solemn power. It is a lonely grant of authority. And when the power is exercised without concern to know the facts, or without the will to understand the issues, then the power to decide is a frightening responsibility. The basic question in Dixon-Yates was not the propriety of a specific contract. That was collateral. The basic issue was a question of administration integrity, not the provisions of an agreement. The basic question raised related to the faithful execution of statutes enacted by the Congress, execution based on understanding of the statutes' purposes. The President of the United States should have known then that by these recommendations the Director of the Budget was usurping the responsibilities assigned by Congress to other and accountable officials. The President should have known then what the Department of Justice now admits, that the contract proposed for AEC to sign was not within the subject matter assigned to AEC by Congress.

This secret and illicit assumption of power by the Office of the President is at the heart of the scandal of Dixon-Yates. The President failed to understand that the independent agencies of Government, the nonpolitical boards and commissions, are not to be managed from the White House or the Bureau of the Budget. He has failed to comprehend that it is essential for them to remain outside the arena where partisan issues are fought. If he had made this clear to his aides there would have been no problem. There would have been no "team" play required. The head of the Securities and Exchange Commission would never have been ordered by Mr. Sherman Adams, sometimes described as Deputy President of the United States, to adjourn a hearing so that the testimony of Mr. Wenzell might be postponed lest his statements influence action pending in the Congress. The whole shameful corrupting business could have been avoided if the President had understood and accepted the acts of Congress which require a special place in the executive establishment for the agencies which report to him, to the Congress, and to the people, as independent agencies of Government.

It is time for the Congress to speak up about this disturbing development. The court will determine the equity of the claim advanced by Dixon and Yates. The President must decide what to do about his faithless advisers. The Congress itself must speak out in defense of the integrity of these agencies it has created. They are captive now to politicians, through control by the Bureau of the Budget. This is a matter of equal concern to both sides of the aisle. It is as important to Republicans as to Democrats that probity of administration be guaranteed in the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Power Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the TVA, AEC, and all the others. It is a responsibility of the office of the President to preserve their independence, to protect them from political invasion, to shield them from the special interests who would destroy or corrupt them. It is as important to one party as another to know that the men who decide are the men who are accountable under the statutes they administer, that they are not subject to manipulation by the Bureau of the Budget, nor the Assistant to the President.

The Congress cannot delegate its responsibilities to speak, to protest, the responsimility of its Members to interpret the record for the people.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1956

(Legislative day of Monday, July 16, 1956)

The Senate met at 9:30 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Father of all who art above all and through all and in all without whom life has no spiritual source, no divine meaning or destiny but with whom there is power for the present and hope for the future, we seek Thee as our fathers before us have sought Thee in every generation and who by faith were led over frowning peaks to the pleasant valleys and still waters beyond—so lead us on, for Thou only art our guide and deliverer, our rock and our refuge.

Now that the sands of another session have almost run out we acknowledge that at best we have been but unprofitable servants. Into Thy holy keeping we commit ourselves and all that has been said and done here in sincerity of purpose. Wilt Thou bless and strengthen all that within these hallowed walls has been worthily spoken and done as these servants of the peoples' choice have followed flickering lights in a darkened hour. Pardon and overrule in Thy wisdom what has been done unworthily or left undone or done amiss. And now as to another chapter of the Nation's life there is about to be written "The End," may the Lord bless you and keep you—may the Lord make his face to shine upon you and be gracious unto you—may the Lord lift up the light of his countenance upon you and give you peace—peace in your own hearts, peace in this dear land where still burns freedom's holy light—peace throughout all the earth to men of good will now and evermore. We ask it in the Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. CLEMENTS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, July 25, 1956, was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States submitting a nomination was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of G. Lewis Jones, of the District of Columbia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Tunisia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

G. Lewis Jones, of the District of Columbia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Tunisia.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], from the Committee on Armed Services, I report a group of flag and general officers for appointment and promotion in the Army and Navy. Included in this group is the nomination of Capt. Chester C. Ward to be Judge Advocate General of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of 4 years; Brig. Gen. George William Hickman, Jr., for appointment as the Assistant Judge Advocate General of the Army in the rank of major general; Maj. Gen. Ridgely Gaither for special assignment in the rank of lieutenant general, Col. Charles H. Schilling for appointment as professor of military art and engineering, United States Military Academy, and the appointment in the Regular Army of 18 general officers as well as the promotion and appointment of 19 Reserve commissioned officers of the Army. I ask that these nominations be placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. President, there is a special report filed by the subcommittee which passed on the nomination of Chester C. Ward, which I ask unanimous consent may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar; and, without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The nominations placed on the Executive Calendar are as follows:

Capt. Chester C. Ward, United States Navy, to be Judge Advocate General of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral;

Col. Charles H. Schilling, for appointment as professor of military art and engineering, United States Military Academy;

Brig. Gen. George William Hickman, Jr., United States Army, for appointment as the Assistant Judge Advocate General of the Army, as major general, Regular Army and as major general (temporary), Army of the United States;

Maj. Gen. Ridgely Gaither, Army of the United States (brigadier general, U. S. Army), to be assigned to a position of importance and responsibility designated by the President, in the rank of lieutenant general; and

Maj. Gen. Joseph Howard Harper, and sundry other officers, for appointment in the Regular Army of the United States.

The report, presented by Mr. STENNIS, is as follows:

REPORT OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE APPOINTED TO CONSIDER THE NOMINATION OF CAPT. CHESTER C. WARD TO BE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL OF THE NAVY WITH RANK OF REAR ADMIRAL

On July 6, 1956, the nomination of Capt. Chester C. Ward, United States Navy, to be Judge Advocate General of the Navy with the rank of rear admiral for a term of 4 years was received in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Armed Services. In accordance with the standing rules of the committee, this nomination was not eligible for consideration until 7 days had elapsed following its receipt. On July 19, a subcommittee whose members are the signatories to this report was appointed to consider the nomination. An open hearing at which the Secretary of the Navy testified was conducted on July 20, 1956.

No objections to the nomination of Captain Ward have been received by the committee. There have been no allegations, or even intimations, that Captain Ward is not qualified to fill the position to which he has been nominated. On the contrary, there was testimony that Captain Ward's performance of duty in the Navy has been outstanding, that he is highly regarded in the legal profession, and that his character is unassailable. The subcommittee finds this testimony to be true and correct.

Despite Captain Ward's obvious qualifications and the realization that the authority to appoint a Judge Advocate General of the Navy is vested in the President, the subcommittee has paused before recommending confirmation of the nomination. The hesitation results from the knowledge that a line selection board had, within the last year, recommended for promotion to rear admiral a legal specialist other than the nominee. Of course, there is no requirement of law that the President nominate as the Judge Advocate General the officer picked by a selection board composed of military personnel. On occasions in the past when the committee has inquired into the nonselection of certain officers, representatives of the executive branch have been quick to point out that the selection system has withstood the test of time and that while it may not be without defects, it is the best of all practical methods for selecting from a larger group a limited number of officers who are to be promoted. Acting on these representations, the committee has approved each year literally thousands of nominations that were based on the recommendations of selection boards. Considering that the line selection board picked another officer in preference to Captain Ward, it is somewhat surprising in this instance to observe that the executive branch was unwilling to accept for a statutory office the person selected as best qualified by a board of officers senior to him. We are inclined to believe that such a practice is not good for officer morale, even though we recognize there can be no absolute rule on the subject.

The timing of the nomination is also unusual in that the term of Rear Admiral Ira H. Nunn, the preceding Judge Advocate General, expired on June 18, 1956. The committee was informed that the selection of his successor required such care and deliberation that it was impractical for a nomination to be submitted in sufficient time that there would be no hiatus in the occupancy of this office. It is unfortunate that the selection was delayed.

Notwithstanding the comments above, the subcommittee has had brought to its attention no sound reason for not consenting to the nomination of Captain Ward. While there may have been reasonable expectation that the person recently picked by a selection board would succeed to the position of Judge Advocate General, there is no statutory requirement or other obligation that precludes the President from appointing another person. Although this procedure may create doubts concerning the faith Navy officials and the President have in the selection system, there assuredly is no reflection on Captain Ward's character or ability and the subcommittee recommends that his nomination be reported favorably to the Senate.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I also report, from the Committee on Armed Services, a group of 215 appointments in the Navy and Naval Reserve in the grade of captain and below and a group of 147 promotions in the Regular Army in the grade of colonel and below. All of these names have already appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so to save the expense of printing on the Executive Calendar I ask unanimous consent that they be ordered to lie on the Vice President's desk for the information of any Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations will lie on the Vice President's desk, as requested by the Senator from Mississippi.

If there be no further reports of committees, the nominations on the Executive Calendar will be stated.

UNITED NATIONS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Stanley C. Allyn to be a representative of the United States of America to the ninth session of the general conference of the UNESCO.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining nominations to the United Nations be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William M. Rountree to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations to the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations to the Mississippi River Commission be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified immediately of the nominations confirmed today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday, the Senate is to proceed to the consideration of Calendar 2838, H. R. 12080, the ominibus rivers and harbors bill. I see the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] on the floor, and he is ready to proceed with the bill.

First, however, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Arizona for the purpose of making an insertion in the RECORD, and that the time be not charged to either side.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CHARGE OF "GIVEAWAY" IN CONNECTION WITH THE NATION'S NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I have spoken out several times on the use of the big doubt technique, which is being employed by opponents of the Eisenhower administration to plant seeds of doubt with the public that there is some sort of giveaway of our natural resources. Anyone acquainted with the true facts knows this is not true, but one of the problems seems to be a lack of knowledge concerning the facts.

For this reason, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have appear in the RECORD at this point a tabulation on the national wildlife management system, approved by the Bureau of Land Management on June 6, 1956. I commend the reading of this to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, as it explodes the giveaway charges and exposes them as a fallacy—another example of the big doubt technique.

I also ask unanimous consent that an article entitled "Grants Pass Editor Debunks Al Sarena Giveaway Charge" be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the tabulation and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABULATION ON NATIONAL WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT SYSTEM APPROVED BY BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT ON JUNE 6, 1956

The national wildlife management system is made up of approximately 17 refuges and 1 million acres of federally owned land either administered or supervised by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service. These lands are divided into three categories, which are: (1) Wildlife refuges, or those areas managed for the primary purpose of wildlife protection and propaganda; (2) game ranges, or areas where wildlife management may be only one of several uses, such as grazing and mineral development, and where the Fish and Wildlife shares jurisdiction with another Federal agency; and (3) cooperative units, or areas still owned by the Federal Government but which are managed for wildlife and other purposes by the States under certain conditions stipulated by the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Oil and gas leasing on such lands has been authorized since passage of the Mineral Leasing Act in 1920.

Since 1920 there has been a total of 612 leases granted on lands embraced by the national wildlife management system.

Seven such leases were granted between 1920 and 1947.

A total of 270 was granted between 1947 and January 20, 1953, when the present administration took office.

Three hundred and thirty-five oil and gas leases have been issued since January 30, 1953.

This clearly illustrated that: (1) It is incorrect to charge that this administration opened up the national wildlife areas to oil and gas leasing, since intensive development of these areas for oil and gas purposes was begun in 1947 and continued through 1952; (2) oil and gas leasing has been fairly constant during the past 9 years, with no sudden acceleration of activity in any given period; and (3) the Department of the Interior has for many years been carrying out the intent of Congress by permitting, where feasible, oil and gas development on the national wildlife management areas.

If, for the purposes of discussion, one were to consider wildlife refuges alone, disregarding game ranges and cooperative units, here is what the record shows:

A total of 37 oil and gas leases issued from 1920 to this date.

Thirteen such leases issued between 1947 and January 20, 1953, when the present administration took office.

Seventeen such leases issued between January 20, 1953, and this date.

On game ranges this administration has issued 251 oil and gas leases. The previous administration issued 241, beginning in 1947.

The cooperative unit total show 67 leases issued by this administration, 16 by the previous administration, beginning in 1947.

Outstanding leases

	Wildlife refuges	Game ranges	Cooperative lands	Total
1920 to 1932	6			6

GRANTS PASS EDITOR DEBUNKS AL SARENA GIVEAWAY CHARGE

(By Frank Streeter in Grants Pass Courier)

If the issuance of patents for the 23 mining claims of Al Sarena Mines, Inc., in Jackson County was the monumental giveaway of national resources claimed by United States Senator RICHARD NEUBERGER and his cohorts in Congress, then the Democrats proposed to give away twice as much as the Republicans.

The first paragraph of the congressional committee's majority report—adopted exactly on party lines states:

"Since receiving its patent from the Interior Department, Al Sarena Mines, Inc., has not mined 1 cupful of ore from the national forest land conveyed to it. Since receiving its patent from the Interior Department, however, Al Sarena Mines, Inc., has cut more than 2 million board-feet of timber from this former national forest land."

On Wednesday, the editor of this newspaper asked the two resident stockholders of Al Sarena, H. P. and C. H. McDonald, about this committee statement.

We were informed—and the men executed a sworn affidavit attesting the truth of their statement—that they did cut some 2 million board-feet during the calendar year of 1954, after receiving their patent February 11 of that year.

However, they stated in their affidavit, more than two-thirds of that timber came from the eight claims to which the Truman Democratic administration conceded them patent rights.

The remaining less than one-third of the cut came from 3 of the 15 disputed claims, none from 12 of the claims they were supposed to have sought title to for the sole purpose of "mining" timber.

The entire cash receipts for the cut was $24,000, some $16,000 from the undisputed claims and some $8,000 from 3 of the remaining 15.

The cash was used, primarily, to pay debts contracted during the long fight to obtain patents and to pay taxes to Jackson County, they added.

They have "mined" neither timber nor ore since the calendar year of 1954, they said, because of lack of capital. However, they have done considerable work on the property during the period.

So much for the alleged giveaway of timber.

Our readers also should keep in mind the fact that the filing dates on the various claims range from 1897 to 1939, long before the timber on them had any market value.

The 1872 mining law, in effect when the patents were issued, gave both mineral and surface rights with the patent. It provided what showing the claim owner must make to warrant a patent.

Al Sarena Mines, Inc., was incorporated in 1935, purchased some 21 claims held by others and filed some additional claims of its own.

The property contains gold, silver, lead, and zinc, among other minerals. The cost of obtaining those ores is a problem the owners have been seeking to meet, plus securing of needed capital for development.

There are a 100-ton pilot mill, bunkhouses, assay laboratory, messhall, toolshed, diesel-electric power facilities and heavy investment in access roads, etc., with more than a mile of tunnels and underground workings.

In the face of the record, Senator NEUBERGER and his political cohorts have insisted that the McDonalds are not interested in mining and have been devoting their efforts since 1935 to setting up a phony mining record for the real intent of grabbing a batch of Federal timber. In other words, in 1939 and subsequently, the McDonalds must have been sufficiently clairvoyant to know that the timber stand on the claims eventually would have substantial value.

The big-shot politicians who have seriously set about—at huge Government expense—creating this impression in the minds of the public must think they are dealing with morons.

The cost of the so-called Al Sarena congressional investigation runs into many more thousands of dollars, far more than the value of the timber on the claims, including the portion already harvested or still standing.

The McDonalds believe they have a mining property that one day will be valuable. Perhaps they have been bitten by the same bug that makes hundreds upon hundreds of the mining fraternity work and starve and dig and dig in search of the bonanza they firmly believe lies just around the corner.

Who can say they are wrong? Federal mining policies initiated during the New Deal regime of the late Harold Ickes all but ruined the domestic mining industry, especially in the production of gold.

We have talked with many a miner in this area who hangs on in the belief that there will be a change.

What may be too costly an operation today may become a source of substantial profit in another day.

Finally, Oscar Chapman, over a 4-year period, never did reject the applications for any of the patents. His solicitor merely ordered that they be kept on ice.

A lawyer friend of Chapman offered to represent the McDonalds in their fight for patents, his terms being $2,000 in cash and $8,000 more if the patents were granted. Acceptance of that proposition might have thawed out the ice.

We have charged repeatedly that Senator NEUBERGER has deliberately attempted to mislead the public, for political reasons, as to the circumstances surrounding the Al Sarena mines matter.

We have offered to demonstrate that our charges are well-founded by debating the matter with him in public here or in Medford. NEUBERGER's reply to a local political supporter was that he was not interested in such a debate because the editor of this newspaper is not a public official.

NEUBERGER thus demonstrates that his interest in Al Sarena is purely political and not for the purpose of acquainting the public with the facts.

A newspaperman does not need to be a public official to assemble facts on a subject of public importance.

The willingness of this writer to face Senator NEUBERGER before the people of southern Oregon in a discussion of the Al Sarena case still stands.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement I have prepared on the Department of the Interior.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

One should realize that the Interior Department will always be the subject of controversy. That is because there are inherent conflicts in the development and preservation of natural resources. Things that appear important in the eyes of one group seem utterly unimportant, and perhaps harmful, to an equally dedicated group in another field.

Whatever is done, therefore, will be wrong in the eyes of some people, and since most of these groups are organized with paid secretaries and elaborate propaganda facilities, no matter how some of the controversies over resources are resolved, there will be loud complaint from somebody.

For instance, Interior is charged with the development of irrigation works and hydroelectric power on many of our streams. If you don't build the dam you are failing to develop our natural resources. If you do build it the holding back of the water is apt to be destructive of the fishing interests downstream, or, as in the Northwest, it may prevent the fish from going upstream to spawn.

If water is held back behind dams for summer irrigation uses, the holding it back obviously interferes with the the normal flow of the stream and with the vested rights of downstream landowners.

The Department can't flood a canyon to hold back water for hydroelectrc or irrigation purposes without affecting the natural scenery, possibly covering up some minerals, and doing an injury to wildlife.

If the Department tries to hold wildlife refuges completely inviolate, then the oil will be drained out from under some of them by adjacent wells, and the Department will be criticized for the loss of the oil resources. If oil drilling in the refuge is permitted, the wildlife people will scream that it is destructive of wildlife.

The Department is the protector of migratory birds, but when ducks by the thousands settle over the lands of farmers, it has to make the decisions as to whether it will permit the farmers to be ruined or will face up to the accusation that it is permitting the destruction of ducks.

The Department is the guardian of Indian rights. If Indian land is needed to build a resource project, the Department is confronted with the unpleasant alternative of recommending a fair price for the Indian lands, which may be so high as to render the project infeasible, or of violating its statutory responsibility to its Indian wards.

So, whatever is done, you will probably be told that it is being done wrongly according to some group, and this charge will of course be amplified by the opposing political party.

Furthermore, the fundamental political philosophy of this administration is materially different from the preceding administration, which had the undoubted tendency of centralizing all power and authority in Washington and of keeping minute Federal control of all public lands, minerals, water, and other resources under the strict control of Federal bureaucracy.

The magnitude of the Interior Department operation is, indeed, vast. It reduces to absurdity the loud hue and cry that has been raised by smear artists and other political opponents of the administration over a few areas of discontent.

Interior is one of the largest of the Government departments. It has about 50,000 employees, scattered all the way from the Aleutian Islands through Alaska, Guam, the Pacific Islands, to Samoa, all across the United States, to the Virgin Islands.

Interior is composed of 14 separate bureaus and agencies, many of which are major.

They comprise the Bureau of Land Management, controlling 468 million acres of public lands, 178 million in the United States and 290 million in Alaska; the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the welfare of 400,000 Indians; the whole National Parks and Monuments System, abou^ 200 of them; the government of our Territories, Alaska, Guam, Samoa, and the Pacific and Virgin Islands; the Fish and Wildlife Service; the Geological Survey; the Bureau of Mines; the Bureau of Reclamation; the Bonneville Power Administration; the Southwestern Power Administration and Southeastern Power Administration, the marketing agencies of all Federal public power, except in the Tennessee Valley.

It has the responsibility of the whole minerals program of the United States and of the electric industry for defense purposes.

Any one of these agencies has enough achievements to more than take the time allotted here. To enumerate a very few things:

It has inaugurated a vast program of Indian education, putting 14,000 more Indian children in schools than were there before and releasing hundreds of competent Indians from Federal wardship.

It has received about $275 million of income from bonus bids for oil leases on offshore lands in the Gulfs of Mexico and California, which it has leased for oil under the provisions of the so-called Tidelands bill passed last year by Congress.

Contrary to popular conception, it has greatly enlarged the areas of the national parks. It is sponsoring mission 66 for the further development of the National Park System, almost doubling the visitor facilities in the national parks.

It has created more wildlife refuges than we evere had before. Contrary to present political accusations, its regulations restrict oil drilling and other invasions of the wildlife refuges more than did those of the preceding administration.

It has carried forward programs for the seeding and development of western public lands.

It is carrying forward a great program for the desalting of water, which bids hope of ultimate success in resolutionizing great arid areas of the world.

It is active in the program of study of weather modification (cloud seeding) to precipitate rain.

It helped originate and is sponsoring President Eisenhower's program for the nationwide development of water resources, to be participated in not only by the Federal Government but by the States, cities, and local people.

It is sponsoring numerous hydroelectric power developments in partnership with public agencies and private individuals. Its program in this connection of allowing other levels of Government and private individuals to become partners in these developments will save literally hundreds of millions of dollars of Federal investment, taking that load off from the Federal taxpayers and permitting the capital to be supplied by the savings of people who are ready to supply it.

It is continuing a program for the development of irrigation projects throughout the West. Contrary to current political propaganda, there have been several new starts and developments of water and irrigation projects in the West, and legislation authorizing the upper Colorado project has now become law. It provides for a monumental hydro development, comparable to the Hoover Dam.

This administration has reinstituted the philosophy under which the country was originally developed, of permitting private individuals and local government units to develop and to manage natural resources, so long as their management is not harmful to the national welfare.

It is following the philosophy of Lincoln, when he said, "In all that the people can individually do for themselves, Government ought not to interfere," and, "The object of government is to do for the people what needs to be done but which they cannot by individual effort do at all or not so well."

It is following the philosophy of Jefferson, when he said, "If Washington were to tell us when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want for bread."

And it does not believe, as the previous administration believed for 20 years, that all wisdom is necessarily confined to the District of Columbia.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Chair lays before the Senate Calendar No. 2838, H. R. 12080, which will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill, H. R. 12080, authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with amendments.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes on the bill to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KERR. One of the items in the Omnibus Rivers and Harbors and Flood Control bill is the Millwood Reservoir and Alternate Reservoirs, Little River, Okla. and Ark.

I wish to call attention to the Senate that there is contained in the hearings on this item testimony and endorsement by the Corps of Engineers. There was also before the committee information from the Arkansas-White-Red Basins Inter-Agency Committee Report, dealing with the seven upstream dams which are a part of the project to modify the Millwood Dam. The Arkansas-White-Red Basins Inter-Agency Committee has for its chairman the district engineer of the southwest division of the Corps of Engineers at Dallas. The committee has on its membership representatives of the governors of 8 States and 5 Federal agencies.

Mr. President, it is my great hope that the development of the water resources of the Little River, Okla. and Ark., complies substantially with the recommendations made in volume F, Red River Basin below Denison Dam, of the report of the Arkansas-White-Red Basins Committee, 1955, from which the above-mentioned material is a part. It will be noted, by examination of this report, that the agencies making the study found that hydroelectric power and municipal water supplies were a very substantial, in fact, a major part of the benefits accruing to this development.

The seven tributary reservoirs would have an installed capacity of 205,000 kilowatts and an annual output of 375 million kilowatt hours. The water is of an excellent quality and on the basis of minimum mean daily flow of 747 cubic feet per second, the equivalent water supply would be 483 million gallons per day. However, by regulation, at least 1 billion gallons per day of excellent quality water can easily be developed for municipal and industrial purposes.

Flood control storage for the seven reservoirs is 1,361,000 acre-feet, which is the equivalent of 11.3 inches runoff over the drainage area above the reservoirs.

Mr. President, we must utilize the maximum potential of dam sites to bring about a full utilization of the water resources of this area. Water has become the prime raw material for industrial development. Hydroelectric power is the twin which makes possible full industrial development.

It is for these reasons that I ask that the report of the Arkansas-White-Red Basins Inter-Agency Committee, relative to the potential development of the Little River, be placed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROJECT USES

Flood control: The individual reservoirs in the plan would have controlled the maximum flood of record at their respective dam sites except for Sherwood (Narrows) and Broken Bow which would have controlled the second flood of record. The seven reservoirs of the Little River Multiple-Purpose plan would prevent about 76 percent of the average annual flood losses in the Little River Basin below the dam sites to the upper limits of the authorized Millwood Reservoir. The seven reservoirs would have reduced the peak discharge of the maximum flood of record (April 1945) at the authorized Millwood dam site from 125,000 cubic feet per second to 99,200 cubic feet per second and the peak stages from 268.5 mean sea level, to 267.0 feet mean sea level. Flood protection afforded on tributaries below the respective dam sites is shown in the following tabulation:

Reservoir	Stream	Percent of flood losses
Mountain Fork (Sherwood and Broken Bow).	Mountain Fork	84
Pine Creek	Little River (between dam site and mouth of Glover Creek).	89
Lukfata	Glover Creek	63
DeQueen	Rolling Fork	87
Gillham	Cossatot	63
Dierks	Saline	71

Power: Each power project is planned to operate in conjunction with other projects of the Little River System and Denison Reservoir. In most cases, the critical hydroperiod for the Little River Basin occurred at a different time than the Denison critical hydroperiod. This allows for diversity of stream flows and is mutually beneficial to both the Little River projects and Denison Reservoir.

The Sherwood project with an installed capacity of 50,000 kilowatts would have an annual power output of 88.2 million kilowatt-hours. The maximum capacity at minimum head would be 50,000 kilowatts.

The Broken Bow project with an installed capacity of 75,000 kilowatts would have an annual power output of 127.9 million kilowatt hours. The maximum capability at minimum head would be 75,000 kilowatts.

The Pine Creek Project with an installed capacity of 15,000 kilowatts would have an annual power output of 44 million kilowatt hours. The maximum capability at minimum head would be 14,900 kilowatts.

The Gillham Project with an installed capacity of 25,000 kilowatts would have an annual power output of 45.5 million kilowatt hours. The maximum capability at minimum head would be 14,900 kilowatts.

The Lukfata Project with an installed capacity of 20,000 kilowatts would have an annual power output of 37.2 million kilowatt hours. The maximum capability at minimum head would be 17,400 kilowatts.

The DeQueen project with an installed capacity of 13,000 kilowatts would have an annual power output of 20.5 million kilowatt hours. The maximum capability at minimum head would be 11,200 kilowatts.

The Dierks project with an installed capacity of 7,000 kilowatts would have an annual power output of 11.6 million kilowatt hours. The maximum capability at minimum head would be 6,300 kilowatts.

Water supply: In the Little River Basin both surface water and ground water are used for supplying water needs. The present use of domestic and industrial water in the basin is about 3 million gallons per day. It is probable that future use of water from this basin will have little relationship to the present use. The Little River watershed is a forested, mountainous area in which lumbering is the principal industry. These factors in themselves would indicate a small future water use, but there are other factors which make it possible that future water use will be great. These factors are that the chemical quality of water in the Little River is excellent and that the use of water by paper-pulp mills, which are frequently located in the vicinity of forests, could be very large. A demand for this excellent water could develop from outside the basin, possibly as far away as the Dallas, Tex., area. If the water was used for the dilution of waste liquors from paper-pulp mills the use could run as high as 160 million gallons per day for each mill, according to a statement by the Dierks Coal & Lumber Co. It would take only a few such mills to utilize the entire regulated flow of the Little River.

Provision of draw-down storage in the Little River projects for production of hydroelectric power would provide a regulated outflow which would be of a fluctuating nature, because of the necessity of using this power for peaking purposes on the system load. These fluctuations would be severe immediately below the powerplants, but would be considerably dampened during flow through natural pools in the streams. The proposed installed capacity of the powerplants in this basin was based on a system operation in conjunction with the Denison project. During the critical hydroperiod in the Little River Basin the Denison powerplant would have no difficulty in carrying the extra load, so the power installations reflect the ability of the Little River projects to assist with the load during the critical hydroperiod of the Denison project. In connection with outflow from the reservoirs during dry periods, the assumption was made that each project would operate at a rate equal to its installed capacity for at least 5 percent of each day. Under this assumption, data concerning power drawdown storage and average daily outflow during dry periods would be as in the tabulation below. It is these flows upon which the water-supply benefits for the Little River multiple-purpose plan are based.

Reservoir	Power draw-down storage (acre-feet)	Minimum mean daily outflow (cubic feet per second)
Pine Creek	198,000	120
Lukfata	145,000	90
Sherwood (Narrows) Broken Bow	474,000	310
DeQueen	100,000	75

RECREATION AND PUBLIC USE

Mountain Fork (Sherwood and Broken Bow): Opportunity for day-use recreation for the population of eastern McCurtain County is found at Beavers Bend State Park and on the streams and lakes in this area. The nearest existing lake of any size is Lake Texoma, about 90 miles west of the project, where facilities are present for recreational opportunities associated with a large water area.

Broken Bow Reservoir would adequately provide such a lake area for the county and this region of the State. The attendance at the State park (195,146 in 1954) would indicate that a regional attraction for tourist and vacation use has resulted from the facilities and services available. The extension of the park to include a part of the proposed reservoir, with other development of the project, would appreciably supplement the regional attraction.

Sherwood (Narrows) Reservoir would provide additional recreational values for this region through a large water area in a scenic region of Oklahoma. Local needs, in connection with a large lake area, would be satisfied by many sites for day-use activities. This reservoir is proposed to be operated with the Broken Bow Reservoir, which adjoins downstream. The fluctuations of the lake resulting from such operation would encourage permanent installations, such as extensive concessions and organized camps to be developed on the lower Broken Bow project. The two projects, in combination, would be a major recreational resource for the region.

Pine Creek Reservoir: The population of southeast Oklahoma is adequately served for recreational opportunities by Lake Texoma and the streams and forests of the Ouachita Mountains. The Pine Creek Reservoir would be of importance, with the other considered projects of the Little River Basin, in a regional lake area which would serve three adjoining States. A lake of 11,500 acres in a scenic area will have considerable value in providing recreational attraction for State and out-of-State visitors.

Lukfata Reservoir: The Lukfata Reservoir would be of importance, with the other considered projects of the Little River Basin, in a regional lake area which would serve three adjoining States. The lake impounded by Lukfata Reservoir is in an area of high recreational potential. The other projects of the basin would be of greater individual importance in providing opportunities for recreation; however, this project will be of value by itself and in the systems of reservoirs in providing a regional recreational area.

DeQueen and Gillham and Dierks Reservoirs: The opportunity for day-use recreation serving the sparse rural population and small communities of eastern McCurtain County, Okla., and Sevier County, Ark., is obtained from existing streams, forest areas, and an Oklahoma State park. The nearest water areas of any size and with available facilities are Lake Texoma, approximately 150 miles west, and Lake Sam Greeson, 75 miles east. The visitor attraction of Beavers Bend (195,146 visitors in 1954) indicates the recreational potential of this area and the needs which the proposed reservoir may satisfy beyond that for the local population. The DeQueen, Gillham, and Dierks Reservoirs would provide important recreational values for this region through the creation of large lake areas in a scenic region of Arkansas.

4. Interrelationship with other projects and programs—scope of hydrologic investigations—survey scope.

EFFECTS OF PROJECT OPERATIONS

Flood control: The 7 reservoirs operating in conjunction with Millwood Reservoir and the Red River projects of Hugo, Boswell, and Denison Reservoirs would have reduced the peak stage of the maximum flood of record at the Fulton, Ark., gage (April 1945), located on the Red River about 3 miles below the mouth of the Little River, from 37.4 feet to 27.4 feet (0.4 foot above bankful), and the peak discharge from 276,000 cubic feet per second to 132,000 cubic feet per second.

Power: When power is generated at Sherwood, the average discharge from the reservoir during the Denison critical hydroperiod would be 826 cubic feet per second. This discharge would provide a regulated inflow into Broken Bow Reservoir in excess of the inflow during the same critical hydroperiod at Broken Bow, and would insure a minimum power potential at the Broken Bow plant of about 11,250 kilowatts.

CORRELATION WITH OTHER PROJECTS AND PROGRAMS

Other than drainage improvements and land-treatment measures there are no other projects or programs proposed in the Little River Basin. The effect of the seven-reservoir plan operated alone and in conjunction with Millwood Reservoir and other authorized projects is discussed above. The frequency of flooding with the Little River Reservoirs operating has not been determined; however, preliminary considerations indicate that frequency of flooding would be reduced sufficiently to make drainage feasible on Glover Creek below Lukfata Reservoir, on Mountain Fork River below Broken Bow Reservoir and in the reach of Little River immediately below Pine Creek Reservoir. It is considered that the frequency of flooding would not be sufficiently reduced to make drainage feasible in that reach of the Little River immediately above the mouth of Mountain Fork River. Operation of the reservoirs should be coordinated with the adopted flood-forecasting service for overall water management of the basin.

CORRELATION WITH WATER REGULATORY LAWS

No investigation has been made to determine the interrelationship of established water rights under the laws of the States of Oklahoma and Arkansas, and the operation of the multiple-purpose plan.

INTERRELATIONSHIP WITH OTHER FUNCTIONS

Low flows: The flow records at gaging stations in the Little River Basin show that some periods of no flow have occurred during the 20-year study period. There is no conservation storage provided in the seven-reservoir system other than that proposed for power purposes, but it is intended to make the power releases available for domestic and industrial uses.

MINERALS

Pine Creek Reservoir: No known mineral deposits of present or potential economic importance exist within the reservoir site. The Oklahoma Geological Survey reports gravel deposits having an estimated reserve of 150,000 cubic yards are present in the SE¼SE¼ of sec. 9, SW¼NW¼ of sec. 15, and NW¼NE¼ of sec. 16, T. 5 S., R. 21 E., McCurtain County. These deposits lie slightly above the proposed shoreline of the reservoir. These deposits were not examined by Federal Bureau of Mines engineers.

Lukfata Reservoir: The Lukfata Reservoir will not affect any known mineral resources.

MOUNTAIN FORK PROJECT

Sherwood Reservoir: Veins containing lead, zinc, and copper minerals have been prospected in the vicinity of Watson, adjacent to the east side of the reservoir site. None of the deposits has proved to be of economic importance.

Shale has been produced from deposits within the reservoir site for use in road surfacing. A plentiful supply of this shale is available in the area surrounding the proposed reservoir. No other mineral resource of potential value is known to exist in and adjacent to the reservoir site.

Broken Bow Reservoir: Outcrops of shale, sandstone, chert and novaculite cross the reservoir site. The novaculite adjacent to the east edge of the reservoir site contains some manganese deposits that have been worked sporadically on a small scale. The proposed reservoir would have no adverse effects on these deposits.

DeQueen Reservoir: Several inactive zinc-lead-copper mines and prospects are situated in or adjacent to the reservoir site. One of the mines, the Bellah in secs. 27 and 28, T. 7 S., R. 32 W., and one or more prospects will be inundated by the proposed reservoir. The Bellah mine was worked during the Civil War as a lead mine and later as a zinc mine intermittently until 1912. Production data are not recorded, but reports indicate that the mine was developed by several shafts and ore was mined above two of the levels driven from the main shaft. The mine workings have been inaccessible for many years so that evaluation of the property relative to remaining mineral resources is not possible. Prior to construction of the dam, the mineralized zone should be tested laterally and to depth for possible extensions of ore deposition. The Davis mine, in the NW¼ sec. 10, T. 7 S., R. 32 W., is adjacent to the north end of the reservoir site. The mine was worked sporadically from 1842 until 1918. Recorded production was 2,000 tons of lead-zinc ore. The property will not be affected by the reservoir.

Three inactive antimony mines are situated adjacent to the proposed reservoir and two prospects are within the reservoir site. The two prospects, both of which will be inundated, are the Hankins and the Lignitz, in the SE¼NE¼ and the SW¼NE¼ sec. 26, T. 7 S., R. 32 W., respectively. There is no tangible evidence that either of the prospects disclosed mineralization of potential economic value. The three mines are east of the reservoir site in secs. 19 and 20, T. 7 S., R. 31 W. The Otto mine has been the chief producer of the three. It was reopened in 1951 for exploration under a D. M. E. A. contract, but was inactive in 1952 and 1953. The other two mines, both of which have yielded small tonnages of antimony ore, are the Brewer and the Valley.

Gillham Reservoir: Mineral resources of economic importance have not been noted in the reservoir site. In the vicinity of the proposed reservoir, a small tonnage of antimony ore has been produced from a property in sec. 6, T. 7 S., R. 30 W., about a mile south of the dam site; and quartz crystals are found occasionally in plowed fields in the N½ sec. 27, T. 5 S., R. 30 W.

Dierks Reservoir: The reservoir site contains no known mineral resources of economic importance. Some prospecting for copper ore has been reported in sec. 16, T. 7 S., R. 29 W., but there is no evidence that an ore discovery was ever made in the locality.

5. ECONOMIC EVALUATION

A summary of monetary costs and benefits is shown in the table.

Fish and wildlife aspects

The United States Fish and Wildlife Service and the State game and fish department state: The project would flood out some (see list below) of the finest fishing streams in Oklahoma and Arkansas, replacing a small-mouth bass fishery of exceedingly high value with a type of fishing common in the vicinity. A need does not exist in the area for additional opportunities for lake or reservoir fishing.

Reservoirs:	Miles of streams
Pine Creek	14
Lukfata	16
Mountain Fork:
Sherwood	19
Broken Bow	20
DeQueen	6
Gillham	13
Dierks	6

There are only four sizable streams in the entire State of Oklahoma which furnish this high quality type of fishing and one of these has been dammed and many miles of stream fishing eliminated. Projects presently proposed in the Little River Basin would eliminate large portions of the remaining three streams in Oklahoma.

The mission of fish and wildlife administration is to provide qualitative and quantitative fishing and hunting opportunities for the public. This involves the achievement of diversification in fishable and huntable species and the concomitant variations in methods of harvest which the public demands. This stream and the accompanying streamside habitat provide much needed diversification and thereby occupy an extremely important position in the State fish and wildlife resource picture.

Considering the absence of any needs for additional opportunities for lake fishing, the drawing of fishermen from existing and authorized and previously recommended reservoirs, and the quality of fishery that would be destroyed, only negative fishery benefits could be assigned to these reservoirs.

Many acres (see list below) of habitat of value to upland game, big game, and fur animals would be destroyed by inundation in the reservoir areas. The reservoir sites occupy an important part of the deer habitat, and its destruction would further increase the critical need for more big game hunting. The annual influx of 10,000 or more deer hunters into the Kiamichi Mountains for a short open season indicates the importance of this type of hunting within the area.

Operation of the reservoirs would render it of minimum use for waterfowl as little or no foods would be produced in the steep-sided, fluctuating impoundment. Such minor benefits would be more than offset by the removal of many acres (see list below) of excellent waterfowl habitat from the maximum zone of flooding in the lower Little River Valley as a result of flood-control operation of the reservoirs.

Reservoir	Acres of forest game loss	Acres of upland game, big game and fur animals habitat loss	Acres of waterfowl habitat loss
Pine Creek	----------	14,600	8,300
Lukfata	----------	4,700	9,100
Mountain Fork:
Sherwood	----------	15,100	5,800
Broken Bow	----------	13,300
DeQueen	2,800	5,500	3,000
Gillham	2,300	6,900	2,300
Dierks	3,400	3,800	3,400

The Tulsa district Corps of Engineers indicates that based on past experience the project would provide greatly increased fish and wildlife utilization as compared to the use made of the preimpoundment area.

The conservation, maintenance, and management of fish and wildlife as a means of natural resource development of the reservoir areas is one of the desirable functions of the project. To accomplish this, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service and the Oklahoma Game and Fish Department propose construction of an afterbay below the reservoirs in order that a constant flow of water (see list below) may be released into the stream at all times, except during flood periods. The United States Fish and Wildlife Service and the Arkansas Game and Fish Department propose minimum releases of water to provide for a flow at all times below the dams, of the specified amount (see list below), or the natural inflow of the reservoir, whichever is the lesser. To further accomplish this purpose, it is provided that lands are to be furnished to the appropriate State game and fish department for game-management purposes. These lands should be purchased, initially developed, and after developments are established placed under wildlife management by the State game and fish department. These measures would serve to compensate in part or whole for the loss of fish and wildlife habitat.

6. Basis for arriving at scale of development selected:

The reservoirs of the Little River Multiple-Purpose Plan are considered to be adaptable for development of flood control and power projects and would be operated as a system for flood protection in the Little River Basin and on Red River below the mouth of Little River. The scale of development is based on prime power releases at each of the 7 reservoirs operated as a system for the critical dry period from July 1938 to January 1941, inclusive, for power storage, and the flood-control storages are based on studies of the 3 major floods of record in the Little River Basin with the 7 reservoirs operated as a system. These studies indicate the flood-control storages equivalent to about 11 inches of runoff are desirable in each of the reservoirs.

7. Repayment and cost allocation.

8. Other considerations.

9. Additional investigations required:

The investigations that have been made are considered adequate for the purpose of project evaluation. However, prior to authorization, review of economic data and of plans and cost estimates would be required. Other features that would need additional work include: coordination of the potential power production with that of other projects; investigation of recreation, fish, and wildlife, mosquito control, pollution, minerals and archeological aspects; investigation of water-supply needs and possible solutions, including source and quality; and investigation of ability and attitude of local interests toward meeting requirements for local participation. A thorough study will be needed of hydroelectric power operation of this project and other Little River projects as part of a widespread system in the AWR area to insure increase in benefits due to diversity in flow. Also, to be investigated would be the economic aspects of using water for production of power and later withdrawing it from the stream for water supply or of allocating definite storage in the reservoirs for water supply.

The plan presented in this evaluation statement is subject to modification upon completion of further studies of water resources development in the Little River Basin. Present indications are that hydroelectric power, under current criteria for economic analysis, should not be included in the initial development, but should be included in the long-range plan. These studies also show that Broken Bow and Gillham appear to be the more favorable units for flood control and water supply.

Mr. KERR. I yield back the remainder of my 5 minutes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1956 may well represent a new milepost in development of the seaborne commerce of the State of Oregon. The Senate Public Works Committee deserves commendation and appreciation for the forward-looking program of water resource improvement which the bill encompasses. I particularly thank the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR].

Of especial importance to the economic well-being of the people of Oregon is the provision which was made for authorization of a deep-water harbor at Yaquina Bay on the Oregon coast. My colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], deserves great credit for the untiring effort he has given in support of the Yaquina Bay project during the various hearings before engineering boards and before committees. His leadership has brought forth a real accomplishment. It was my pleasure to offer the motion, which the committee accepted, for adoption of the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors which calls for deepening the channel entrance to a depth of 40 feet and improving the vast and roomy inside channel to a depth of 30 feet.

The $19,800,000 harbor improvement project has long been sought by officials of the ports of Newport and Toledo, Oreg., by many commercial interests and local residents. Furthermore, establishment of a deep-water harbor at Yaquina Bay is of far-reaching importance to the adjacent territory which has great potential for economic expansion. Provision of adequate deep-water harbor facilities at Yaquina Bay is the key to unlocking vast development.

The shipping potential of the Oregon seacoast is far from fully developed, and the establishment of facilities at Yaquina Bay for the handling of deep-draft vessels is a logical step in tapping the resources of the area. The Yaquina Bay region has a considerable supply of merchantable timber. Business interests have indicated faith in the future of the area by planning investments which will create many job opportunities. The opening of Yaquina Bay to large seagoing ships will give added impetus to the area's prospects for growth and development.

Deepwater facilities at Yaquina Bay have collateral benefits in providing a port of refuge and a possible base for future American naval operations. Completion of the harbor works at Yaquina Bay will provide the only deep-draft channel on the Oregon seacoast between the mouth of the Columbia and Coos Bay, a distance of 250 miles. In the future, coastal shipping threatened by adverse weather or other difficulties can find refuge at Yaquina Bay. In addition, the mountainous terrain surrounding the harbor offers distinct defense advantages for naval craft, while still permitting nearby access to the open sea.

Development of good, deep-draft shipping facilities has long been a matter of vital necessity to this area of the Oregon coast, an area otherwise handicapped by transportation deficiencies and isolated from the commercial opportunities afforded it by the vast timber resources surrounding it.

The Yaquina Bay Harbor development project will open new horizons for the development of Oregon. I am proud to have been privileged to participate, with my distinguished senior colleague [Mr. MORSE], in working toward this goal. It is a goal of economic prosperity for the middle reaches of Oregon's seacoast and seaboard.

Mr. President, at the appropriate time I intend to offer an amendment to the bill now pending, when the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma is ready.

I now yield to the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ].

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, it is my purpose to make a statement on the bill which is now before the Senate.

This is a combined omnibus river and harbor and flood-control bill, title I dealing with river and harbor authorizations, and title II dealing with flood-control authorizations. The last general authorization bill was the act approved September 3, 1954. The Committee on Public Works of the House of Representatives held extensive hearings on many river and harbor, beach-erosion, and flood-control projects, including some multiple-purpose projects, modifications of projects, additional basin authorizations, and pending preliminary examinations and surveys. The Corps of Engineers, Department of the Army, testified on all the items contained in the bill. Local interests and Members of the Congress were afforded full opportunity to present their views on the matters under consideration.

H. R. 12080 is a comprehensive bill to carry forward these important programs for development and improvement of the rivers and harbors of our Nation, for protection of our citizens against the ravages of floodwaters, and for the general development of the Nation's water resources. The report of the Committee on Public Works of the House of Representatives—House Report 2639, 84th Congress—contains a full discussion of the principles incorporated in the formulation of H. R. 12080, and a description of the projects included therein.

The Committee on Public Works of the Senate has thoroughly considered the provisions of the bill as passed by the House and finds itself in substantial accord with the provisions adopted by that body. In addition, the committee has held hearings on other projects which were proposed for consideration subsequent to the close of the House hearings. Those considered fully justified for authorization at this time have been included in the bill.

This report contains descriptions of all projects and modifications recommended by the committee and tabulations listing under separate titles the projects as passed by the House and those recommended by the Senate committee.

The river and harbor and flood-control construction programs have been progressing satisfactorily since the end of World War II. Comprehensive authorizations have been made periodically to keep the programs moving forward in balance. Additional authorizations are believed necessary at this time to continue the unified basin water resources developments now in progress, to round out basin programs where changing conditions have shown the necessity for extensions of modifications, and to provide for individual projects found to be necessary and justified. The authorizations contained in the bill are the minimum amounts required for uninterrupted progress for the next 3 years.

These public-works programs contemplate full coordination with other related programs to produce the ultimate economic utilization and development of our water resources, and will contribute materially to the economic well-being of the Nation. In addition, these programs constitute a backlog of economically justified improvements which can be placed under construction at rates of speed and sequence of locations as may be most suitable to variations of unemployment. They constitute a prudent investment of Federal funds in a permanent improvement known to be sound from an engineering standpoint, and economically feasible as to the benefits that will accrue therefrom. It should also be pointed out that the Federal investment in certain multiple-purpose features in projects included in the bill will be returned to the Treasury.

The committee believes that this legislation is urgently needed for the protection of lives and property, for the improvement of the Nation's harbors and waterways, and for the general enhancement of the national economy. Delay would have unfortunate results in retardation of projects, and postponement in realization of the benefits that would result therefrom.

The committee recognizes the necessity for maintaining a balance in these new authorizations with present and prospective future budgetary developments. In order to preserve and strengthen the welfare and economy of the Nation, our water resources development program must be continued, and even increased as rapidly as fiscal requirements will permit. In recommending enactment of this bill, the committee realizes that the total authorizations included therein do not exceed the total amounts included in the last several similar bills when allowance is made for present-day costs.

The estimated cost of the projects reported in this bill (titles I and II) are based on current prices, which in general are those prevailing at the present time. They differ in general from the estimated amounts in the project documents depending upon the date of the document.

The total amount of monetary authorization in this bill, broken down into the major categories, is indicated in the following tabulation:

The committee notes that the House bill contains several projects on which the reports of the Chief of Engineers have not been fully processed and transmitted to Congress, in compliance with established procedures. The committee held hearings on several similar projects and has recommended amendments for including those projects in the bill. Information presented to the committee indicated that the studies on those projects had progressed sufficiently to determine with reasonable accuracy their estimated cost and economic feasibility. These projects are of an emergency nature and their authorization at this time is considered warranted. The committee does not desire, however, to establish a precedent in situations such as these, and believes that complete and full justification of the economic feasibility of these projects should be established before appropriations are made for their construction.

A description of the projects and items recommended as amendments to the bill are included in this report.

TITLE I—RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Federal program for the improvement of the Nation's rivers and harbors is now in its 132d year. During the entire history of this all-important Federal undertaking the work involved in this program has been efficiently and competently supervised by the Corps of Engineers, United States Army. The program has produced the best system of inland waterways to be found anywhere in the world and in addition has opened for all forms of navigation about 300 harbors.

This program includes about 2,300 navigation projects with an estimated cost of $4.3 billion, of which appropriations to date have totaled about $2.1 billion, leaving $2.2 billion to complete the authorized navigation work. Inclusion of the multiple-purpose projects that serve navigation purposes would increase the estimated cost to $6.5 billion, of which $3.2 billion has been appropriated to date. In addition, about $1.6 billion has been appropriated by the Congress for the maintenance and operation of these improvements. About 50 percent of the funds appropriated has been for the inland and intracoastal waterways, 40 percent for seacoast harbors, and about 10 percent for the Great Lakes.

The importance of the system of inland waterways is indicated by the vast annual increase in the tonnage and in the variety of commodities that move over these waterways. For each ton of freight that uses the improved inland waterways there is returned to the Nation as a general benefit a saving in transportation costs. While these savings may be considered as a prime factor in the use of the system of inland waterways, another factor just as important is that the improved waterways have to a large extent been responsible for the growth and the development of the interior sectors of the country. Low-cost water transportation has enabled the movement of products from the mines, forests, and the farms to a widespread consuming area. It has also enabled the distribution, at low cost, of semifinished and finished products from industrial communities that have been established on these waterways to the consumer spread over almost the entire Nation. The importance of our improved ports cannot be overemphasized, both in times of peace and in times of national emergencies. The larger ports serve their purposes in national and international commerce. The smaller ports from which the benefits are more of a domestic nature play a very vital part in the economic life of the country. These ports have frequently been constructed in the interests of the fishing industry which serves to supply the Nation with low-cost seafood products, and to serve as harbors of refuge and ports for recreational craft.

The coastal harbors of the United States have been improved under this program to meet the demands of modern, deep-draft, ocean-going commerce. Channel depths of 35 feet prevail in harbors on the Atlantic seaboard and gulf coast and range up to 45 feet in depth as in New York Harbor. On the west coast, harbors and channels from 30 to 40 feet are generally available. There are 20 coastal ports which handle 10 million tons or more of cargo annually. For major coastal harbors, the cost of the Federal improvements, including maintenance and operation, averages less than 4 cents per ton of cargo handled.

The improved connecting channels of the Great Lakes constitute the most important waterways system in this country and perhaps in the world, an importance which will be greatly augmented by the St. Lawrence Seaway now under construction. These harbors and improved channels provide the basic transportation system for the industrial Midwest. At the present time, depths of 21 feet are controlling generally for the Great Lakes harbors and connecting channels. Eleven harbors on the Great Lakes now handle 10 million tons or more annually of the commodities that move over this waterway, and in 1954, a total of 91.2 billion ton-miles of cargo was handled on this system. The cost of Federal improvements of major Great Lakes ports averages about 1½ cents per ton of cargo handled.

The inland and intracoastal waterways which have been improved by the Federal Government have a total length of over 28,000 miles. Much of this length, however, represents shallow-draft channels improved many years ago which are no longer of material importance to commercial navigation. About 80 percent of modern waterborne commerce is carried on 12 waterways with an aggregate length of 5,800 miles. These include such waterways as the Gulf Intracoastal and the lower Mississippi River, with its extension up the Ohio to the Pittsburgh area and up the Illinois River to the Great Lakes system at Chicago. In 1954 traffic on our inland and intracoastal waterway system totaled 82.5 billion ton-miles. These waterways and the improved barges, towboats, and other equipment of modern waterway operators carry commodities of all kinds ranging from crude petroleum to finished automobiles. One modern tank barge will carry almost as much as 100 tank cars normally used in rail traffic. Estimates show that savings in transportation costs which are passed along to the public have been very great and that the system of inland and intracoastal waterways is returning in such benefits about $3 for every Federal dollar expended.

The committee has been impressed by testimony as to the increasing use of larger and more economic vessels. These vessels, with deeper draft, greater lengths and beams, have accelerated the need for progressive modification of the navigation program. The use of these larger and deeper draft carriers will result in eventual betterment of the economy and a lowering of prices to the consuming American public.

This, the committee believes, is the main reason that the navigation survey program should be kept current in order that the improvements can be kept abreast of transportation trends. Since the survey program is the basic source of the entire navigation program, the committee feels that the backlog of surveys assigned by the Congress to the Corps of Engineers should be adequately financed.

The program for beach erosion prevention and shore protection is relatively new in comparison to the navigation program. Federal interest stems back to 1930, when the Beach Erosion Control Board was established and authorized to make studies of this nature in cooperation with the States and other governmental bodies. Half of the costs of these studies is contributed by the sponsoring agency and half by the Federal Government. The scope of the studies as originally authorized was expanded by legislation after 1930, and finally, in 1946, the Federal Government undertook to participate in the construction of the actual works for the protection of shores. Since the program is in its infancy, there are only 45 projects authorized by Congress, and only 11 of these have had construction appropriations. The total Federal cost is about $15.7 million, of which about $3.7 million has been appropriated to date, leaving a balance of $12 million to complete.

TITLE II. FLOOD CONTROL

Title II includes the flood-control projects, project modifications, basin authorization increases, and certain miscellaneous matters, that have been considered, and will provide the basis for a logical and orderly continuation of the national program for flood control throughout the United States and its possessions for the next 3 years. This title also includes project modifications for the great project for the lower Mississippi Valley.

The first Federal flood-control program began on the lower Mississippi River when Federal participation in that project was authorized in 1879. The special flood problems on the Sacramento River were given recognition in the River and Harbor Act of 1917. The national flood-control program had its inception in the Flood Control Act of 1936. The first appropriations under the national program were for fiscal year 1938. It can thus be seen that the program has been under way but 18 years. Included in this period are 5 years during which we were mobilizing and at war, when the civil-works program was necessarily on a maintenance basis only. The committee is impressed with the noteworthy progress which has been made on the flood-control program to date, and considers this bill, including the additional authorizations, a very valuable addition to the overall program.

The basic policy now established by flood-control legislation is that flood control throughout the United States is a proper activity of the Federal Government in cooperation with States and local communities, and that the Federal Government should undertake flood-control improvements or participate in them if such projects are economically justified, and if the lives and social security of the people are otherwise adversely affected. Existing legislation embodied in the 1936 act, as amended by subsequent acts, establishes in some detail the procedures under which the Federal Government can and should participate in flood-control activities. The extent to which local interests should contribute to Federal flood-control work, the manner in which investigations are carried out after congressional authorization and the results reported to Congress, after coordination among the affected States and interested Federal agencies, and the consideration of comprehensive development of water resources in conjunction with flood control are all matters which are governed by law.

It has long been recognized that flood control is merely one of the purposes for which our water resources should be developed. Congress has recognized in past flood-control acts, and there has been incorporated into this bill, full consideration of what the committee believes to be a desirable improvement program for the use and control of our water resources in addition to the specific purpose of flood control. The projects and basin plans included in this bill, in the opinion of the committee, give full weight to the navigational possibilities; the development of hydroelectric power; the conservation of water for municipal, industrial and agricultural uses; the utilization of recreation potentialities in connection with reservoirs; the preservation of fish and wildlife; the abatement of stream pollution; and the provision of improved sanitary facilities. The committee feels that no program for flood control and navigation would be comprehensive or in the best interests of the Nation unless all these factors were considered.

The committee notes that for certain flood-control reservoir projects, the recommended requirements of local cooperation provide for a cash contribution from local interests to compensate for land enhancement values. The committee does not believe this procedure warranted at this time with respect to reservoir projects. It has not been the general policy in the past to require such payments. The benefits are widespread, are not identifiable as they are in local protection projects, and difficulties would be met in their proper assessment against the beneficiaries. The committee has therefore eliminated such requirements from certain projects recommended for inclusion in this bill.

Mr. President, the committee made only two changes in the bill as passed by the House. The authorization for the Connecticut River Basin was increased from $13 million to $19 million to take care of the Mad River Dam and Reservoir project added by the committee, and the Federal cost of the Tombigbee River local protection project was increased by $512,000.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all the committee amendments, together with an amendment I am now submitting for the Des Moines River project in Iowa, in which the two Senators from Iowa and the people of Iowa are deeply interested, be considered as acted upon en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the committee amendments and the amendment now submitted by the Senator from New Mexico are considered and agreed to en bloc.

"SEC. 206. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to recognize the primary responsibilities of the States and local interests in developing water supplies for domestic, municipal, industrial, and other purposes, and that the Federal Government should participate and cooperate with States and local interests in developing such water supplies in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of Federal navigation, flood control, or multiple-purpose projects.

"(b) In carrying out any authorized navigation or flood-control survey, or review investigation, involving improvements which may be useful in developing water supplies, the Corps of Engineers shall consult with the State or States affected and the United States Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, with a view to including in the reports thereon submitted to Congress, plans for the development of water supplies for domestic, municipal, industrial, and other purposes, and such reports shall include the views and recommendations of the States and the United States Public Health Service on the plans for water supply. Features for providing water-supply storage capacity, facilities, or services may be included in any navigation, flood-control, or multiple-purpose project recommended for construction by the Corps of Engineers, subject to the following provisions of this section.

"(c) Before construction of any project including water supply provisions is completed, State or local interests shall agree to pay the costs allocated to water supply. Such costs shall be determined by the Chief of Engineers in such manner that all authorized purposes served by the project shall share equitably in the benefits of multiple-purpose construction. The schedule of payments by States or local interests of such costs may provide either for paying the share of the construction expenditures during construction of the project, plus annual payments for operation, maintenance, and replacement costs as incurred; or for equal annual payments for the construction costs, and interest on the unpaid balance, plus annual payments for operation, maintenance, and replacement costs as incurred: Provided, That the entire amount of the construction costs, including interest during construction, allocated to water supply shall be repaid within the economic life of the project, but in no event to exceed 50 years after the project is first available for the storage of water for any purpose. The interest rate used for purposes of computing interest during construction and interest on the unpaid balance shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, as of the beginning of the fiscal year in which construction is initiated, on the basis of the completed average interest rate payable by the Treasury upon its outstanding marketable public obligations, which are neither due nor callable for redemption for 15 years from date of issue.

"(d) The plans for any authorized navigation, flood control, or multiple purpose project on which construction has not been initiated, or any existing project, may be modified or its operation changed by the Secretary of the Army to provide additional storage capacity, facilities, or services for water supply as he considers reasonable: Provided, That before construction is completed, or in the case of projects under construction or completed, before changes for the benefit of water supply are made in the project, or before operation is modified in the interest of water supply, State or local interests shall agree to pay the costs allocated thereto as provided in subsection c of this section: Provided further, That such modifications which would seriously affect the purposes for which the project was authorized or constructed or which involve major structural or operational changes shall be made only upon the specific authority of Congress.

"(e) The plans for any authorized navigation, flood-control or multiple-purpose project on which construction has not been initiated may be modified to include provisions for future water supply when directed by resolution by the Public Works Committee of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, or when approved by the Secretary of the Army upon recommendation of the Chief of Engineers: Provided, That the cost of such provisions for future water supply shall not be more than 30 percent of the total estimated cost of the project and reasonable assurance is given by States or local interests that the use of the future water supply provided for will begin within not more than 10 years after the time the project is first available for the storage of water for water supply purposes, and that necessary water rights for such use have been or can be obtained: Provided further, That States or local interests indicate a willingness to pay for such water supply in accordance with subsection c above, beginning when the water supply is used, and costs allocated to water supply shall be repaid within the economic life of the project, but not to exceed 50 years after the time the project is first available for the storage of water for water supply purposes: And provided further, That in arriving at the costs to be repaid, the interest charges on the initial cost of provisions for future water supply during the period until the water supply storage is used will not be included, but in no case will the interest-free period exceed 10 years.

"(f) Responsibility for complying with any applicable State law relating to water supply or water use shall rest with the State or local interests contracting to pay the costs allocated to water supply or utilizing the water supply services.

"(g) That part of the second proviso of the first paragraph of section 5 of the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, as amended (33 U. S. C. 701h), pertaining to modification of reservoir projects is hereby repealed, except as to contracts and agreements in force at the date of this act."

"SEC. 207. (a) In order to provide adjustments in the lands or interests in land heretofore acquired for the Grapevine and Garza-Little-Elm Reservoir projects in Texas to conform such acquisition to a lesser estate in lands now being acquired to complete the real-estate requirements of the projects the Secretary of the Army (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary') is authorized to reconvey any such land heretofore acquired to the former owners thereof whenever (1) he shall determine that such land is not required for public purposes, including public recreational use, and (2) he shall have received an application for reconveyance as hereinafter provided: Provided, however, That prior to January 1, 1958, no lands heretofore acquired for the Grapevine Reservoir project lying below elevation 557 feet shall be reconveyed pursuant to this section or revested pursuant to the act of October 21, 1942 (56 Stat. 797).

"(b) Any such reconveyance of any such land or interests shall be made only after the Secretary (1) has given notice, in such manner (including publication) as regulations prescribe to the former owner of such land or interests, and (2) has received an application for the reconveyance of such land or interests from such former owner in such form as he shall by regulation prescribe. Such application shall be made within a period of 90 days following the date of issuance of such notice, but on good cause the Secretary may waive this requirement.

"(c) Any reconveyance of land therein made under this act shall be subject to such exceptions, restrictions, and reservations (including a reservation to the United States of flowage rights) as the Secretary may determine are in the public interest, except that no mineral rights may be reserved in said lands unless the Secretary finds that such reservation is needed for the efficient operation of the reservoir projects designated in this act.

"(d) Any land reconveyed under this act shall be sold for an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the price for which the land was acquired by the United States, adjusted to reflect (1) any increase in the value thereof resulting from improvements made thereon by the United States (the Government shall receive no payment as a result of any enhancement of values resulting from the construction of the reservoir projects specified in subsection (a) of this section), or (2) any decrease in the value thereof resulting from (A) any reservation, exception, restrictions, and condition to which the reconveyance is made subject, and (B) any damage to the land caused by the United States. In addition, the cost of any surveys or boundary markings necessary as an incident of such reconveyance shall be borne by the grantee.

"(e) The requirements of this section shall not be applicable with respect to the disposition of any land, or interest therein, described in subsection (a) if the Secretary shall certify that notice has been given to the former owner of such land or interest as provided in subsection (b) and that no qualified applicant has made timely application for the reconveyance of such land or interest.

"(f) As used in this section the term 'former owner' means the person from whom any land, or interests therein, was acquired by the United States, or if such person is deceased, his spouse, or if such spouse is deceased, his children, or the heirs at law.

"(g) The Secretary of the Army may delegate any authority conferred upon him by this section to any officer or employee of the Department of the Army. Any such officer or employee shall exercise the authority so delegated under rules and regulations approved by the Secretary.

"(h) Any proceeds from reconveyances made under this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

CHAVEZ AMENDMENT

On page 31, after line 12, insert "The project for the Saylorsville Reservoir on the Des Moines River, Idaho, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report dated April 6, 1956, at an estimated cost of $44,500,000;"

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, for myself, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, for himself and other Senators, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 42, to strike out line 21 through line 10 on page 43.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NEUBERGER. How much time do we have, on each side, on amendments to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement provides that the time shall be limited to 1 hour, equally divided.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, at this time I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I believe the bills and committee reports have not yet reached the desks of the Members of the Senate.

The amendment which I have just offered on behalf of my colleague [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], and myself, proposes to strike from the authorization the Bruces Eddy project on the North Fork of the Clearwater River in the State of Idaho. I shall summarize very briefly why I have proposed the deletion of this project.

It would do irreparable damage to natural resources and to wildlife. The Bruces Eddy project is opposed by virtually every outdoor organization in the United States, such as the Izaak Walton League of America, the National Wildlife Federation, the Wilderness Society, the Wildlife Management Institute, the National Parks Association, the Sierra Club, the National Audubon Society, and the Outdoor Writers Association of America. These groups are eager to preserve our natural legacy of resources and grandeur.

These groups are interested in guarding the heritage of the next generation of Americans and future generations yet unborn. The Bruces Eddy project, if constructed, would imperil the feeding grounds and future survival of the largest elk herd remaining in the United States, if not in North America. The dam would probably wipe out a great steelhead trout migration in the Clearwater River system. The Bruces Eddy Dam, and its companion dam, the Penny Cliffs project, would wipe out a considerable portion of the largest unspoiled primitive territory anywhere in our country, within the majestic Selway-Lochsa wilderness area, a region first explored 150 years ago, in 1805, by Meriwether Lewis and William Clark.

Mr. President, I believe these values are worth preserving. I believe they should not be totally despoiled and threatened, just for a limited amount of power and flood-control benefits.

I made a speech in the Senate on June 1, 1955—well over a year ago—predicting that the scenic resources of the Clearwater River watershed would inevitably be imperiled if the full development of the Hells Canyon site were abandoned. I prophesied that such would be the outcome. Unfortunately, my prediction has come true.

I consider it to be significant, and somewhat ironic, that the very Senators who opposed the high Hells Canyon project are now leading the fight for the Bruces Eddy project. Hells Canyon Dam would have provided 3,880,000 acre-feet of storage for flood control. Bruces Eddy Dam will provide only 1,433,000 acre-feet of storage for flood control.

Hells Canyon would have had an installed capacity of hydroelectric power of 800,000 kilowatts. Bruces Eddy will have an installed capacity for hydroelectric power of 240,000 kilowatts.

Hells Canyon would not have destroyed any values pertaining to anadromous fish and wildlife preservation or outdoor recreation. Bruces Eddy will endanger greatly all those values.

For these basic reasons, it is my opinion that the Senate today, and Congress later, should not include in the bill the authorization of the Bruces Eddy project. That is the purpose of the amendment I have offered to the Senate. I hope Senators will see fit to adopt my amendment.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time on this particular amendment, although perhaps I shall use more time after the opponents of the amendment have spoken.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the junior Senator from Oregon. I call the attention of the Senate to page 42, line 21, of the bill, which reads:

> The project for Bruces Eddy Dam and Reservoir on the North Fork of the Clearwater River, Idaho, for flood control, navigation, and other purposes, is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document No. 51, 84th Congress; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $25 million, for partial accomplishment of the project, and the authorization for appropriation for the Columbia River Basin is hereby increased accordingly: Provided, That with respect to any power attributable to such project an equitable proportion of firm power as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, or such portion thereof as may be required from time to time to meet loads under contracts made within this reservation, shall be made available for use in the State of Idaho.

Originally the Senator from Idaho had suggested providing a definite amount of kilowatt power, but the committee decided not to do so, because then every State in the Union would want to have an allotment. We felt that an equitable available amount of power should be provided for Idaho, because it was believed that such a course as affecting Idaho in this instance, and other States in other instances, would be more correct.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, the language of the bill with respect to Bruces Eddy is entirely acceptable to the Senator from Idaho. The reason it was proposed was that the States of Oregon and Washington have refused to ratify a compact relating to the equitable distribution of power. So with respect to a project like Bruces Eddy, it was necessary to include this safeguard.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The committee amendment has already been approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield back his time?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield back my time.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement on this subject. I thought the Senator from Oklahoma was in charge of the time of the proponents of the bill.

Mr. CLEMENTS. How much time does the Senator from Idaho desire?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I should like 6, 8, or 10 minutes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I oppose the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Oregon. I realize he is a great champion of wildlife, that he is qualified not only to represent the interests of his own State of Oregon, but that he presumes the right to reflect the thinking of the people of my State of Idaho.

I regret that the junior Senator from Oregon has injected into this controversy, if it be one, any reference to the Hells Canyon Dam. For the benefit of those who are not familiar with the geography of the particular area, I point out that the proposed Bruces Eddy Dam is 100 miles, approximately, from the site of Hells Canyon. Furthermore, Hells Canyon is on the main Snake River, upstream from the confluence of the Clearwater and the Snake Rivers. Bruces Eddy Dam would be located on the north fork of the Clearwater River.

In the debate on Hells Canyon Dam during the past week I attempted to point out that about 20 reservoirs and dams have been built on the Snake River, as a result of which today almost 3 million acres of arid land have been reclaimed. On the Clearwater River, I do not know of a single dam for flood control or reclamation. The only dam structure is near the city of Lewiston, where a project was built many years ago by the Potlatch Lumber Co.

When the Senator from Oregon says little flood control value benefit will accrue from the proposed Bruces Eddy Dam, he is completely erroneous. The record will show that in the devastating floods of 1948, and even during the past spring, there was always a constant hazard or threat from the floodwaters discharged by the Clearwater River.

I mentioned in the debate the other day that the Clearwater River has three branches which jointly discharge about one-half of all the water carried by the Snake River into the Columbia River at Pasco, Wash.

I concede altruistic motives to the junior Senator from Oregon when he says that throughout the United States the fish and wildlife organizations are opposed to the Clearwater project in northern Idaho, because they want to preserve that great primitive area for the use of the people of the Nation. We in Idaho want the people of the United States, including the sportsmen, to utilize to the fullest the wonderful, magnificent fish and wildlife resources of the Snake River watershed. But we demand the right to utilize our water and power resources.

At the hearing before the Subcommittee on Public Works last week, I testified that about 2 years would be required for the Army engineers, after the authorization of this project, to complete the studies and the design; and that it would be about 2 years from now before a report could be submitted by the Army engineers on the Bruces Eddy project, at which time Congress would have an opportunity to make a determination as to the desirability of constructing that project.

So far as the fish and wildlife values are concerned, I testified also that I desired to cooperate in every way with the great wildlife organizations, even though they reflect the thinking of people in States several thousand, or at least many hundred, miles distant from Idaho.

About a year ago I was successful in having some funds provided to enable the United States Fish and Wildlife Service to initiate studies of fish and wildlife resources in the middle Snake River area, including the Clearwater River watershed. In the present session I was able to get an allocation of $200,000 from the lower Columbia River sanctuary fund for the specific purpose of determining the fish and wildlife values in that section of the great Columbia River Basin.

I emphasize at this time that there is no intent whatsoever on the part of the Senator from Idaho or the persons who are interested in this proposed development to flout the will of the fish and wildlife interests of our State, or even of the other States of the Union.

I want to stress that it will require 2 years to complete the fish and wildlife study. So, 2 years hence, Congress will have an opportunity to make an evaluation of the various aspects from an engineering standpoint and from a flood control and power standpoint, and make an appraisal of the fish and wildlife benefits involved in the proposed Clearwater project development.

Under such conditions, I am positive no effort will be made by anyone to interfere with the interests of the fish and wildlife resources.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The distinguished Senator from Idaho said that opposition comes from outside the State of Idaho. Does the Senator from Idaho regard the Idaho department of fish and game as being inside or outside the State of Idaho?

Mr. DWORSHAK. So far as the Senator from Idaho is concerned, from the experience he has had in observing authorizations of such multipurpose projects, he is fully aware that never is any project proposed that does not provoke some opposition, and the Senator from Idaho knows there is some opposition. I am glad that point has been raised. Possibly the Senator from Idaho does not use the political technique that some Senators, as, for instance, those from the State of Oregon, may use, but the Senator from Idaho certainly is not going to flout the will of the people of the State of Idaho. That is the reason why it will require 2 years to complete the studies. In that interim, those who are making charges that to build the dam would be disruptive of the fish and wildlife resources of that area, will have an opportunity to make an appraisal of the actual facts. Then, in the wisdom of this body, a determination may be made as to what shall be done with the Bruces Eddy project.

AMENDMENT OF ACT OF SEPTEMBER 3, 1954 — UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me momentarily for a unanimous-consent request, because I must leave the Chamber? I have consulted the minority leader and the members of the committee concerned, who are agreeable to it. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair). The proposed unanimous consent-agreement will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That it shall be in order, after the adoption of this agreement, to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 6888, amending the act of September 3, 1954, and that debate on any amendment, motion, or appeal, except a motion to lay on the table, shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the mover of any such amendment or motion and the majority leader: Provided, That in the event the majority leader is in favor of any such amendment or motion, the time in opposition thereto shall be controlled by the minority leader or some Senator designated by him: Provided further, That no amendment that is not germane to the provisions of the said bill shall be received.

Ordered further, That on the question of the final passage of the said bill debate shall be limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the majority and minority leaders: Provided, That the said leaders, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the said bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any amendment, motion, or appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I did not hear the title of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. It is the sheepherders bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that the minority leader [Mr. KNOWLAND] gave me a list of bills he would like to have considered, and the leadership plans to call them up by motion sometime before the session is concluded. So that all Members may be on notice, those measures are:

Calendar No. 2837, Senate bill 4164. That is the bill providing for the appointment of a Federal Highway Administrator. It is an urgent bill. It was reported from the committee of which the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is chairman.

Calendar No. 2608, H. R. 11002. That is a bill to regulate and license pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia.

Calendar No. 2677, H. R. 11554, to amend certain provisions of title XI of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, to facilitate private financing of merchant vessels.

I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to that bill. This was the bill I objected to yesterday, because there was a note on my calendar that the Senator from Delaware wanted to be heard. I think it is another bill in which the Senator from Delaware is interested. As I understand, the Senator from Delaware has no objection to Calendar No. 2677, House bill 11554, being considered. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is correct. The committee adopted an amendment which was agreeable to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I hope the Senator from Delaware will give me a good grade for doing that.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator from Texas read the bill numbers again?

That does not mean only those bills will be scheduled. It does not mean we shall not take up bills on which we have not given notice. But we are going to try to be fair with all Senators. I assure the Members on the minority side that no measure will be taken up unless the majority leader has given advance notice of it. I am going to give every Member as much advance notice as possible. I have read into the RECORD a list of measures which Members on the minority side would like to have considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to ask the Senator from Texas if he referred to Calendar No. 2841.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Calendar No. 8241, H. R. 10624.

There is at the desk unanimous-consent agreements on a bill from the Finance Committee involving an individual veteran. There is also at the desk a unanimous-consent agreement on a bill involving theater admission taxes. We understand there will be no opposition to that bill, and it will be called up.

I should like to inquire of the Chair what other unanimous-consent agreements are at the desk. We just entered into a unanimous-consent agreement with respect to the sheepherders bill. Are there any others? There is an agreement on the depressed areas bill. There will be final passage of that bill. There are five consent agreements altogether.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that none of the time which has been used for this discussion be taken out of the time of my friend, the Senator from Idaho. If he needs any more time, we shall be glad to yield him time. I am very grateful to him for yielding to me, as I have to leave the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator yield the Chair 1 minute so he may ask a question of the Senator from Texas? Was H. R. 4392 on the list read by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Calendar Nos. are 2837, 2608, 2677, and 2841. I do not know the bill numbers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the Senator from Texas.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12080) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER] for himself and other Senators. The Senator from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, again attempting to reply to the question raised by the Senator from Oregon, may I say the Senator from Idaho has no information that there is any opposition to the Bruces Eddy project on the part of the Idaho State Game and Fish Commission; but if there is, this proposal is still logical, because it provides an interim of 2 years for a study of all the fish and wildlife problems, and enables all opponents to come forward during the investigation and present the facts. Many false charges and allegations have been made, and in order to clarify the situation and get the true facts, an authorization is necessary to make it possible for the Congress to give the Army Engineer Corps funds with which to make the study, because the Senator from Oregon knows that without an authorization it is impossible to get any funds for engineering studies.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question, prompted by references during the Hells Canyon debate and during the remarks of the junior Senator from Oregon this morning, to the effect that the Clearwater River is a very important stream for fish migration. The junior Senator from Arizona has fished the streams of Idaho very regularly. In fact, 1 week from today that is what the junior Senator from Arizona intends to be doing in the State of Idaho.

I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether the Clearwater is an important fish migration stream.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The Senator from Idaho believes there is a certain amount of fish migration, especially of steelheads.

In reply to the question the Senator from Arizona has asked, I should like to refer to a letter which I received from General Itschner, Assistant Chief of the Army Engineers, under date of July 6, 1956, wherein the information submitted is that at Lewiston Dam, just a few miles upstream from the confluence of the Clearwater and the Snake, only 33 salmon and only 8,000 steelheads passed up the Clearwater River during the year 1954; and that during the same year 80,000 salmon and 30,000 steelheads passed up the Snake River at Lewiston, just above the confluence with the Clearwater. So it would appear that the lack of accurate information concerning fisheries would support the proposal which is being made at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Idaho has expired.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield 3 additional minutes to me?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I yield 3 additional minutes to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, the representatives of the Army engineers appeared at the hearings last week before the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Works, and urged authorization of this project, which was recommended in April of 1955. The Army engineers pointed out that this project has a benefit-to-cost ratio of 2.1 to 1. On several occasions General Itschner has pointed out that the Bruces Eddy is one of the best, if not the best undeveloped sites in the Columbia River Basin.

Mr. President, on that basis I think the Senate should endorse the recommendations submitted by General Itschner and the authorization contained in the omnibus bill, which was reported with only one opposition vote, insofar as the Bruces Eddy project is concerned.

I can see no reason why this project should be related in any way to the recent controversy over Hells Canyon. Again, I say that Bruces Eddy Dam would be located 100 miles from the site of the proposed Hells Canyon Dam, and is on an entirely different river watershed. In 1948, when the devastating floods occurred, much of the water which was discharged by the Clearwater River resulted in the loss of many lives in the Portland area.

Mr. DWORSHAK subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed with my remarks on the Neuberger amendment a letter addressed to me, dated July 6, 1956, from Maj. Gen. E. C. Itschner, Assistant Chief of Engineers for civil works.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1956.

Hon. H. C. DWORSHAK,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DWORSHAK: In accordance with your request of July 3, 1956, I am pleased to supply the following information on distribution of fish and other wildlife in relation to dams in the upper Columbia and Snake River Basins, developed in connection with the joint fisheries engineering research program of the Corps of Engineers and the Federal and State fish and wildlife agencies.

Distributional studies showing the number of fish involved at each dam site have indicated that the number of salmon entering the Snake River and proceeding past Ice Harbor dam site and spawning in the pool area and upstream from that point is less than previously conceived. The inclosed tabulation shows the number of fish passing the various sites and the periods for which records are available.

Former runs of salmon in the Clearwater River have been largely blocked since 1927 by the Washington Water Power dam near the mouth of the river at Lewiston. Fishways installed in the dam at the time of its construction operated satisfactorily during periods when water was being passed through the spillway, but were not effective when water was diverted through the powerhouse. Recent attempts by the State of Idaho to restore the runs have met with very little success. An average of only 26 salmon have passed over the dam each year between 1950–53, and observations during 1954 indicated no salmon passing the dam. The river sustains a relatively small run of steelhead trout amounting to approximately 8,000 fish annually during 1950–55. While no specific estimates are available, it is apparent that only a minor portion (probably less than 25 percent) of these fish pass the Bruces Eddy dam site.

While successful means of passing young fish downstream at high dams remains to be developed, the problems are currently being studied. In forwarding the report on Bruces Eddy and Penny Cliffs Dams, the Chief of Engineers stated that upon recommendation of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, and within the limits of estimates given for fish-passing facilities, fish hatcheries may be constructed in connection with either or both of the projects in order to replace actual loss of spawning grounds caused by construction of the dams, and that such hatcheries may be transferred to the State of Idaho without reimbursement, such hatcheries to be constructed without limitation as to the removal of downstream obstructions.

Both of the above dams, and particularly Bruces Eddy, are within the winter range used by the elk herd of the region, although only a very small percentage of that winter range lies within the proposed reservoirs. The portion of the river to be inundated by the reservoirs has very steep sides with little forage for animal life in the bottom of the valleys. Most of the browse is located on benches practically all of which are above the pool elevation. The major winter feeding areas are situated on side draws of the river system upstream from the reservoir areas. A cooperative big-game census by the United States Forest Service and the Idaho Department of Fish and Game during the most critical winter in recent years (1948–49) indicated that about 100 elk were within the 9.5-mile length of the upper reaches of the Bruces Eddy Reservoir area. Construction of the dams should be accompanied by a concerted effort on the part of the responsible agencies to regulate the elk and to improve the supply of available winter feed.

I trust that this will serve your purpose and that you will feel free to call upon us for any further information we may have at any time.

Sincerely yours,

E. C. ITSCHNER,
Major General, United States Army;
Assistant Chief of Engineers for Civil Works.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Idaho has again expired.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Idaho desire to have further time?

Mr. DWORSHAK. Not at this time, Mr. President.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield 1 minute to me?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho that I am familiar with this project, inasmuch as I was there with a group from the Public Works Committee a few years ago. I was certainly most impressed with the project, and I am pleased to know that at this time the Public Works Committee has included it in the authorization. I am very much in favor of the project, and I appreciate very much the substance of the remarks the Senator from Idaho has made with reference to the merits of the project.

Mr. DWORSHAK. I thank the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, how much time remains to the opponents of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I should like to point out that the Senator from Idaho knows quite as much about the geography of the Columbia River watershed as I do. When he said the Clearwater dams were not tied in with the proposed Hells Canyon dam, because they were 100 miles away, he is of the knowledge, just as I am, that the water which comes down the Snake River and the water which comes down the Clearwater River, all flows to the ocean through the same conduit. Therefore, they are tied in together.

I was interested in the question which was asked by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], who has been such a leader in river-development projects, both in his own region and elsewhere in the Nation. I call to the attention of the Senator from Mississippi the fact that the Senator from Idaho opposed the Hells Canyon project, which all of us know is in the same watershed as the Clearwater projects. However, the Hells Canyon project would have a storage capacity of 3,880,000 acre-feet, whereas Bruces Eddy Dam would have a storage capacity of only 1,433,000 acre-feet. Furthermore, the Hells Canyon project would have an installed capacity of 800,000 kilowatts, whereas the Bruces Eddy project would have an installed capacity of only 240,000 kilowatts.

Furthermore, to my knowledge, not one leader of a conservation group opposed the Hells Canyon project. What is more, Dr. Ira N. Gabrielson, who in my opinion is the greatest biologist in the United States today, the founder of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, a lifelong Republican, and the brother of a former chairman of the Republican National Committee, came out in favor of the Hells Canyon project, although he said that all his life he had been cool toward public power. But Dr. Gabrielson said publicly that he realized the abandonment of the flood-control benefits at Hells Canyon would force, inevitably, the construction of dams on the Clearwater River and on the Salmon River, where the greatest fish migrations in the country would be damaged, and where North America's largest surviving elk herd could be wiped out for loss of feed.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for a question?

Mr. NEUBERGER. First, I wish to read a brief statement; and then I shall yield to the Senator from Idaho, just as he very courteously yielded to me.

Mr. President, let me say that the Idaho Department of Fish and Game has had this to say:

> The program of dam construction, as proposed by the Corps of Engineers for the Clearwater River drainage, would most certainly block and annihilate all runs of salmon and steelhead above the point of construction. In fact, it might well be that the salmon and steelhead will be almost completely annihilated from the entire Clearwater River drainage, since there is only a very small portion of the river below the proposed dam sites that is suitable for spawning purposes.

Those are the words of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

Now I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. During the intervening 2 years, the State of Idaho Fish and Game Department and other alleged opponents of this project will have ample opportunity to present their views; and the matter to which the Senator from Oregon has referred will be taken into consideration.

I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether it is not true that not a single gallon of the water coming down the Clearwater River is in the Snake River in the vicinity of Hells Canyon Dam. When the Senator from Oregon says they are both parts of the same watershed, that is true; but the Snake River drains the southern half of Idaho, and the Clearwater drains the northern section of Idaho, and has no relationship whatever to the Snake River, because the confluence is at Lewiston, Idaho.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I beg to disagree with the distinguished Senator from Idaho. There is every bit of relationship. The whole flood danger in the Pacfic Northwest in the Columbia Basin is on the lower Columbia, from The Dalles to the sea; and both the Clearwater and the Snake Rivers contribute their flow to go down the lower Columbia from The Dalles to the sea. So there is a definite relationship. These rivers are part of the same system.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield further to me?

Mr. NEUBERGER. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Certainly the Senator from Oregon does not contend, does he, that any dam could be built upon the Snake River, upstream from Lewiston, to control the flood waters of the Clearwater River watershed?

Mr. NEUBERGER. No. I agree; the Senator from Idaho is correct as to that.

I make the point of the inconsistency of the Senator from Idaho, who was perfectly willing to abandon the nearly 4 million acre-feet of storage for flood control purposes at the Hells Canyon Dam site, but now on the floor of the Senate he is advocating that 1½ million acre-feet of storage be provided at Bruces Eddy, to the irreparable damage of some of the greatest wildlife elk herds and fish migrations in North America.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The Senator from Oregon certainly wants to be reasonable. Is he not willing to permit these studies to be made during the 2-year period, so that when the facts are submitted the Congress will be enabled to make a determination as to whether the dam should be constructed?

Mr. NEUBERGER. Does the Senator from Idaho claim that studies cannot be made unless there is an authorization? So far as Hells Canyon was concerned, the Senator from Idaho never made such a contention. Why did not the Senator favor an authorization at Hells Canyon?

Mr. DWORSHAK. There is this great difference: The Bureau of Reclamation and the Army Engineer Corps have jointly spent $1½ million for engineering studies with respect to the proposed Hells Canyon Dam, whereas on the Clearwater, without any authorization the Army Engineer Corps has advised that it will be unable to spend a single dollar during the next few years on engineering studies with respect to the Bruces Eddy Dam.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Would the Senator be satisfied with an authorization in this bill for a study of the wildlife values, the outdoor and recreational values, and the fisheries values of the Clearwater River watershed, without an authorization for actual construction of the dam?

Mr. DWORSHAK. The Senator from Idaho is not willing to accept that proposal, because for several years efforts have been made to get funds to enable the Army Engineer Corps to initiate engineering studies on the Clearwater site, particularly for Bruces Eddy Dam. Unless we authorize this project it will be impossible to initiate such studies. The Senator from Idaho is unwilling to have our State, with its three great watersheds placed in a deep freeze because people in adjoining States arrogantly assume the responsibility for dictating how the State of Idaho shall develop its power and water resources.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator speaks of a deep freeze. He was willing to put Hells Canyon in a graveyard. The Senator referred to the adjoining States. Hells Canyon is half in our State. The Senator took the leadership in putting it beneath a tombstone.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The Senator from Idaho emphasized only one fact during the recent debate on Hells Canyon, and that was that until such time as the States of Oregon and Washington were willing, in good faith, to ratify a compact covering the distribution of water benefits in the seven States in the basin, the State of Idaho would be unwilling to approve the high Hells Canyon Dam. In the instance of the Clearwater project, now under debate, that is entirely within the State of Idaho, and has no relationship whatsoever, except that it is a flood menace to the lower basin States.

Mr. NEUBERGER. The Senator from Idaho was willing to approve private power dams, which would use the same water. He did not ask for a compact with respect to them.

Mr. DWORSHAK. That is an entirely different matter. The record will show that when any private dam is built, the builders gamble with the money of the sponsors, and there is no possibility of demanding the prior right to use water from upstream sources. Furthermore, any private development on the Snake River within the State of Idaho must comply with the State laws, which give priority to the rights of Idaho to control the use of water within the State.

Mr. MORSE rose.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to obtain the floor in my own right. However, I desire to ask the Senator a question first.

Does not the junior Senator from Oregon find the argument of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] fantastic in regard to the effect of Bruces Eddy upon our whole flood control and storage problem in the Pacific Northwest? The Senator points out, on page 38 of the report, that a short time before the vote on Hells Canyon the Senator from Arizona read a letter from the Governors of the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, as follows:

> If the Congress at this session wants to advance power development of the Pacific Northwest and provide flood-control storage, they should take out the bill bottled up in committee, providing for authorization and construction of Penny Cliffs and Bruces Eddy projects on the Clearwater River.

When they were opposing Hells Canyon these gentlemen, in opposition to what I consider to be the people's interest in their own water resources, were arguing that Bruces Eddy was a substitute, in part, for Hells Canyon. But the Senator from Idaho is taking the opposite position in reference to Bruces Eddy, that, after all, Hells Canyon has nothing whatever to do with Bruces Eddy.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I find that the opponents of Hells Canyon can very conveniently run with the hare or hold with the hounds whenever they desire.

It is quite interesting that the Republican Governors of the three States were so opposed to Hells Canyon, with 800,000 installed kilowatts capacity, and now are so fervently in favor of Bruces Eddy, with only 240,000 installed kilowatts capacity.

Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 16 minutes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I wish to thank Senators for coming in at 9:30. We are hopeful of avoiding a rollcall during the period from 12:30 until 2 o'clock. We are desirous of getting through with this bill so that we can take up the theater-tax bill and certain conference reports.

The Senator from Oklahoma must be at a social-security conference at 11 o'clock.

We can talk indefinitely on the pending bill, but I doubt if we can change the end result. The bill will be passed. Every Senator should have an opportunity to record his views and give full expression to them. However, in so doing, I wish Senators to know of the problem we have during the lunch hour, and the problem which the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma has in connection with the social-security bill. For that reason the Senate convened at 9:30 this morning, even though it did not get away until midnight last night.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, it is with great hesitation that I rise to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER]. I realize his concern with reference to Hells Canyon. I did everything within my power to help him get the Hells Canyon authorization bill passed by the Senate. I thought it should have been passed. I still think it should be passed. But there is no relationship whatsoever between Hells Canyon and Bruces Eddy. Hells Canyon, if built, would be on one branch or tributary of the great Snake River. Bruces Eddy is on another tributary, more than 100 miles away. None of the water impounded in Bruces Eddy would ever reach Hells Canyon, and none of the water impounded in Hells Canyon would ever reach Bruces Eddy. They are just as separate and distinct, and differentiated, as though one were a tributary to the Atlantic and the other a tributary to the Pacific.

The evidence before the committee was that there would be no damage to the wildlife of the area by reason of the Bruces Eddy project. I think the count by the appropriate agency of the Government disclosed either that 7 salmon had gone upstream in 6 years, or 6 salmon had gone upstream in 7 years.

The evidence was that the hunting ground of the elk and the moose, which is rightly a concern of many enlightened people, is many miles—and in my judgment 100 miles—away from this reservoir site.

There is another reason why I am compelled to oppose this amendment. I know of no State which has received more money during the time I have been in Congress for the conservation of its water resources than the great State of Oregon. Mr. President, I have supported every dollar that has been authorized or appropriated to build reservoirs in and for the people of the great State of Oregon. Since I came to the Senate nearly 8 years ago, I do not remember, however, that so much as one dollar has ever been appropriated for a water-conservation project in the State of Idaho. I may be in error about that, but I do not remember one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. KERR. I ask for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KERR. The distinguished Senator from Oregon intimated that the Senator from Idaho should not have opposed the Hells Canyon project. I did not agree with the Senator from Idaho, but Hells Canyon is on the border of Idaho. It is just as much on the border of Idaho as on the border of Oregon. Certainly, the Senator from Idaho had an appropriate interest in Hells Canyon, because it concerned a great reservoir which borders his State and obtains much water from the watersheds within his State.

However, Bruces Eddy is entirely within the State of Idaho. It is at least 100 miles, and perhaps farther, from the closest point in Oregon. I say to the great Senator from Oregon that I do not believe the Senate will consider the protestations of the Senator from Oregon with reference to a project in Idaho, especially when, so far as I know, this is the first great project of this kind the Senator from Idaho and the people of that State have asked Congress to authorize, and is a project which has been approved by the Army engineers for many years.

The Senator from Idaho has gone even further. He has said that it will be 2 years before any money can be appropriated to carry out the authorization. We know that is correct. There will have to be planning money and study money. So far as the construction is concerned, it will be a minimum of 2 years before anything can be done. He has said that if in that time it is made apparent that wildlife and fishlife would be unduly damaged or endangered, he will not push for construction funds. I never saw a fairer attitude. I believe the Senate will be impressed by it.

In my own judgment, fish and wildlife will be helped by the reservoir. In my judgment, sportsmen and recreational facilities will be greatly benefited by the reservoir. When we think of the fact that our good friends from Oregon—and we have all gone all out to help develop the resources of that great State, one of the finest in the Union—have had their State benefit to the great extent I have indicated, it comes with poor grace from a Senator from that great State, which has had so much help in the development of its natural resources by the Federal Government, to oppose a project for the neighboring State of Idaho, which could not possibly adversely affect the State of Oregon and which, so far as I know, is the first one of such appropriations which has been either authorized or considered for authorization by Congress since I came to the Senate nearly 8 years ago.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Like the Senator from Oklahoma, I have devoted many years to trying to help develop the Columbia River Basin. Not once did I ever oppose either the State of Oregon or the State of Washington in their efforts to get their full share for the development of that great basin. As a matter of fact, the people of my State sometimes complain that I vote for a $90 million project on the Columbia, and possibly get no more than $500,000 for the Rio Grande. I try to explain to them that the difference is that the Columbia River is that kind of river. I believe in this instance that my friend from Oregon has not made a case. I hope the Senate will vote down his amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for some questions?

Mr. NEUBERGER. I yield myself 3 minutes so that I may answer questions.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Illinois has visited Lewiston and has gone up the Clearwater River a short way. Of course, he has read the journal of the Lewis and Clark expedition.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Lewis and Clark came down the Clearwater.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes. I found that in the Clearwater there were enormous numbers of what are commonly called salmon, but which perhaps, strictly speaking, should be called steelhead trout. Is that correct?

Mr. NEUBERGER. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that the steelhead trout, in the spawning season, go up the Columbia River and up the Snake River and then up the Clearwater in large numbers?

Mr. NEUBERGER. That is correct; and then up the North Fork, which would be blocked by the Bruces Eddy Dam.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that a dam at Bruces Eddy would be about 500 feet high?

Mr. NEUBERGER. It would be 570 feet high.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would it be possible to devise fish ladders by which the steelhead trout, in carrying out their odyssey of returning from the sea, could return to their original spawning ground?

Mr. NEUBERGER. Thus far, biologists have not been able to devise ladders or other devices which might make it possible for migrating fish to go over a dam that would be as high as the Bruces Eddy Dam. The kind of fish ladders that are used at Bonneville and McNary, for example, are between 70 and 120 feet high.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Therefore it would mean that the movement of the steelhead trout from the sea to the point of their origin would be effectively shut off. Is that correct?

Mr. NEUBERGER. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is there not a difference between tame nature and wild nature; and that while a lake created by a high dam creates tame nature, it also somewhat reduces wild nature?

Mr. NEUBERGER. There are certain migratory fish which will spawn only in running, extremely cold water. An artificial lake, such as is created by a reservoir, completely modifies and changes that condition.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Should we not preserve some of nature's sanctuaries which are wild, and not tame?

Mr. NEUBERGER. We have all too few of them left today.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment. I should like to call my request to the attention of the Senators on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the request for the yeas and nays sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, has all time been consumed?

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the senior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I shall ask for the yeas and nays at the close of my remarks. I will ask the Senate for the courtesy of granting us a yea and nay vote on the amendment. I have always been cooperative when I have been asked to support a request for yeas and nays. I do not know of one time, in my 12 years in the Senate when I have not supported a request for a yea and nay vote. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I want to know whether on this issue the two Senators from Oregon may have the same courtesy extended to them. Very frankly, we want to put our colleagues on record on this issue.

Mr. President, from my almost 12 years in the Senate I know when an issue gets crystallized and gets set, and I also know that sometimes one loses an inning but still wins the game in the long run.

I wish to make three points in my comments on this issue. I am in complete disagreement with the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Oklahoma. In the first place, Idaho does not own the Clearwater River. Oregon does not own the Columbia River.

RIVER BELONGS TO PEOPLE

These two rivers belong to all the people of this country. When we are developing these rivers, we are not developing them for Idaho alone, or for Oregon alone, but for the people of the Nation as a whole.

I never have and I never shall ask for a vote for the development of a project in Oregon for Oregon without benefits to the Nation, on the Columbia River or on any other river. If I did not think it was for the best interests of all the people of the country, I would not ask for its development in the first place.

Mr. President, we hear the Senator from Idaho talk about a compact, as though the people of the United States ought to require that 3 or 5 States get together on the matter of a compact concerning projects on these rivers. I have always taken the position that a compact has nothing to do with the rights of all the American people and their rights in and ownership of navigable streams. These streams do not belong to the States through which they run.

I am not making a provincial argument on this question when I am urging the best and fullest development of the power resources and the water resources of the streams in the Pacific Northwest. I am asking it for the benefit of the people in Oklahoma and in Massachusetts and in every other State of this country.

NOT A FEDERAL PROJECT; A BLIND FOR PARTNERSHIP PROPOSAL

Mr. President, the second point I want to make is that I think I recognize that nothing is going to be done about it today, but we are going to have to come back to this record in view of what I now predict. This is a private utility scheme as made clear by the administration, the Corps of Engineers and the Pacific Northwest Power Corporation.

Mr. President, they have been out for some time, as part of the strategy to scuttle Hells Canyon, to build up support for Bruces Eddy. One need only read the Senate hearings on the Hells Canyon bill (S. 1333) to read that the opponents of the high dam claim that the much smaller Bruces Eddy storage would make up the loss of 3,880,000 acre-feet of storage that high Hells Canyon would provide.

I wish to warn the Senate today that this is also a part of the private utility partnership scheme in this country, to wipe out the people's interest in public power and gradually to build smaller dams and give them over to the private utility companies as partnership dams. Remember what I say here today, because we will come back to it within the next 10 years. Within 10 years from today there will be a great private utility movement in this country to get control of the power now being generated at great public dams in this country. That is their long-time scheme.

Mr. President, I want to say that I am proud to stand here on the floor of the Senate today and oppose Bruces Eddy at this time until greater progress is made in stopping the giving away of our power resources in this country. Now is the time, before we authorize this dam, to make a study of what the program is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I yield 3 more minutes to my colleague.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to say, in the third place, that there is no basis for the argument of the Senator from Idaho. Congress did not authorize a study of Hells Canyon Dam. It has been studied for many years. We ought to have a study not only of Bruces Eddy, but we ought to have a study of it in relationship to the private utility scheme, the long-time scheme they have in mind gradually to take over the power-generating resources of the streams of this country. Bruces Eddy is only the first step; Penny Cliffs is waiting in the wings. Dams on the Salmon River are the logical next step of the administration despite the havoc they would wreak on fish and wildlife resources.

Mr. President, I wish to commend my colleague for his courage and foresight in bringing before the Senate today the effect of Bruces Eddy on the whole conservation program. There is no question about the fact, Mr. President, as to what the experts will say about the effect not only on wildlife but on fishlife, and the great economic interest of the fishing industry in our section of the country. Bruces Eddy is an anticonservation project. I would say to the conservationists across this Nation that they are being driven out by the construction of Bruces Eddy. Steelhead and salmon runs on the Clearwater Forks are doomed to unnecessary destruction. A great wilderness area and elk feeding grounds are at stake. These are irreplaceable resources that are imperiled by high-price, low-power dams.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I would say that this is a straight Federal authorization and has no relationship whatsoever to a partnership plan for any participation by a private utility.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, Cougar Dam is a federally authorized dam. What have we been fighting against for the past several years? The attempt on the part of the administration to make Cougar Dam a partnership dam. The next move will be to get it deauthorized as a Federal project and turn it over to the Idaho Power Co. or some other private utility company. The record is replete with that game, and it is a shell game, and I have no intention of going into that kind of a scheme for the benefit of the private utilities of this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, the Senator knows that the Idaho Power Co. does not operate within that entire area. It is many miles removed.

Mr. MORSE. I know that the Idaho Power Co.——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I should like to use a little time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE].

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if the usual investigation has been made, if witnesses have been heard on the recommendation in the report on H. R. 12080, and if the conclusions in the report represent the conclusions of the committee after the investigation.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

The hearings were held on the House side. They had plenty of time to go into all these projects. We received the bill only 3 or 4 days ago and added some amendments. But the hearings were held on the House side, and the Senate committee is satisfied with the bill.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I should like to say, further, that the Senator from New Mexico has been chairman of the committee longer than has any other Senator since I have been a Member of the Senate, and I have always found his conclusions to be fair and as objective as any could be.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Wall Street Journal of August 24, 1954, reports that the Pacific Northwest Power Co., composed of the 4 giant private utilities of the Pacific Northwest, is investigating building 2 large power and water-storage dams, Penny Cliffs and Bruces Eddy.

That is showing their hand, Mr. President; and we shall live to rue the day if we authorize the Bruces Eddy project so far as the people's interests are concerned.

The administration has made clear that Bruces Eddy is a partnership proposal. Just read the President's budget submitted this year for fiscal 1957 on page 651:

> Participating projects, Corps of Engineers, civil (under proposed legislation, 1957): There is included in the budget for 1957 a supplemental appropriation of $10 million to provide for the Federal share, in cooperation with States, local governments, or private groups, in the development of partnership water resources projects, such as John Day Reservoir, Oregon and Washington, Green Peter Reservoir, Oregon (including White Bridge Reservoir), and Bruces Eddy Reservoir, Idaho. Provision is also made for similar projects which are as yet unspecified.

This is another giveaway not only for a power site but a great fish and wildlife area. The administration's partisan zeal for the private utilities would wash out a great steelhead and salmon spawning area for profit dollars.

Nor is this all. The Corps of Engineers testimony makes it clear that Penny Cliffs, even more destructive of outdoor values, is the next step. This is the bitter and expensive price for the administration's throttling of Hells Canyon.

Bruces Eddy at a cost of $122 million will have power facilities of 240,000 kilowatts; Penny Cliffs will cost $200 million for 292,000 kilowatts. Compare Hells Canyon for $308 million with more water storage and 680 million kilowatts at site with more downstream.

This is the price of a false partnership where the people's resources are handed over for shortsighted exploitation.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I reject the notion, and I think the American people reject the notion, that the vast territory along the Clearwater River belongs to the people of Idaho. Most of this realm is in national forests. It belongs to the people of the United States, just as Crater Lake National Park, in my State of Oregon, belongs to the people of the United States. Congress had before it the Echo Park authorization. Echo Park is wholly within Utah and Colorado, but the people of all the United States rose up in wrath to protect it, and it was not authorized.

I am familiar with the vast Clearwater wilderness. I have ridden through it, I have walked through it, and I have camped in it. I think it is one of the most marvelous regions in our Nation. I believe the people will regret the authorization of Bruces Eddy Dam and Penny Cliffs Dam.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota subsequently said: Mr. President, I have received a number of communications from conservation organizations in my State and elsewhere in support of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Oregon, opposing the authorization of the Bruces Eddy Dam in Idaho. I ask unanimous consent that these telegrams, expressing the opinions of my constituents, be printed in the RECORD at the point just before the vote on the Neuberger amendment.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., July 25, 1956.

The Honorable HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We urge deletion of Bruces Eddy Dam, Idaho, from rivers and harbors omnibus bill, H. R. 12080. This dam would flood out critical big game ranges and block migrations of sea-run fish. Charles H. Callison, Conservation Director, National Wildlife Federation; C. R. Gutermuth, Vice President, Wildlife Management Institute; Mike Hudoba, Conservation Director, Outdoor Writers Association of America; Joe Penfold, National Conservation Director, Izaak Walton League of America; Howard Zahniser, Executive Secretary, Wilderness Society; David R. Brower, Executive Director, Sierra Club; Kenneth D. Morrison, Public Relations, National Audubon Society; Stanley E. Little, Executive Director, National Campers & Hikers Association, Inc.; E. A. T. Jones, Secretary, Idaho Wildlife Federation; Rollin Bowles, President, Oregon Division, Izaak Walton League of America; Bruce Yeager, President, Oregon Wildlife Federation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER] for himself and other Senators. [Putting the question]. The "noes" appear to have it——

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I have some correcting amendments on which I should like to have action taken at this time.

On page 25, line 16, I move to strike out "$1,585,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,073,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senate is working against time, and there are many typographical errors in the printed bill, I ask permission that all the typographical errors be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from New Mexico will send the corrections to the desk, the corrections will be made en bloc.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Very well.

I ask also that after the bill has been passed, it be printed with the Senate amendments numbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 16, after the word "of", it is proposed to strike out "$1,761,000" and insert "$2,936,000."

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I will accept the amendment and take it to conference.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] is agreed to.

All time has been yielded back.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 12080) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. FREAR in the chair) appointed Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. KERR, Mr. GORE, Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania, and Mr. HRUSKA conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may resign as a conferee on the omnibus flood control bill, H. R. 12080, and that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] be named in my place.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, that is agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATUTORY AWARD FOR CERTAIN INJURIES TO MILITARY PERSONNEL

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2831, H. R. 2845, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday that amendments to the bill will not be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2845) to amend the veterans regulations to provide additional compensation for veterans having the service-incurred disability of loss or loss of use of both buttocks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an explanation of the bill as reported by the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to authorize a special monthly allowance (statutory award) of $47 for the loss or loss of the use of both buttocks.

Recognition of certain specific disabilities in the form of special statutory awards is well established in veterans' laws. One of such awards applies presently to the loss or loss of use of a creative organ, a foot, a hand, or blindness in one eye. This $47 monthly rate is in addition to any other compensation to which the veteran may be entitled. In view of the severity of the type of disability contemplated by this bill and the unusualness of its occurrence, the committee feels fully warranted in providing this special rate and believes that it should be enacted into law.

There are not statistics available on which to show the number of veterans who might qualify for the additional compensation sought to be provided by this bill. It is believed to be comparatively small, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE FINANCING OF MERCHANT VESSELS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2677, H. R. 11554, with the understanding that amendments to the bill will not be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11554) to amend certain provisions of title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to facilitate private financing of merchant vessels in the interest of national defense, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with an amendment which was agreed to on July 23, 1956.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is pending an amendment offered by the senior Senator from Delaware.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Does the Senator from Delaware desire to call up his amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. The committee has amended the bill. I have no amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Delaware has withdrawn his amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not have an amendment to offer. What is the number of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. H. R. 11554, Calendar No. 2677.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I have no amendment to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REGULATION AND LICENSING OF PAWNBROKERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2608, H. R. 11002, to regulate and license pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia; and that no amendment be in order except committee amendments, if there be any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11002) to regulate and license pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY INSTALLATIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2829, H. R. 12270; and that no amendments, other than committee amendments, be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12270) to authorize certain construction at military installations, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I did not hear the request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The request is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the military construction bill; and that no amendments except committee amendments be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Armed Services with amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the committee amendments are agreed to en bloc.

The committee amendments agreed to en bloc are as follows:

On page 33, line 11, after the word "acquisition," to strike out "$37,760,000" and insert "$21,510,000", on page 62, line 11, after the word "States", to strike out "$759,123,000" and insert "$742,873,000"; in line 14, after the word "of", to strike out "$1,377,184,000" and insert "$1,360,934,000"; on page 71, after line 17, to insert:

"SEC. 419. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this or of any other act, no contract shall be entered into by the United States for the construction or acquisition of family housing units by or for the use of military or civilian personnel of any of the military services unless—

"(1) the Secretary of Defense has submitted to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives a written report stating the intent to construct or acquire such units, certifying that the number of units to be constructed or acquired is consistent with the long range troop strength to be stationed at the location of such units, and showing the location, number, and estimated cost of such housing units, and the existing housing at such location; and

"(2) (a) a 180-day period has elapsed since the submission of such report, or (b) the committees have advised the Secretary of Defense, in writing, that there are no further questions to be asked concerning the project contemplated in such contract."

On page 72, at the beginning of line 12, to change the section number from "419" to "420"; on page 73, at the beginning of line 10, to change the section number from "420" to "421"; and at the beginning of line 23, to change the section number from "421" to "422."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have prepared pertaining to military construction and the military personnel program in general be printed immediately after the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR GOLDWATER

The military construction program is a must item for national defense and I hope that it will be passed quickly. At the same time that we consider this, I think it is necessary to review our overall legislative program with respect to the Armed Forces. The closing days of a session tend to get a little hectic and it is healthy to consider where we started from, where we have gone, and where we go from here.

The President established the priority in Armed Forces legislation in April. When forwarding to the House the letter by the Secretary of Defense on the personnel situation in the Armed Forces, the President said: "Only when we have created a career military service which can compete with the attractive opportunities available in civilian pursuits will we be able to stop the wasteful losses from our Armed Forces and attract individuals to those services. We cannot move too soon in our efforts to increase the number and quality of volunteers for long-term career military service in both enlisted and officer ranks."

This is the number one objective of the administration as regards the Armed Forces. The testimony we have heard from various witnesses in the hearings has reinforced this view. One, we need to get competent people and provide them with an attractive career that will keep them. Two, we need bases and additional facilities. Three, we need the equipment to modernize and improve the forces we have and are building.

This Congress has met most of the administration requests for legislation to improve careers in the Armed Forces. We have extended and improved servicemen's survivor benefits; we have enlarged the provisions for dependent medical care; we have authorized the augmentation of the Regular officer strength; we have provided greater incentives for medical and dental officers in the services. We have given all services the right to retire officers in their highest temporary grade. There is still a chance that we will give relief to personnel who now have to forfeit their entire rental allowance when living in substandard public housing.

All these things have been done to make a career in the Armed Forces more attractive and more stable. Most of them come under the heading of fringe benefits and in most areas they serve to put us back into the running with civilian industry. Since the war, industry has put on a great spurt in the matter of fringe benefits and this year's legislative achievements will enable the Armed Forces to come closer to balancing what industry has to offer.

But fringe benefits are not the whole answer. There is also the question of pay scale. We want to raise the enlistment rate of the Armed Forces as a whole. The rate for fiscal year 1955, when 15.7 percent of all first-term enlistees were willing to reenlist, is not good enough. But the problem is still more critical in the technical specialties. We expect civilian industry to be more interested in and to offer more money to the man who has the most know-how to sell. And of course industry is doing this. And as a result, electronics technicians are only reenlisting at the rate of 6.9 percent as against the overall 15.7 percent. Only 8.1 percent of the armament technicians are signing on again.

These men have more to sell. They ought to have. We have spent as much as $75,000 training each of these specialists to maintain and operate the equipment produced by our advanced technology as opposed to an average of $15,000 for the average training. The specialist has spent 2 or 2½ years of his 4-year tour in school and the time he has spent on the job has been mostly on-the-job training. As one of General LeMay's briefing team expressed it, the first-tour specialist has probably broken more equipment than he has fixed.

Then about the time the Armed Forces are ready to begin getting a return on their investment in this man, his tour of duty is up. He is offered twice the same salary and roughly the same fringe benefits to work for private industry. Maybe he likes the service and has the normal quota of patriotism but he has a family to support. So he gets out and takes the job with industry.

We don't hesitate to spend five times the average amount on his training because we know that he has to know how to do his job. But we have not seen fit to pay him a penny more salary than his less-specialized brothers. This is what we will have to do if we want to keep him and translate his expensive training into what it was intended to produce—combat-ready and stable Armed Forces.

I am pleased to note that the Defense Department has already taken note of this problem and now has a committee, headed by the very able Mr. Ralph J. Cordiner, president of General Electric, to study this problem and to submit its findings to the Secretary of Defense. I feel that the Senate should show its continued interest in the problem and indicate that it is expecting proposals for legislation to be submitted to the next session. As long as every year sees every fifth man getting out of the service, we cannot hope to have true combat readiness, true stability in our forces, true economy of operation. As long as this situation continues, we cannot hope to have true national defense.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, there is one little matter, in the form of a committee amendment, which was not included in the regular committee amendments, and which is at the desk and should be included in the military construction bill. It relates solely to matters which may be in the housing bill which may become law. For that reason, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the military construction bill was passed, for the purpose of offering the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASTORE in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 71, line 19, to strike out the words "or of any other act", and insert in lieu thereof "act or any other provision of law except a provision of law hereafter enacted expressly in limitation hereof."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass? [Putting the question.]

The bill (H. R. 12270) was passed.

Mr. RUSSELL subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement with reference to Calendar No. 2829, H. R. 12270, a bill just passed by unanimous consent. In view of some newspaper articles which have been published with reference to the bill, I think I should make a brief statement.

It will be recalled that the President of the United States vetoed the original bill which was passed by the Congress because it required the Department of Defense to come into agreement with some of the committees of the Congress before some of the projects could proceed. One of the newspaper articles stated that this bill was in defiance of the President's message. I am afraid that whoever wrote that article did not read the provision very carefully, because the provision was drawn to conform to the language used in the President's message. I have no hesitancy, and I never have had, in opposing any Chief Executive when my views have differed from his. If that can be called defiance, I have defied every President with whom I have served during my tenure in the Congress.

This bill was drawn in recognition of the fact that the President had veto power and could exercise it.

The President said in his message:

> I am persuaded that the true purpose of the Congress in the enactment of both of these provisions was to exercise a close and full legislative oversight of important programs of the Department of Defense. This purpose can be properly attained by requiring timely reports from the Executive. Such reports would provide the Congress with the basis for any further legislative action it may find to be necessary.

The provision of the bill which was inserted in lieu of that to which the President objected, which required committees to agree with the executive department, is as follows:

SEC. 419. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this or of any other act, no contract shall be entered into by the United States for the construction or acquisition of family housing units by or for the use of military or civilian personnel of any of the military services unless—

(1) the Secretary of Defense has submitted to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives a written report stating the intent to construct or acquire such units, certifying that the number of units to be constructed or acquired is consistent with the long range troop strength to be stationed at the location of such units, and showing the location, number and estimated cost of such housing units, and the existing housing at such location; and

(2) (a) a 180-day period has elapsed since the submission of such report, or (b) the committees have advised the Secretary of Defense, in writing, that there are no further questions to be asked concerning the project contemplated in such contract.

The language of the bill does not give the committees power to veto any of these projects, but it does require that full information be furnished and that the committee be given a reasonable period of time to consider the information and determine legislative needs.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, who is a member of the subcommittee that originally wrote the bill which was vetoed.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, first of all I should like to say that there was no intent on the part of the subcommittee or the committee, in the original language, of defying the President or invading the proper powers of the Executive. I have always felt that the whole is greater than any of its parts, and that if Congress had the authority to grant authorization it could also place a limit on the authorization.

The language which is incorporated in the bill, as the distinguished Senator from Georgia has pointed out, is not intended in any sense as an invasion of the Executive power or as an attempt to snub or to rebuff the President. Rather, the language is in keeping with the spirit of the President's suggestions in his veto message. As the Senator from Georgia has pointed out, it does not give the Committee on Armed Services any veto power.

I might say in that connection that in the Reorganization Act there is explicit provision whereby when reorganization plans are submitted to the Congress, a resolution of approval or of disapproval has a privileged status, and it is within the power of the Congress to suspend the operation of any reorganization plan until the resolution has been acted upon.

In the language here involved there is no such provision made. The committee by affirmative action can shorten the period of 180 days. If the 180 days should elapse without any action whatsoever, then the housing proposals or projects would be authorized on the initiative of the executive department.

I appreciate the fact that the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee has seen fit to make his statement, because I think the RECORD should be clear that the committee—and I am sure I speak for the minority members of the committee in this particular matter as well as joining the distinguished chairman in speaking for the full committee and for the majority members—had no intent to snub the President or anything of that sort, but, rather, desired to attempt to place language in the bill which would provide for letting the Congress know what the Defense Department proposed with respect to the authority for the acquisition or development of housing units.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from South Dakota. I could, of course, elaborate on what the Senator has said by stating that similar language appeared in bills which have been signed by the Chief Executive. In one of those bills the language was much stronger, because the bill provided that the Public Works Committees of both Houses of Congress should take affirmative action by resolution before the executive branch could proceed. I could speak my views as to the right and power of Congress to deal with the question of providing limitations, but we are confronted with a condition and not a theory.

For that reason the amendment was drawn to conform to the views expressed by the President in his message and in the effort to secure legislation in this important matter.

NEW AND IMPROVED OFFENSIVE AND DEFENSIVE WEAPONS—SECURITY METHODS IN STATE OF FLUX—SLOW DOWN LAND PURCHASES—WITHDRAWALS

I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MALONE. I ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Armed Services if it is not true that the Armed Forces are undergoing a complete review in the light of improved weapons, both for defense and offense, and that, according to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, and others who have made public statements recently, there is very likely to be a reduction in the number of foot soldiers as such—surface ships and a greater consolidation of Air Forces—with a consequent lessening demand for housing in certain areas?

NATIONAL DEFENSE—STATE OF FLUX

Mr. RUSSELL. If we are to believe some of the rumors which are going around, there will be not only a reduction in the number of foot soldiers in the Army, but also a reduction of forces in the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Force. Of course, it would be the height of waste and the height of folly for the Government to build a large amount of housing for soldiers who will not be in uniform or in units of the Armed Forces next year as will be the case if the proposed program or plan is carried through.

Mr. MALONE. It has been the opinion of the senior Senator from Nevada, gained from the top military strategists, that national defense is in a continuous state of flux, because of the new and potential weapons, higher speed planes, and guided missiles which are coming into the picture.

Plans are constantly being revised, as has been the case from the beginning of time, probably speeded up now on account of the atom bomb and potential new source of energy. Therefore, fewer foot soldiers, fewer surface ships as such, can be utilized, and a further consolidation of the air forces will be necessary.

The remaining foot soldiers will be trained commando-type troops who can be set down and moved quickly anywhere in groups of 1,000, 10,000, or 50,000 men and picked up when the job is done.

MORE COOPERATION NEEDED

If that be true, then is it not necessary when even the Committee on Armed Services is not certain of exactly what will be needed, that there should be more cooperation between the armed services and the Senate Committee on Armed Services?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Committee on Armed Services certainly has sought to cooperate with the executive branch of the Government, but we get some very conflicting reports at times. It seems that the left hand in the Department of Defense at times does not know what the right hand is doing.

One Under Secretary, in charge of manpower personnel, testified that there was no program planned to reduce personnel for a period of several years. But we know that Admiral Radford, Secretary of Defense Wilson, and Secretary of State Dulles have expressed other views.

We are merely trying to keep in touch with a very fluid situation and are undertaking to discharge our responsibilities to the American people as their representatives in Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I shall ask for the regular order. As was announced previously, there is to be a luncheon at 12 o'clock. We hope it will not be necessary to have any votes between 12 and 12:30. If we continue to talk until 12 o'clock, it will mean that a dozen Senators may have to miss the luncheon.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, a situation exists throughout the country in which Government bureaus, with special reference to the armed services, are withdrawing large areas of land without coordinating such withdrawals with the Armed Services Committee or the administration or the legislatures of the States affected when as a matter of fact the reorganization now under way may vitally change their needs and activities.

So it is not necessary, as is stated in the House report on H. R. 12185, which was just passed by the House to direct the armed services to observe the laws of the States where located and to require congressional approval for more than 5,000-acre withdrawals of public lands.

The Members of Congress—I can speak for the senior Senator from Nevada—want the armed services to have everything they need but he also wants them to fully utilize all of the lands they have already withdrawn and to obey the laws of the States with special reference to the appropriation of water, mining, fish and game, grazing, taking into full account the economic structure of that State.

I want to commend the chairman, Mr. RUSSELL, of the Senate Armed Services Committee and his colleagues for a job well done.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is a very great need for close coordination of the program.

Mr. MALONE. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. STENNIS subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senate this morning passed H. R. 12270, which is the military construction bill. I believe those of us who handled the bill ought to make some brief remarks at least with reference to two sections of the bill, which have already been covered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, and by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], who is a member, with me, of the subcommittee which handled the first military construction bill this year—the bill that was vetoed.

I refer to the two points in the bill that were covered in the President's veto of the original measure. The second military construction bill eliminated entirely one of the features to which the President had objected, namely, with reference to the Talos installations, by deferring those installations so far as procurement is concerned, but not disturbing the present program of experimentation and other items that go into the development program.

The other item I wish particularly to mention is with reference to military family housing projects. The President objected to a feature of the bill which required committees of Congress to give their approval to those projects. We left that feature out of the second bill, and merely provided that before construction can begin on those projects, they will have to be reported to the Armed Services Committee of the House and the Armed Services Committee of the Senate. That procedure is in line with the President's mention of the subject matter in his veto message, when he said that there was no objection to the executive branch of the Government reporting to the congressional committees.

Therefore we handled the matter largely on the basis mentioned in the veto message.

I wish particularly to point out, for congressional history, that this provision carries with it the implied authority for those committees to act during a congressional recess or adjournment. In other words, the Senate committee and the House committee could act when Congress was not in session. The bill contemplates that the committees would have the power to receive those notices and to waive the time element involved should they see fit, should some question be raised about this later; but, certainly, this is clear.

Yesterday, in the rush of things, a press report on the action of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate stated that we had attempted to ignore the points the President had made in his veto message. That is entirely erroneous. We recognized the President's points and we adopted the reasoning given in the veto message. The bill which was passed this morning carries out the points that are mentioned in the veto message.

Therefore I am glad to make this statement at this time.

TAX ON ADMISSIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2835, H. R. 9875.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9875) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the tax on admissions shall apply only if the amount paid for the admission exceeds $1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "thereof", to strike out "$1" and insert "90 cents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the bill was reported by the Finance Committee. It provides for taxes to be imposed on general admission for which the charge is 90 cents or less, or in case of season or subscription tickets, if the amount which would be charged for a single admission is 90 cents or less. The measure was passed overwhelmingly by the House. The bill was reported by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] from the Finance Committee.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, it is a matter of great satisfaction to me that we shall have the opportunity to vote upon—and I am sure approve—the measure, which would eliminate the wartime excise taxes on all admissions less than 90 cents.

The House passed a similar bill only last Saturday, exempting admissions up to $1. On yesterday, had not the parliamentary situation prevented it, I had planned to bespeak the prompt and friendly consideration of this measure by the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and his colleagues on the Senate Committee on Finance.

I realize that this was hardly necessary. The able Senator from Virginia and his committee acted with speed and sureness to make certain that this urgently required relief would be extended to thousands of small-business men in this country.

More than 5 years of consideration of the problems of independent motion picture theater owners of this country compel me to urge upon my colleagues the utter necessity of some relief for these hard-pressed small-business men. Both as chairman of a subcommittee of the Small Business Committeee 3 years ago, and more recently as a member, I have sat through many days of hearings in which motion-picture theater owners have painted a dreary picture of their operations.

I would be less than frank if I were to suggest that tax relief is the magic formula which will put the industry on its feet. Tax modification can be no more than a relief measure, but I must emphasize that it is a mighty important relief measure. We have in this Congress provided millions, yes, billions, of economic aid to people all over the world. Commonsense tells me that we owe an equal responsibility to thousands of American citizens.

It just does not make sense to continue to impose upon an industry a wartime tax designed not so much as revenue as to restrict expenditures in wartime for leisure hour entertainment. Now 10 years later, the tax, even though reduced from its former level, is still imposed. I would not feel so keenly about this if the industry taxed were a prosperous one, well able to afford the tax. But the contrary is the fact—almost unique in our booming economy, the motion-picture industry, and especially the exhibitors are worse off today than they were a decade ago, despite sharp population gains and a far greater customer potential. Its principal competitor, television, is not only tax free so far as operations are concerned, but enjoys its unparalleled prosperity as the result of channels made available free of charge to all licensees.

The tax relief measure passed by the other House and now about to come before us does not eliminate entirely the excise tax on admissions. But by making it nonapplicable to all admissions of 90 cents or less, it takes an important step in helping thousands of small theater owners in the smaller towns whose admission charges are less than 90 cents.

I want to take this opportunity to again sincerely thank the able Senator from Virginia, and all of the members of the Finance Committee. I am sure that all of us will welcome the chance to cast our votes for this urgently necessary relief bill.

WARTIME EXCISE TAXES SHOULD BE REPEALED BILLS ACCEPTED PIECEMEAL

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Nevada has continuously had bills before this Congress to repeal all wartime excise taxes, convinced that war emergency taxes are unfair in peacetime; and that when the emergency is over, the taxes should be immediately repealed, then if the Government has to have the money which it does not, if we would quit trying to support the world with our taxpayers' money, equalize the taxes from all sources.

In any case such taxes should be repealed. Congress has accepted this idea a part at a time since I introduced the original bill for a flat repeal of all of them.

I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if the House did not pass a bill that would have made admissions for which there was a charge up to $1 tax exempt?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MALONE. In the Finance Committee it was suggested that to make it an acceptable bill we should fix the exemption at 90 cents, and that it would be then an acceptable bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator is correct.

WARTIME EXCISE TAXES SHOULD BE REPEALED

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, the Congress and the administration are always reluctant to relinquish any taxes once levied—they always find a place for the money.

Untaxed competition has gone a long way to destroy the moving-picture business. Many folks depend upon these houses for entertainment and they are entitled to consideration.

In addition wartime excise taxes are so obviously unfair and so patently should be repealed, that this bill should pass.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I should like to associate myself with the remarks which the able Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] has made on the bill. He has very clearly stated the reasons why the tax should be eliminated. I am very sorry the Senate Finance Committee has reduced the figure from $1 to 90 cents. I feel sure small theater operators all over the country, and I know it is true of those in the great State of Connecticut, will be afforded some very welcome relief because of the Senate's action today, if the bill becomes law. I shall be very happy to see the Senate take favorable action on the bill.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues in commending the Senate Finance Committee. I hope the Senate will pass the pending bill. The wartime tax which was put on theaters was all right before television and some other modern means of entertainment were widely developed. Statistics reveal that 40 percent of the small theaters have gone out of business. Not only has that resulted in less employment, but the value of the property of men who own small theaters has deteriorated greatly.

I am confident that we shall be doing justice when we pass the bill and it becomes a law. I think the Senate Finance Committee, by its unanimous vote to remove the tax, has made a great contribution to the national economy.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I join the other Senators who have urged the immediate passage of this bill. In the interest of justice, and in order to expedite a revival of the businesses of the average theater operators in the United States, the bill should be passed. We feel it is just. We feel it is necessary for the survival of the small theater operators, and that the enactment of the bill will result in a great contribution to the economy of the country.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to address a question to the Finance Committee members, and ask why the reduction from the $1 figure as contained in the House bill was made to the 90-cent figure, which now appears in the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. KERR. The Senate Finance Committee wanted to pass the bill as it came from the House. We were advised that there was a better than even chance of its being vetoed if the provision providing for a tax reduction for admissions up to $1 was retained in the bill. We were advised that there would be a much better chance to have the bill enacted if it provided for the elimination of taxes on admissions below $1. For both reasons the committee adopted the amendment.

Mr. HOLLAND. I accede to the judgment, because I realize it is a friendly judgment, of the members of the Finance Committee, but I greatly regret the fact that they found it necessary to reduce the figure approved by the House in order to get relief for a part of the seriously affected motion picture industry.

I am very sure that the committee would have approved the House bill as it came from the House, except for the situation the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma has disclosed. I am very sorry that the attitude of those in high places, financially, in the Government has thus operated to withhold relief from a very important part of the motion-picture industry which still will not obtain the relief provided by the bill.

I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield 1 minute to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in 1947, I urged that the Senate repeal this excise tax and many other excise taxes. That speech of mine and the recommendations I made at that time were based upon the report of the Committee for Economic Development. The committee is headed by a great American named Paul Hoffman. I wish to state, as I said the other day in the Foreign Relations Committee, that I think the 1947 report of the Committee for Economic Development is still the soundest tax report which has been made to the Senate of the United States since I have been a Member of this body. That group of businessmen—and there was not a Government official among them; they included some outstanding tax economists, but they were in private practice or in private industry—recommended as early as 1947 the elimination of many of the excise taxes, and the drastic reduction of many others. They pointed out that, after all, excise taxes were imposed, in the first place, not primarily for revenue-raising purposes, but, rather, to curtail production during the war, when we wanted all the sinews of our economy to be devoted to the successful prosecution of the war.

I am glad that now, at long last, we have gone this far in accordance with the report of the Committee for Economic Development. I think this tax should be eliminated entirely, but I agree that we have to take one step at a time.

However, we still have a long way to go in doing justice to Americans who have unfair excise taxes imposed upon them, because, Mr. President, by and large these taxes are not imposed on the basis of the ability to pay, but they are imposed on the basis of ease of collection.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield 1 minute to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the statements made regarding the reduction of the tax on theaters. I also regret that we could not include in the bill the $1 figure; but in any case I am glad the committee reported this bill. I sincerely hope the Senate will pass the bill because I know of no industry which needs relief more urgently than do the small theaters of the country. I congratulate the chairman of the Finance Committee on this proposed legislation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to say that I strongly favor the bill, and I called a special meeting of the Senate Finance Committee to act on the bill. The bill was reported unanimously.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement in explanation of the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BYRD

The bill H. R. 9875, as reported by your committee, amends section 4231 (1) of the 1954 Code to provide that no tax is to be imposed on a general admission for which the charge is 90 cents or less (or in the case of season or subscription tickets if the amount which would be charged for a single admission is 90 cents or less).

Under present law general admissions are free of tax if the charge is 50 cents or less. As in the case of this present 50-cent exemption, the 90-cent exemption applies only to admissions up to the level of the exemption, and does not affect admissions for which the charge exceeds the level of the exemption. Thus, under the bill as amended by your committee, the tax on an admission price of $1.50 (before tax) would be 15 cents, that is, it would be based upon the entire $1.50 and not merely the portion of the charge in excess of 90 cents.

Since the 90-cent exemption applies only to paragraph (1) of section 4231, this exemption will not be available in the case of admissions to horse or dog racing at a racetrack, to charges for the permanent use or lease of boxes or seats, to sales outside of the box office in excess of the established price, to sales by proprietors in excess of the regular price, or to amounts paid with respect to cabarets. The taxes imposed in these cases will remain the same as under existing law.

Information made available this year indicates that motion-picture industry conditions are now worse than in 1953 when Congress voted to repeal the tax on admissions to motion picture theaters. It has been stated that more than half of all the theaters presently are faced with economic problems, since 5,500 are operating in the red while another 5,400 are operating at or near the break-even point.

As in 1953, television is believed to be the primary cause for the difficulty faced by the motion-picture and other similar industries. While the exemption of 90 cents or less for admissions to motion-picture theaters and other places of amusement will not remove the competitive problem presented by the advent of television, it is believed that it will better enable these industries to adjust their long-range plans to the new competitive situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of the time under my control, if it is understood that the other side will do likewise.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of the time under my control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment, and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 9875) was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the tax on admissions shall apply only if the amount paid for the admission exceeds 90 cents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASTORE in the chair). The present occupant of the chair desires to have the RECORD indicate that he voted in favor of the bill which has just been passed.

Mr. BUTLER subsequently said: Mr. President, I urge the approval of the measure to eliminate the wartime excise taxes on all admissions of less than 90 cents.

My colleague, the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and the other members of the Committee on Finance have done excellent work on this problem. We would be most remiss if we failed to endorse their recommendation to give this urgently needed and long overdue relief to small business all over the country.

This wartime tax has long since ceased to serve whatever legitimate purpose, if any, it might already have had. If the industry bearing the brunt of the tax were rolling in wealth, we might be less concerned about repeal. But it is not. In fact, the motion-picture industry generally, and the motion-picture exhibitors in particular, have fallen on lean days of late—this in the midst of unprecedented prosperity elsewhere in our economy. Television, its chief competitor, suffers under no comparable burden.

I am sorry to say that the House-passed tax relief measure does not entirely eliminate the tax. But, by exempting all admissions of 90 cents or less, it takes a great step forward in coming to the aid of these small businesses.

I strongly urge all my colleagues to vote for this vital measure.

DR. FREDERICK BROWN HARRIS, CHAPLAIN OF THE SENATE

During the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9875) reducing the tax on admissions,

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield 2 minutes to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to take 2 minutes at this time, because I see that the Chaplain of the Senate is on the floor.

I think it is only fitting on this last day before the Chaplain leaves Washington that some Member of the Senate express what I am positive is the feeling of all 96 of the Members of the Senate—namely, our sense of gratitude and great personal debt to the Chaplain of the Senate for the devoted spiritual leadership he has given to us as a body and to many of us as individuals.

Mr. President, Frederick Brown Harris is not only a great spiritual leader, but also a fine, gentle human being. When one comes to know him personally, as I have come to know him, one understands why this great spiritual leader has the wonderful human qualities which he constantly manifests in his associations with mankind.

Mr. President, the Chaplain of the Senate is about to leave the United States to visit Korea, Formosa, the Philippines, Japan, and possibly other countries of Southeast Asia. I know he goes with the good wishes of every Member of the Senate. He is a close personal friend of the President of Korea, Syngman Rhee, who was a member of Foundry Methodist Church when Dr. Harris was its minister.

Mr. President, when Dr. Harris leaves the United States to visit Korea he goes in a very real sense as an ambassador; I think he goes with great diplomatic powers—that is, diplomatic powers derived from his position of spiritual leadership. I understand that in all probability he will also go in an official capacity; and I think he should go in an official capacity, as an official diplomatic representative of our Government to Korea and to the other countries he will visit.

Mr. President, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, let me say I do not know of anyone who is available to the Government of the United States who is better qualified to go on this journey in an official capacity. I think the Chaplain's close relationship, for example, with the President of Korea places Dr. Harris in an exceedingly fine diplomatic position to work out—if there are some, and we believe that perhaps there are—any misunderstandings which may exist between our country and Korea. I know of no better diplomat to work out those differences than the Chaplain of the Senate.

Mr. President, I close not only by thanking him for his services as Chaplain of the Senate, but personally I wish to thank him for the beautiful friendship and counsel I have enjoyed from this great Christian leader, who is a true representative of what the Christian religion stands for.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO IMPORTS OF DISTILLED SPIRITS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2830, Senate Resolution 314, with the understanding that no amendments to the resolution will be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 314) favoring an investigation and report to the Senate on alleged inequities in the policy of the United States with reference to imports of distilled spirits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 314) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that this unfair and inequitable trade situation should be brought to the attention of the United States Committee for Reciprocity Information and the United States Tariff Commission with the request that efforts be made to correct the conditions hereinabove described, and that a report on the matter be rendered to the Senate during the first regular session of the 85th Congress.

The preamble was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF FEDERAL HIGHWAY ADMINISTRATOR AND AN ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2837, Senate bill 4164.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 4164) to provide for the appointment of a Federal Highway Administrator in the Bureau of Public Roads, one additional Assistant Secretary of Commerce, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works, with amendments, on page 2, line 12, after the word "Administrator", to strike out "The position of Commissioner shall be in GS–18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949." and insert "The basic compensation of the Commissioner of Public Roads shall be $17,500 per annum."; and after line 16, to strike out:

SEC. 4. There shall be hereafter in the Department of Commerce, in addition to the Assistant Secretaries now provided for by law, one additional Assistant Secretary of Commerce, who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be subject in all respects to the provisions of the act of July 15, 1947 (61 Stat. 326), as amended (5 U. S. C. 592a), relating to Assistant Secretaries of Commerce.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, order, or regulation, the head of the Bureau of Public Roads in the Department of Commerce shall be a Federal Highway Administrator appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator shall receive basic compensation at the rate prescribed by law for Assistant Secretaries of executive departments and shall perform such duties as the Secretary of Commerce may prescribe or as may be required by law.

SEC. 3. The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of a Federal Highway Administrator in the Department of Commerce, and for other purposes."

ADMISSION OF ALIENS SKILLED IN SHEEPHERDING

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2249, House bill 6888.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6888) to amend the act of September 3, 1954.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 3 (a) of the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) There shall not be issued more than 385 special nonquota immigrant visas under this act; except that there may be issued not more than an additional 350 such special nonquota immigrant visas during a period beginning on the effective date of this act, as amended, and ending July 1, 1957: Provided, That special nonquota immigrant visas, without regard to the numerical limitations of this section, shall be issued to the wives and minor, unmarried children of the aliens who are found eligible for special nonquota immigrant visas under the provisions of this act or who were admitted under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1950 (64 Stat. 306), or the act of April 9, 1952 (66 Stat. 50), if they are accompanying or following to join such aliens, and are otherwise eligible to receive immigrant visas and admissible to the United States under the Immigration and Nationality Act: Provided further, That the marriage is found to have occurred prior to July 1, 1955."

SEC. 2. A new section 5 is hereby added to the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. The quota deductions required under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1950 (64 Stat. 306), and the act of April 9, 1952 (66 Stat. 50), are terminated, effective June 1, 1955."

SEC. 3. A new section 6 is hereby added to the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. The provisions of law relating to the deportation of aliens on the ground that they were excludable at the time of entry as aliens who had obtained visas by fraud or misrepresentation or as aliens who were not of the nationality specified in their visas shall not apply to an otherwise admissible alien, admitted to the United States between December 22, 1945, and November 1, 1954, both dates inclusive who misrepresented his place of birth, identity, or residence in applying for a visa if such alien shall establish to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the misrepresentation (a) was predicated upon the fact that the alien had reasonable grounds to fear repatriation to his former residence or homeland where he would be persecuted because of race, religion, or political opinions, and (b) was not committed for the purpose of evading the quota restrictions of the immigration laws or an investigation of the alien at the place of his former residence or elsewhere."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASTORE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CERTAIN ECONOMICALLY DEPRESSED AREAS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of S. 2663, in view of the fact that the committee handling the pending bill, House bill 6888, is occupied at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2663) to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of excessive unemployment in certain economically depressed areas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. There was a third reading of the depressed area bill last evening, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Has the time been yielded back?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is remaining time which has not been yielded back.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time, provided the minority leader will yield back the remainder of his time.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, I am a member of the Subcommittee of the full Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. The subcommittee reported the bill to the full committee favorably.

I am for a depressed area bill. I believe it is necessary. But the bill upon which we shall vote shortly is by no means or by no stretch of the imagination the bill which was reported by the subcommittee.

There were two objectives, when we applied ourselves to the question of depressed areas. One was an affirmative one. It was our desire to find ways of rehabilitating depressed areas. The second objective was perhaps a negative one. It was to make certain that this activity was conducted without creating depressed areas elsewhere. A great deal of time, thought, and study of many months and many hearings and meetings were devoted to the bill by the committee.

But the bill upon which we shall be voting today is in no way the bill which was reported by the committee. The very heart has been taken out of the bill. The very safeguards which were placed in the bill have been stricken out by the action the Senate took yesterday on the amendments presented to the Senate. None of them were explained.

We now have not a depressed area bill, which will correct depressed areas, but a bill which will create additional depressed areas.

Let me read one section which was stricken from the bill yesterday, without explanation, and, in my view, without an opportunity having been afforded to most of us even to understand the amendment. One provision on page 23 of the bill, numbered (4) reads as follows:

The borrower will not cause a transferral to, or relocation in, any plant or facility under this section, of business operations otherwise conducted by such borrower and to effect a reduction in employment in any other area within the United States.

That provision was placed in the bill to protect the industries which presently are operating. It was stricken out yesterday by the action of the Senate.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PURTELL. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator from Connecticut said the heart was taken out of the bill. It is true that the section on page 23 was stricken out. I would have preferred that the section remain in the bill. But it was my best judgment, after considering all the factors, that unless the amendment were accepted, the bill would not pass.

It seems to me that the whole purpose of the bill is to do something to relieve unemployment and to prevent unemployment from developing in other areas.

Therefore, I think the language on page 16, line 7, "expanding existing facilities and resources without reducing employment in other areas of the United States," provides sufficient safeguards.

Mr. PURTELL. I certainly respect the judgment of the junior Senator from Massachusetts, but I do not defer to his judgment in this matter.

The very fact that the Senate struck from the bill yesterday the protective language—and I can assure Senators that the bill would not have been reported as it was from the committee if that language had been deleted—means that the heart has been taken out of the bill itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, may I have 5 additional minutes?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PURTELL. I say again, as I said before, that the objectives of the bill as it was reported by the committee were twofold. The first was to make certain that something constructive would be done to provide employment in areas which are depressed.

But we were very positive in our action in the committee to make certain that the safeguard would be included to prevent the creation of other pockets of unemployment throughout the country. We have now stripped the bill of that safeguard.

There is another thing which has been done to the bill, which I think it is important to set forth. On page 31, there was contained a provision which would have been very helpful in meeting the unemployment situation in many depressed areas. It had to do with procurement by Government agencies. That would have been of great help, Mr. President, but the sections having to do with procurement by Government agencies were struck from the bill yesterday.

I am for a depressed-areas bill. I want to help such areas as may need help by seeing to it that their citizens are employed or trained for employment. But I do not want to see areas in which there exist high wages and good working conditions, and in which workers are organized, denied the right of continued employment by the deletion which was made from the bill yesterday.

Mr. President, let me say that if the bill passes in its present form and becomes law, I can assure my colleagues that operations will be exactly as I have stated. We shall see pockets of unemployment in areas where wages are high, working conditions are good, and workers are organized, because the inducement to go elsewhere will exist, and the prohibitions against that eventuality have been stricken from the bill.

I believe that Senators, who probably have not had an opportunity to study the amendments offered yesterday—7½ pages of them—should have an opportunity to look at the bill, note what has been done to it, and determine whether or not in fact it will really help depressed areas. I believe if such a study were given to it, the bill would be defeated, or at least sent back to committee, where the kind of bill I think the people who live in depressed areas want to see enacted, could be prepared and reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I remind the Senator that there is a luncheon at 12 o'clock. I have been trying to accommodate 15 Senators who are going to be present at that luncheon, which will take place from 12 to 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I think I have a right to speak on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator has that right, of course.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, it is of the greatest regret to me that, after what happened to the bill last night, I shall be unable to support the bill, especially because I appreciate very greatly the work which has been done upon it by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. But, very definitely, there is not now before the Senate the bill we reported from the committee. It has been changed. Last night the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] offered an amendment, which deletes the whole of section 12, and dangerously weakens the provisions which would protect workers and areas from dispersal or from loss of their jobs.

As I said, I want to pay tribute to the Senator from Massachusetts, because I worked with him, and we tried our best, in a bipartisan way, to draft an effective bill.

I urged that my amendment be accepted last night to retain the operation of this development program in the Department of Commerce, as provided in the administration bill. I yielded to the majority in many respects in the conferences we had. I yielded on the question of dollars. I yielded on some other provisions, in order to get a reasonable bill before the Senate. Several improvements I urged were accepted. But the provisions we had all agreed upon to protect workers in highly industrialized areas were deleted last night by the acceptance of the Fulbright amendment. My enthusiasm for this bill is further decreased by the unwillingness of the majority party to accept my amendment and the guaranty-loan amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS].

In the light of those conditions, I feel it is necessary to oppose the bill. No hearings were held on the changes proposed in the bill by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT]. The proposals were made suddenly last night, without notice or explanation. We did the best we could to make a study of the amendment overnight. I feel it is necessary for me to vote against the bill. The best action we could take would be to recommit the bill for further consideration, so we may have a really worthwhile bill which would not be unjust to many workers in my State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time, if the Senator from California will do likewise.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Is there any additional time desired on this side of the aisle? If not, I am willing to yield back my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me half a minute?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield half a minute to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I withhold the yielding back of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that, in my judgment, this is the best bill we can have passed at this session. The positions the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PURTELL] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] have taken are not in accordance with the facts. There may be many provisions I would have preferred to see in different form, but, in my opinion, the bill is satisfactory as it is. It treats rural and industrial areas equally. I think it is the best, and possibly the only, bill that can be passed at this session, and, in my opinion, it should be passed.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute. We are in the closing days of the session, and I think it is well for the Congress to keep in mind that the quality of legislation which is passed, rather than its quantity or volume, is more important to the American people. For that reason, and also based on the statements made by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from New Jersey, I believe the bill should be defeated.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOUGLAS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement which I prepared in support of the bill be printed in the body of the RECORD prior to the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR DOUGLAS IN SUPPORT OF S. 2663

The bill now before the Senate, S. 2663, represents a careful and comprehensive effort to deal with the serious and prolonged problems of unemployment and underemployment in certain industrial and rural areas of the United States.

It does this by establishing a Redevelopment Areas Administration which is authorized by means of loans for new and expanded business and commercial enterprises, by loans for special public facilities, and by grants for such public facilities to help these redevelopment areas to help themselves.

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS CLEARLY DEMONSTRATE URGENT NEEDS

For many years committees of Congress have pointed out the urgent needs for new industry in many of the areas of this country where unemployment has reached high levels and has remained almost unchanged for a period of years. They have revealed similar needs in areas where low incomes and underemployment in rural towns and counties have resulted in lower standards of family living, business failures, and severe local government and community problems.

The extensive hearings held by the Subcommittee on Labor of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare this year, together with the field studies made by the subcommittee's staff assistants, conclusively demonstrated that these problems continue to be acute today in many areas in many parts of the country.

While national productivity and national income are at high levels, there are many pockets which do not share in this prosperity. The greater number of people are enjoying improved living standards. But in all too many areas there remain thousands of families suffering acutely from want of a job, or inadequate earnings, with family and community conditions deteriorating because there is no present hope or prospect of new employment.

DECLINING INDUSTRIES HAVE LEFT DEPRESSED COMMUNITIES

Many of these pockets of depression have existed for a period of years. Some are of long duration. Industries upon which they once depended for a living have declined. Industrial replacement programs have not made up for the jobs lost. Textile mill areas, coal mining regions, railroad shop communities, farm machinery and ordnance centers are typical of such drains in our pools of opportunity.

Courageous local efforts to bring in new industry or to expand existing businesses have been made. But these have failed to meet the urgent needs, and the question now before the Senate is whether the resources of the Federal Government shall now be made available to help these pockets of unemployment and underemployment to cure themselves—by the only real cure, which is employment, and the making of a contribution to the production of goods and services for the people of our Nation.

LOW-INCOME RURAL AREAS ARE ALSO IN DISTRESS

The needs of the low income rural areas are no less urgent than those of the distressed industrial areas. Many rural counties in the United States have an average per capita income as little as one-fourth that of the average for the country.

While these counties tend to be more heavily concentrated in the Southern States, these low income rural areas are to be found in many other sections as well. The cut-over areas in some Midwest States and the Indian communities in many of our plains and mountain States reveal distress almost to the point of desperation.

In all of these regions both the inhumanity and the economic waste of failing to utilize our great human resources more fully were apparent to the committee. With local resources exhausted and all other efforts to enlist new industry or commerce unsuccessful, the question is again posed to this Congress: Can the Federal Government fail to bring to these areas the means of helping themselves which they so desperately want?

BROAD SUPPORT FOR REDEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

I shall not take the time of the Senate to detail the wide and representative and almost unanimous representations that were made to the committee in support of the essential lines of this program. Government officials, on a national, State, and local level, representatives of many chambers of commerce, officers of State and local industrial development organizations, businessmen, union leaders, Indian spokesmen, and university, church, and other civic leaders all joined in the appeal for such a Federal program.

Nearly 1,200 pages of hearings, well summarized in the committee report which lies upon the desk of each Senator, outline the needs, the recommendations and the earnest appeals of these areas. I could give personal testimony from my own observations of the urgent needs and well-nigh universal and bipartisan desires of these communities for a chance to help themselves, which this bill would afford. Southern Illinois comes vividly to mind in this connection.

The 1956 Economic Report of the President, following earlier recommendations of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, stated:

"The fate of distressed communities is a matter of national as well as local concern. * * * We should give serious thought to ways and means of extending prosperity to the less flourishing sectors of the economy."

BILL REPRESENTS POOLING OF MANY PROPOSALS

Various bills were introduced in this Congress, and I am of course glad to see that the Labor Committee has acted upon the general framework of the bill which I introduced, S. 2663, with the cosponsorship of distinguished Members of this body, and the amendment in the nature of a substitute which I later introduced with improving modifications at the conclusion of the hearings. But I am also glad to note that ideas and suggestions incorporated in the measure introduced by Senators on the other side of the aisle were also included in the bill as reported by the committee.

I was gratified too that the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] also presented a series of amendments. Knowing of his interest in meeting this problem and of his concern as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency with such programs, I am glad that the Senate has had the benefit of his careful suggestions. The bill as amended and now before the Senate therefore represents a program to which many have contributed and which I hope the Congress generally will support, whatever may be our disagreements on some details of its provisions.

SUMMARY OF ASSISTANCE PROVISIONS OF S. 2663

I would like now to review briefly for the information of Senators the main provisions of S. 2663.

1. Administration: It establishes an Area Redevelopment Administration headed by an Administrator, appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

2. Redevelopment areas: It authorizes the Administrator to designate "industrial redevelopment areas" where substantial and persistent unemployment has existed for an extended period of time. It also authorizes him to designate "rural redevelopment areas" where there exist the largest number and percentage of low income families and a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. Definitions and standards for the designation of such areas have been spelled out for the guidance of the Administrator on the basis of available and relevant economic data.

3. Local redevelopment committees: The Administrator is directed in a redevelopment area to appoint a local redevelopment committee which is broadly representative and which shall include members of existing local redevelopment committees who are willing to serve. Such committees are given the primary responsibility for preparing plans, cost estimates and recommendations for the industrial and commercial loans mentioned hereafter. The Administrator is permitted also to set up regional advisory committees representing two or more redevelopment areas when that will facilitate the carrying out of the purposes of the act.

4. Industrial and commercial loans: Upon an application approved by a local area committee and subject to the requirement of local participation of not less than 10 percent and as much as 25 percent, the Administrator is authorized to make loans to assist in the purchase or development of land for industrial use, the construction, rehabilitation, or alteration of industrial or commercial plants or other manufacturing, commercial, or processing facilities, and the purchase of machinery or equipment.

The Administrator cannot make such loans however unless he finds that the project will provide more than a temporary alleviation of the area's problems, that the funds are not otherwise available on reasonable terms, that the amount of the loan plus other funds is enough to complete the project and that there is a reasonable prospect of repayment.

No loan can be in excess of 75 percent of aggregrate cost of the project or for more than 40 years. All such loans would bear interest at a rate equal to that paid by the Administrator on funds from the Secretary of the Treasury (current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States) plus one-half of 1 percent. The Administrator must also require that not less than 5 percent of the total cost of the project shall be supplied by nongovernmental sources.

The loan funds are set up as revolving funds separately as follows:

(1) $100 million for industrial redevelopment areas;

(2) $100 million for rural redevelopment areas.

5. Assistance for new and expanding plants: The intention of the bill not to give the Federal Government's assistance to any runaway industry or to the "pirating" of industry is made clear at the outset in section 2. It is there stated as the purpose of the legislation to assist redevelopment areas to alleviate their unemployment or underemployment by providing new employment opportunities and by expanding existing facilities without reducing employment in other areas of the United States.

6. Public facilities loans: The Administrator is authorized to make loans to assist in the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and for the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities. He may do this, however, only if he finds that such assistance will provide more than a temporary alleviation of their employment problems and will tend to improve the opportunities for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities in such an area. He must also find that the funds are not otherwise available on reasonable terms and that the amount of the available funds plus the loan are adequate to insure its completion.

Limitations on the amount of the loan and its maturity, the requirement for local participation and the rate of interest are as above provided for industrial and commercial loans. The revolving fund from which such public facility loans may be made is:

(3) $75 million.

7. Public facilities grants: The Administrator is also authorized to make grants for land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and for the construction, rehabilitation, etc., of public facilities. He may do this, however, only if he finds as before that such public facility project will provide more than a temporary alleviation of the unemployment or underemployment problem and will tend to improve the opportunities for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities there. He must also find that the entity requesting the grant proposes to contribute to its cost in proportion to its ability, that the project will fulfill a pressing need in the area, and that there is little probability that it can be undertaken without such assistance.

The bill authorizes $50 million to be appropriated for such grants.

8. Procurement: The bill as reported provided a number of programs for channeling procurement by Government agencies, where deemed appropriate, into redevelopment areas. Because of his feeling that these need further study, the Senator from Arkansas proposed to eliminate these provisions at this time, and the Senate approved his amendment.

9. Information: The Administrator is authorized to aid redevelopment areas by furnishing technical information, market research, and other forms of information obtainable from Government agencies. He is also authorized to furnish to procurement divisions of the various departments and agencies of the Government, the names and addresses of redevelopment area firms desirous of obtaining Government contracts.

10. Technical assistance: The Administrator is likewise authorized to provide technical assistance to such areas including studies of their needs and potentials and including also the help of staff members or the employment of private firms or institutions under contract for such purpose. Appropriations for such technical assistance are authorized in an amount not to exceed $4,500,000.

11. Vocational training: The Secretary of Labor is authorized to determine the vocational training needs, and he and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare within their respective jurisdictions are directed to furnish the training assistance required in such areas (HEW—vocational education; Labor—apprenticeship and other job training).

12. Retraining subsistence payments: The Secretary of Labor is directed to enter into agreements with States in which redevelopment areas are located to enable the States to make weekly retraining payments for not more than 13 weeks to unemployed individuals not entitled to unemployment compensation who are certified to be undergoing training for a new job.

13. Advisory committees: Governmental and public advisory committees are established to assist the Administrator, and conferences on problems of special, hard-hit industries are authorized.

14. Miscellaneous: The bill includes necessary administrative provisions and powers, requires the Administrator to make a comprehensive and detailed report to Congress and authorizes to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.

BILL PROVIDES DOMESTIC POINT FOUR PROGRAM

I believe that the adoption of this measure by Congress and its wise and careful administration will bring a new day of hope and opportunity to many areas and to literally millions of our people who want nothing more than a chance to work and to live in self-respect and decency.

This bill proposed no easy handout. It holds out the prospect of work, of new jobs, of increased production, of expanding business and commerce, of more healthy community life and above all of a fuller utilization and development of the Nation's most precious resources, its human resources.

It is a domestic point four program, which we badly need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has previously been ordered to a third reading and read the third time.

The question is, Shall the bill pass? On this question the yeas and nays have previously been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

So the bill (S. 2663) was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment Act."

FINDINGS OF FACT

SEC. 2. The Congress hereby finds and declares that the maintenance of the national economy at a high level of prosperity and employment is vital to the best interests of the United States and that the existence of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment in certain areas of the Nation is jeopardizing the health, standard of living, and general welfare of the Nation. It is therefore the purpose of this act to provide assistance to communities, industries, enterprises, and individuals in areas needing redevelopment to enable them to expand and adjust their productive activity to alleviate substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment within such areas by providing new employment opportunities and developing and expanding existing facilities and resources without reducing employment in other areas of the United States.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 3. In order to carry out the purposes of this act, there is hereby established, within the executive branch of the Government, an Area Redevelopment Administration. Such Administration shall be under the direction and control of an Administrator (hereinafter referred to as "the Administrator") who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be compensated at the rate of $17,500 per annum.

ADVISORY COMMITTEES

SEC. 4. (a) There is hereby established a Government Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall be composed of the following members: The Administrator, as Chairman, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, the Administrator of General Services, the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and the Director of the Office of Defense Mobilization. Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to the Administrator relative to the carrying out of his duties under this act, and the Administrator shall, in carrying out such duties, consult with such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof. Such Committee shall hold meetings at the call of the Chairman, and such meetings shall be held at least twice during each calendar year.

(b) The Administrator shall appoint a National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall consist of 12 members and which shall be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and the public in general. From the members appointed to such Committee the Administrator shall designate a Chairman. Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to the Administrator relative to the carrying out of his duties under this act. Such Committee shall hold not less than two meetings during each calendar year.

(c) The Administrator is authorized from time to time to call together and confer with representatives of the various parties in interest from any industry in which employment has dropped substantially over an extended period of years and which in consequence has been a primary source of high levels of unemployment in several areas designated by the Administrator as redevelopment areas. Conferences convened under authority of this subsection shall consider with and recommend to the Administrator plans and programs with special reference to any such industry to carry out the purposes of this act.

REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator shall designate as "industrial redevelopment areas" those industrial areas within the United States in which he determines that there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time. Any industrial area in which there has existed unemployment of not less than (1) 12 percent of the labor force for the 12-month period immediately preceding the date on which an application for assistance is made under this act, (2) 8 percent of the labor force during at least 15 months of the 18-month period immediately preceding such date, or (3) 6 percent of the labor force during at least 8 months in each of the 2 years immediately preceding such date, shall be designated an "industrial redevelopment area."

(b) In addition to those areas designated under subsection (a), the Administrator shall designate as "rural redevelopment areas" those rural areas within the United States in which he determines that there exist the largest number and percentage of low-income families, and a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. In making the designations under this subsection, the Administrator shall consider among other relevant factors the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion that such low-income families are to the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, and the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment.

(c) In making the determinations provided for in this section, the Administrator shall be guided, but not conclusively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information and data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2) State and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant colleges, and (4) private organizations.

(d) Upon the request of the Administrator, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Director of the Bureau of the Census are respectively authorized to conduct such special studies, obtain such information, and compile and furnish to the Administrator such data as the Administrator may deem necessary or proper to enable him to make the determinations provided for in this section. The Administrator shall reimburse, out of any funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this act, the foregoing officers for any expenditures incurred by them under this section.

(e) As used in this act, the term "redevelopment area" refers to any area within the United States which has been designated by the Administrator as an industrial redevelopment area or a rural redevelopment area.

LOCAL AND REGIONAL COMMITTEES

SEC. 6. (a) The Administrator, upon determining that any area is a redevelopment area, shall appoint a local redevelopment committee (hereinafter referred to as a "local committee"), to be composed of not less than seven residents of such area who, as nearly as possible, are representative of labor, commercial, industrial, and agricultural groups, and of the residents generally of such area. In appointing such local committee, the Administrator shall include therein all members of existing local redevelopment committees who are willing to serve. Each local committee shall prepare plans and cost estimates, to the extent deemed desirable by it, for (1) the development of the resources of, and processing and marketing facilities in, the area which such committee represents, (2) the construction, rehabilitation, and alteration of industrial plants or other industrial and commercial facilities in such area, and (3) the purchase of machinery or equipment for use in such area, with a view to attracting new industries thereto and otherwise to stimulate economic activity therein. Each local committee shall enlist the support of local residents and private and public lending agencies in financing the carrying out of such plans. The Administrator shall, at the request of any local committee, make available to such committee such professional, technical, and other experts as may be necessary to enable such local committee properly to discharge its functions under this act.

(b) The Administrator may establish regional advisory committees to represent two or more redevelopment areas when he finds that the establishment of such committees will facilitate the carrying out of the purposes of this act. The members of such regional committees shall be appointed by the Administrator on the same basis as are members of local committees, and such regional committees shall cooperate with, and, to the extent possible, coordinate the activities of, the local committees within the regions represented by such regional committees.

(c) Of the sums appropriated to carry out the purposes of this act, not to exceed $1,500,000 shall be available to the Administrator for the purpose of assisting the local or regional committees established under this section to defray their administrative expenses, but no part thereof shall be available for the purpose of paying salaries or traveling expenses of the members of such committees.

LOANS

SEC. 7. (a) Upon application approved by any local committee, the Administrator is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for industrial usage within the redevelopment area represented by such committee, and the construction, rehabilitation, or alteration of industrial or commercial plants, or other manufacturing, commercial, or processing facilities, and the purchase of machinery or equipment for use, in such area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought is reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the redevelopment area wherein it is, or will be, located;

(2) the funds requested for such project are not otherwise available on reasonable terms;

(3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other available funds for such project are adequate to insure the completion thereof; and

(4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment.

(b) No loan under this section shall be for an amount in excess of 75 percent of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made. Subject to section 14 (5), the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than 40 years after the date such loan was made. Any such loan shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 10 of this act, plus one-half of 1 percent per annum.

(c) In making any loan under this section, the Administrator shall require that not less than 10 percent, or more than 25 percent, of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied (1) by the State (including any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof) within which such project is to be located, or (2) by one or more community or area organizations, or persons, firms or corporations within the redevelopment area in which such project is to be located, as equity capital, or as a loan repayable only after the financial assistance provided under this section has been repaid in full, and, if such loan is secured, its security shall be subordinate to the lien or liens securing the financial assistance provided under this section: Provided, That in making any loan under this section with respect to an industrial redevelopment area, the Administrator shall require that not less than 5 percent of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by nongovernmental sources. In determining the amount of participation required under this subsection with respect to any particular project, the Administrator shall give consideration to the financial condition of the State or local government, and to the per capita income of the residents of the development area, within which such project is to be located.

LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

SEC. 8. (a) Upon the application of any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Administrator is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within any redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the funds requested for such project are not otherwise available on reasonable terms;

(3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other available funds for such project are adequate to insure the completion thereof; and

(4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment.

(b) No loan under this section shall be for an amount in excess of 75 percent of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made. Subject to section 14 (5), the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than 40 years after the date such loan is made. Any such loan shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid by the Administrator on funds obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 10 of this act, plus one-half of 1 percent per annum.

(c) In making any loan under this section, the Administrator shall require that not less than 10 percent, nor more than 25 percent, of the aggregate cost of the project for which such loan is made shall be supplied by the State (including any political subdivision thereof) within which such project is to be located as equity capital, or as a loan repayable only after the financial assistance provided under this section has been repaid in full, and, if such loan is secured, its security shall be subordinate to the lien or liens securing the financial assistance provided under this section. In determining the amount of participation required under this subsection with respect to any particular project, the Administrator shall give consideration to the financial condition of the State or local government, and to the per capita income of the residents of the redevelopment area, within which such project is to be located.

GRANTS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

SEC. 9. (a) The Administrator may conduct studies of needs in the various redevelopment areas throughout the United States for, and the probable cost of, land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of useful public facilities within such areas, and may receive proposals from any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area, or part thereof, relating to land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within any such area. Any such proposal shall contain plans showing the project proposed to be undertaken, the cost thereof, and the contributions proposed to be made to such cost by the entity making the proposal. The Administrator, in consultation with such entity, is authorized to modify all or any part of such proposal.

(b) The Administrator, pursuant to a proposal received by him under this section, may make grants to any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public organization or association representing any redevelopment area, or part thereof, for land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities within a redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in the redevelopment area wherein such project is, or will be, located, and will tend to improve the opportunities in such area for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities;

(2) the entity requesting the grant proposes to contribute to the cost of the project for which such grant is requested in proportion to its ability so to contribute; and

(3) the project for which a grant is requested will fulfill a pressing need of the area, or part thereof, in which it is, or will be, located, and there is little probability that such project can be undertaken without the assistance of a grant under this section.

The amount of any grant under this section for any such project shall not exceed the difference between the funds which can be practicably obtained from other sources (including a loan under section 8 of this act) for such project, and the amount which is necessary to insure the completion thereof.

(c) The Administrator shall by regulations provide for the supervision of the carrying out of projects with respect to which grants are made under this section so as to insure that Federal funds are not wasted or dissipated.

(d) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $50 million for the purpose of making grants under this section.

(e) Provided further, no loan, grant, or other financial assistance shall be authorized as provided by this act if the proposed project, plant, or facility is for the rendition of a service to the public, for which, if rendered by an individual, partnership, or private corporation, the rates or charges would be subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless there shall first be a report or finding by such State regulatory body that the said service being rendered to the public in the area served by the proposed project, plant, or facility is inadequate.

FUNDS FOR LOANS

SEC. 10. To obtain funds for loans under this act, the Administrator may, with the approval of the President, issue and have outstanding at any one time notes and obligations for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount not to exceed $275 million. Such notes or other obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, have such maturities, and be subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such notes or other obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations issued under this section and for such purpose is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act are extended to include any purchases of such notes and other obligaions. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated in every respect as public-debt transactions of the United States.

ESTABLISHMENT OF REVOLVING FUNDS

SEC. 11. Of the funds raised under section 10 of this act, not more than (1) $100 million shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans for projects within industrial redevelopment areas; (2) $100 million shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans for projects within rural redevelopment areas, but the principal amount of loans from such fund which are outstanding at any one time within any one State shall not exceed $6 million; and (3) $75 million shall be deposited in a revolving fund which shall be used for the purpose of making loans for public facilities. Receipts arising from the repayment of any such loans shall be deposited in the fund from which such loan was made and shall be utilized for the purpose for which such fund was established.

INFORMATION

SEC. 12. The Administrator shall aid redevelopment areas by furnishing to interested individuals, communities, industries, and enterprises within such areas any assistance, technical information, market research, or other forms of assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government and which would be useful in alleviating conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment within such areas. The Administrator shall furnish the procurement divisions of the various departments, agencies, and other instrumentalities of the Federal Government with a list containing the names and addresses of business firms which are located in redevelopment areas and which are desirous of obtaining Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies or services, and designating the supplies and services such firms are engaged in providing.

TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 15. Whenever the Administrator shall determine that employment conditions within any area previously designated by him as a redevelopment area have changed to such an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such designation under section 5 of this act, no further assistance shall be granted under this act with respect to such area, and, for the purposes of this act, such area shall not be considered a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall (1) prevent any such area from again being designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this act if the Administrator determines it to be eligible under such section, or (2) affect the validity of any contracts or undertakings with respect to such area which were entered into pursuant to this act prior to a determination by the Administrator that such area no longer qualifies as a redevelopment area. The Administrator shall keep the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

Such payments shall be made for a period not exceeding 13 weeks, and the amounts of such payments shall be equal to the amount of the average weekly unemployment compensation payment payable in the State making such payments.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LANGER subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to state that this morning, when the vote was taken on the depressed areas bill, I was unavoidably absent. If I had been present, I would have voted in favor of the bill.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. CLEMENTS (for Mr. ELLENDER), from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, without amendment:

H. R. 11682. A bill to facilitate the control and eradication of certain animal diseases, to facilitate the carrying out of agricultural and related programs, to facilitate the agricultural attaché program, to facilitate the operations of the Farmers' Home Administration, the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and the Forest Service, and for other purposes (Rept. INCREASED APPROPRIATIONS FOR ACQUISITION OF REAL PROPERTY BY ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION (S. REPT. NO. 2808)

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, from the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, I report an original bill to amend Public Law 506, 84th Congress, 2d session, to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission for acquisition or condemnation of real property or any facilities, or for plant or facility acquisition, construction, or expansion, and for other purposes, and I submit a report thereon. The bill relates to two appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission. The House has these appropriaitons in a special bill; but because of the lateness of the hour, it is my opinion that we may have trouble getting to that bill until tomorrow. Therefore, I believe this bill should be on the Senate Calendar. It involves the expenditure of about $24 million. The budget estimate is for about $14 million. It is essential to the defense of our country that the bill be passed, because it will require authorization.

I will discuss what we may be able to do with it, later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

The bill (S. 4288) to amend Public Law 506, 84th Congress, 2d session, to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission for acquisition or condemnation of real property or any facilities, or for plant or facility acquisition, construction, or expansion, and for other purposes, reported by Mr. ANDERSON, from the Joint Committee, was read twice by its title and placed on the calendar.

PAYMENT OF WAR DAMAGE CLAIMS AND RETURN OF VESTED ASSETS (S. REPT. NO. 2809)

Under authority of the order of the Senate of July 23, 1956,

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 4205) to provide funds to pay nationals of the United States who have war damage claims against Germany and Japan, without additional direct appropriations therefor, and to amend the Trading With the Enemy Act and the War Claims Act of 1948, as amended, which was ordered to be printed.

REPORT ENTITLED "GASOLINE PRICE WAR IN NEW JERSEY" (S. REPT. NO. 2810)

CARE AND TREATMENT OF NARCOTIC ADDICTS AT FACILITIES OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Texas [Mr. DANIEL], the Senator from Idaho [Mr WELKER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER], I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to authorize the care and treatment at facilities of the Public Health Service of narcotic addicts committed by State courts and other authorities, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a portion of Senate Report No. 1850, entitled "Treatment and Rehabilitation of Narcotic Addicts," which relates to the same subject matter contained in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the portion of the report referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4296) to authorize the care and treatment at facilities of the Public Health Service of narcotic addicts committed by State courts and other authorities, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. EASTLAND (for himself and other Senators), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The portion of Senate Report No. 1850, presented by Mr. EASTLAND, is as follows:

AN APPRAISAL OF THE EXISTING TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION PROGRAM

The Federal Government operates two world-famed narcotics hospitals, the Public Health Service Hospitals at Lexington, Ky., and Fort Worth, Tex. The land, plant, and equipment of these two institutions represent a total original investment of $10.5 million, covering more than 2,000 acres. Estimated operating costs for fiscal 1957 are $5,328,100. Men and women are treated at Lexington, and men only are admitted to the Fort Worth hospital.

Many of the physicians and scientists assigned to the hospitals are internationally known, and they work with the benefit of the finest research facilities. The hospitals have pioneered in the development of methods of treatment. Here are conducted studies dealing with the nature of drug addiction and the abusive use of narcotic drugs, while other research aims at finding improved methods of treatment and rehabilitation of persons addicted to the use of narcotic drugs. These hospitals have beds for 2,313 patients, and 1,574 are now reserved for narcotic addicts. During 1955, there were 3,638 addict admissions, and during the 20 years the hospitals have been in operation more than 35,000 addict-patients have been admitted for treatment and psychiatric care, for a total of almost 54,000 separate admissions.

These Public Health Service hospitals, despite a shortage of psychiatrists and other professional help, are doing highly creditable jobs. They withdraw the addicts from drugs; they restore them to health physically; and they teach the addicts good work habits and train them to be self-supporting. However, if we measure success in terms of the number of permanent "cures," these two important institutions, for reasons we discuss below, are failing to accomplish their full mission.

FINDINGS

Existing procedures and facilities for the treatment and rehabilitation of drug addicts are inadequate and require substantial improvements

1. Less Than 15 Percent of the Victims of Drug Addiction Are Being Successfully Cured Today

Less than 15 percent of the thousands of addict-patients who have been treated at Federal narcotics hospitals have remained free of the drugs thereafter. One out of every three addicts treated comes back for another "cure." In fact, 40 percent of the admissions to Lexington and Fort Worth are repeaters. This rate of relapse is one of the most discouraging aspects of treatment. Addict after addict testified before our subcommittee that they had returned to the use of drugs within a month or even the day after their release from Lexington and Fort Worth, although they spoke highly of the method of treatment at the hospitals. Even Federal officials in charge of the hospitals agree that cures, in the strict medical sense, are presently impossible for the vast majority of drug addicts. With young people this is especially tragic, for it means a lifetime of slavish addiction to drugs, criminal activities to support themselves and their habit, and spreading their addiction to others. This failure cannot be attributed to the treatment methods within the institution. Rather, it is the result of two main weaknesses: First, poor admission procedures which permit voluntary addicts to come and go at will and, second, the utter lack of community followthrough programs to receive the addict-patient upon his discharge.

2. Seventy-five Percent of the Drug Addicts Who Volunteer for Treatment in Federal Narcotics Hospitals Demand To Leave Before They Fully Benefit From Medical and Psychiatric Treatment

Voluntary patients account for two-thirds of the admissions to Federal narcotics hospitals. Only 25 percent of these remain for the recommended minimum period of 4½ months. Of the 75 percent who do not stay for the minimum period of treatment, 50 percent leave in less than 30 days. Only the one-third admitted under court orders are required to remain the full time prescribed by the hospital staffs.

Commenting on this abnormally high rate of turnover, Dr. Harris Isbell, Director of Research, Public Health Service Hospital, Lexington, Ky., testified:

"Drug addicts frequently come to the hospital for a very superficial reason. Some of them may come there because they are mad at a peddler who suddenly raised his prices; that is their only reason for coming. Others may come simply to get the degree of addiction reduced to where their habits do not cost so much. Many of them come under pressure from their families, not really of their own free will, their own wish, and accord.

"Addicts are a group who, even in treatment, will vacillate. They are very changeable and immature people. One day they may be really desiring to get away from addiction. This frame of mind may last for a matter of days or weeks, then they will have a change of mind."

Many addicts have been in and out of our Federal narcotics hospitals as high as 20 and some as high as 30 times, although never staying long enough at any one time to be cured of drug addiction. The result is a revolving door type of operation which is expensive for the hospitals, and of very little benefit to the addict-patient and the community.

3. Voluntary Admission Is a Loose, Hodgepodge Procedure, Without Federal or State Control or Supervision

Because of the voluntary system of admissions, the Federal narcotics hospitals are processing, and often reprocessing, a continuous stream of drug addicts. Their addiction to narcotic drugs and their stay at the Federal hospitals are confidential.[1] In most instances State authorities do not know they are under treatment, and the Federal authorities are prohibited by law from telling them. This prohibition applies not only to disclosing their names to appropriate agencies, but it applies also to clinical data which might otherwise be forwarded to community social and welfare agencies to help the addict when he returns home. The Federal Government has no followup facility for rehabilitation, and the effect of the law is that it even prevents the hospital authorities from advising and working with State and municipal agencies in order that a discharged addict patient might receive every opportunity for rehabilitation and, in the event of relapse, that he might be promptly recommitted.

Hospital authorities told the subcommittee that, because of the law, they do not know what happens to two out of three discharged addict-patients. They are released upon their own demand to descend upon an unsuspecting community like carriers of a contagious disease, except that these individuals also plague the community with crime to support themselves and, inevitably, their recurring narcotic addiction.

[1] Public Health Service Act (42 U. S. C., 260 (d)) "* * * and the record of his voluntary commitment shall be confidential and shall not be divulged."

4. State and Local Treatment Facilities Are Meager, and State Courts Lack Authority To Commit Drug Addicts Directly to Federal Narcotics Hospitals

It is a regrettable weakness in the Federal program that permits an individual addict from any city or State to volunteer for treatment and leave as he wishes, and yet denies to State courts the authority to commit an addict to the Public Health Service hospitals, even on a reimbursable basis. This is particularly significant when we recognize that State and local-treatment facilities are extremely meager.

Because of the enormous capital investment which would be required to establish suitable treatment facilities, only one State, New York, has been able to assign a hospital solely to the treatment of drug addiction. It is available, however, only to addicts under 21.

New Jersey has a special narcotics commission working on a new set of laws and regulations making it possible for drug addicts to receive treatment in the State hospital system. Los Angeles County in California has a plan also in process of development which would provide treatment in county hospitals. Measures to permit treatment in State institutions are under consideration in California and Ohio.

Because of the limited State narcotics hospital facilities and, also, because of the abuses inherent in the voluntary-type admission in the Federal hospitals, many Federal and State authorities told the subcommittee that it was a matter of urgency that the Surgeon General be authorized to accept in Federal narcotics hospitals, drug addicts committed for treatment by State courts. We were cautioned, at the same time, that all efforts to cure drug addiction without long-term supervision have met with consistent failure and that, consequently, State commitment authority must depend upon establishment of local rehabilitation programs.

Attorney General Jacob K. Javits of New York, chairman of the committee on narcotics of the National Association of Attorneys General, made several constructive proposals to the subcommittee regarding treatment and rehabilitation and presented the following resolution by the National Association of Attorneys General which was adopted at its meeting at Bretton Woods, September 1955:

"Narcotic drugs

"Whereas this association, by appropriate resolutions adopted at its annual meetings in 1952, 1953, and 1954, established a committee on narcotic drug control, which has sought to advance the care, treatment, and rehabilitation of narcotic drug addicts, and has urged the enactment by the Congress of legislation to permit the institutionalizing of such addicts in appropriate Federal hospitals upon commitment thereto by the courts of competent jurisdiction of the States and other measures: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the 49th annual meeting of the National Association of Attorneys General:

"1. Supports the enactment of legislation by the Congress now contained in the Payne bill, Senate Joint Resolution 19, to permit narcotic addicts committed from the States to be treated in the special United States Public Health hospitals, subject to reimbursement for the care cost, and urges its members to work for such enactment.

"2. Supports the development of a permanent national narcotics policy and urges a national review conference to be called under the auspices of the Federal Government to consider means for the coordination of existing Federal and State narcotics laws and procedures, stricter enforcement of laws dealing with the narcotics traffic, and the establishment of a program of research into the causes and cure of narcotic addiction through the National Institutes of Health, with the aid of a national council."

5. Community Followup, or Rehabilitation Facilities and Services for the Discharged Addict-Patient Are Virtually Nonexistent

A major weakness in current efforts to treat and rehabilitate drug addicts is the almost complete lack of followup or post-hospitalization facilities on the community level to check upon and aid the addict once he leaves the Federal narcotics hospital. The Federal Government does not and should not take the initiative in following through hospital care by providing the addict with rehabilitation services after he has returned to his home community. This is an area which properly calls for action by State and local governments, but it is also one in which inaction can completely nullify Federal efforts. Emphasizing the vital importance of community followup, Dr. Raphael R. Gamso, medical superintendent of Riverside Hospital for juvenile addicts in New York City said:

"The period in the hospital is a very important period, but the period after return to the community is equally important, probably more so, because when a person leaves the hospital he is again subjected to the same forces which caused him to use drugs, and if we cannot protect him from those forces and help him to sustain himself, he has lost the benefit of hospital care."

The situation as it was described to us by medical authorities, enforcement officials, probation officers, and even the addicts themselves can be summarized as one of rejection and abandonment by the home community. This is not solely because they have been drug addicts, but because inevitably most of them have criminal records, and according to law enforcement opinion and statistics, a majority of today's addict population became involved in law violations prior to addiction.

Some of the specific difficulties encountered by returned addicts in New York City and outlined in a special report prepared for the subcommittee by Mr. Morris Kuznesof, United States probation officer, Southern District of New York, are typical of many of the problems described to the subcommittee in cities throughout the country:

"Because, as a rule, the public abhors the addict, his problems of adjustment are greater after he returns from the hospital, than are other prisoners released from jail. In the first place, he cannot let a prospective employer know where he has been, or that he is a former user, as addicts are considered to be very undependable, unreliable workers. To add to his difficulties, the New York State Employment Service will not refer any adult individual who has a history of narcotics use, presumably for the same reasons.

"The returned addict requires a good deal of help immediately after his arrival. If he does not have a sympathetic family, which can supply his needs, he must turn to social agencies for help. Private casework agencies have religiously refused to assist former addicts. Local psychiatrists have also refused to accept the cases of addicts, even though they were able to pay the fee."

As long as State and local communities thus fail to provide even the minimum aftercare programs, the vast expenditures of funds and energy at our Federal narcotics hospitals will be virtually wasted. Dr. G. Halsey Hunt, Assistant Surgeon General, USPHS, in his testimony before the subcommittee stated:

"It is our increasingly overpowering feeling that hospital care is only the first step, and that the local communities to which the patients return after they leave the hospital must, if treatment is to be successful in any appreciable number of patients, pick up the ball and provide facilities for rehabilitation of the individual in his home environment."

That the failure of the local communities to provide suitable followthrough procedures and facilities is mainly responsible for the narrow success of Lexington and Fort Worth in obtaining permanent cures, is pointed up in the testimony of Dr. Harris Isbell, Director of the Addiction Research Center, at Lexington:

"The main weakness we suffer from is the lack of followup treatment. A man may come to us and stay for 4½ months, and a lot of money is spent on him; he then goes back to his local community and leaves our jurisdiction. It is hardly appropriate for the Federal Government to go into those cities and set up followthrough facilities and agencies to aid the addict.

"A man can go through a period of institutional care and leave with all the best intentions in the world, returning to his community to find there is nothing there for him. He cannot get a job, and he has no resources, he has nothing. He goes to the social agencies and finds that they are already tremendously overburdened with many other problems. They are afraid of the addict and will do nothing for him, and in order to eat that man almost immediately has to drop back into some kind of criminal activity. But the minute he goes back into criminal activity, he is going to head back to drugs. A person going home after a period of institutionalization * * * needs a great deal of help, support, supervision, which is, I think, properly the responsibility of the community."

Only two communities—Chicago and Detroit—offer rehabilitation services on a local basis.[2] Both of these agencies attempt to help the former addict adjust to a normal, drug-free life in the community by providing a variety of services. For example, workers help the ex-addict find a job, give him financial assistance to tide him over until he gets a job and encourage him to talk over his emotional problems with professionally trained members of the staff in an effort to better understand himself and prevent relapse. The Detroit clinic, with two full-time employees and the part-time assistance of a psychiatrist, is unable at the present time to offer the comprehensive services originally envisioned for the clinic. Its main contribution so far has been in the identification of addicts for hospital treatment.

Experience at these two clinics has already indicated that this phase of treatment, like the hospital phase, must contain a strong element of coercion to bolster the addict's resolve to stay off drugs. Dr. Walter A. Adams, director of the Chicago clinic, in a statement prepared for the committee, indicated that almost all of the addicts who come to his clinic are poorly motivated to persist in the long-term efforts required for successful rehabilitation. Dr. Raphael Gamso not only recommended that comprehensive aftercare services be made compulsory for released addict patients, but also that such services be thought of as a 5- or 6-year program for each patient.

Federal law may have contributed, at least in some degree, to the failure of the States and local communities to adopt programs to aid the discharged addict, for as we have stated, even if adequate facilities and services were available at the present time, Federal hospital authorities would be absolutely prohibited by law from forwarding the names and related clinical data to such community agencies. The confidential nature of the hospital records, therefore, actually may have prevented local communities access to the very information essential to them in determining the extent of the problem and, of course, the necessity for followthrough facilities.

[2] New York City has an aftercare clinic which is an adjunct of Riverside Hospital and therefore available only to juvenile addicts who have received treatment at Riverside. The Public Health Service also has a pilot followup clinic located in New York City, but it is oriented primarily toward gathering information and is staffed by two social workers.

6. No Facilities Exist for Isolating the Chronic or Incurable Drug Addict

Medical authorities and law enforcement officers repeatedly warned of the existence of a "hard core" of chronic or "incurable" narcotic addicts who were neither susceptible to treatment nor isolated to prevent the spreading of drug addiction. Dr. Kenneth Chapman, consultant, Narcotic Drug Addiction, Community Services Branch, National Institute of Mental Health, in his testimony before the subcommittee, stated:

"There is a hard core, and this is the group we hear about repeatedly, who cause the general feeling that drug addiction is incurable. It is those people we continually see, those people who are continually in the hands of the police, who are continually in the hospital, are continually seeking drugs. This hard core are the ones we see all the time; they are the ones who cast doubt on the possibility of any successful treatment."

Despite this knowledge—that chronic addicts are not amenable to cure, that they infect others with drug addiction, that they habitually engage in crime, and that, thus, they are a menace to society, neither the Federal nor State Governments has met the threat with special facilities nor the isolation, or quarantine, of these individuals. The danger of the situation is pointed up in testimony by Dr. Isbell, when he says:

"A chronic, relapsing addict with a long record might be taken in just for withdrawal of drugs; if we feel we can do nothing for him we will just take him in for 2 weeks or 30 days, after which we will discharge him again."

The pattern is endless, and so is the cost in terms of crime, taxpayer dollars, and human havoc. These incurable addicts who have in reality lost their power of self-control and who are dangerous to the health and welfare of the community not only are habitual criminals but also spread their addiction to others, much on the same order as persons with contagious diseases. Experts agree, therefore, that both in his interest and in the interest of community protection, the chronic drug addict must be quarantined or otherwise confined for long periods of time or permanently if relapses continue after releases from isolation or confinement.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That voluntary commitments to the Federal narcotics hospitals be abolished and that all admissions be processed through the appropriate district court of the United States for civil-type commitment requiring a mandatory period of treatment, or by State court commitments under the conditions hereinafter outlined.

2. That the Surgeon General be authorized to accept addicts committed by a State on a reimbursable basis under State court orders requiring a mandatory period of treatment.

3. That each State be assigned a quota of addict-patients which may be committed to Federal narcotics hospitals at any one time, therefore assuring that each State has fair and equal opportunity to avail itself of the limited facilities. In those few States where the number of addicts requiring treatment exceeds the established quota of patients at Lexington and Fort Worth, such States should assume the responsibility of establishing their own special hospital facilities for the treatment of drug addiction.

4. That States desiring to participate in the commitment program, in order to become eligible, must have satisfied the Surgeon General that suitable followthrough, or posthospitalization facilities have been established to aid and assist the drug addict upon his discharge from the Federal narcotics hospital and to determine any relapse to addiction. That the USPHS continue to provide technical and advisory assistance to States and local communities in developing followup programs.

5. That, for a successful followthrough program, commitment orders for drug addicts should provide for at least a 3-year probation status upon release from Federal hospitals, including mandatory provisions for regular reporting, and physical examinations and for recommitment upon relapse without the institution of new proceedings.

6. That no drug addict be treated at Federal narcotics hospitals on more than three occasions, after which, if found to have relapsed again to the use of drugs, he should be subject to State or Federal proceedings designatiig him as an habitual narcotic addict and committing him to an indeterminate quarantine type of confinement at a suitable narcotics farm which, it is recommended, be established with joint Federal-State planning and financing, such arrangement to include either:

(a) individual States, or

(b) a group of States entering into a compact for such purpose.

7. That the Public Health Service Act be amended to authorize the divulgence of information relating to narcotic addicts to appropriate Federal and State authorities in charge of treatment and rehabilitation programs and to the Federal Bureau of Narcotics.

8. That the Surgeon General continue and expand, where needed, the existing Federal research program into the causes, treatment, and rehabilitation of drug addicts, and that annual reports on the progress of such research be made to the appropriate committees of the Congress.

It should be noted that these recommendations for treatment and rehabilitation are not intended as a substitute for criminal confinement and punishment of those addicts who are convicted of law violations. They should pay their debt to society the same as nonaddicts, and proper law enforcement and confinement in such instances will do much toward minimizing the narcotics traffic and addiction in the United States.

AMENDMENT OF SOIL BANK ACT OF 1956

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference, a bill to amend the Soil Bank Act of 1956, so as to establish a more fair and just method of payment under the program.

The bill provides that a crop may be placed in the soil bank not less than 30 days prior to harvesting.

In addition, it provides that payment shall be made on the basis of a net return of normal yield, rather than on appraisal of the crop. This would provide a more justified rate of payment, based on the productive history of the farm. The policy of payment based on appraisal, adopted by the Department of Agriculture, will result in reduced payments to farmers in instances following damage to crops by weather and other natural causes.

SOIL BANK IN LIMITED OPERATION

As you know, the omnibus soil-bank bill—just recently passed by the Congress and signed by the President on May 28—has been put into limited operation.

Naturally, in the administration of a program so broad as to cover the whole field of American agriculture, difficult problems will arise.

As a matter of fact, one such problem has already come up.

I refer specifically to the method for determination of payment under the acreage reserve provisions of the soil-bank bill.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE PAYMENT POLICY FOR 1956

For 1956, the Department of Agriculture has announced that the method of payment, under the acreage-reserve program, will be based on appraisal, rather than on the net return realized from a normal crop.

There is an inherent danger in this kind of computation for payment.

For example, two men looking at the same crop may evaluate it differently; likewise, the same man, looking at two different crops, may have a difficult time establishing a common standard of judgment.

Bob Moses, radio director of the Wisconsin Farmers Union, recently telegraphed the concern of his organization over the difficulties that will result from this kind of payment determination. He has indicated—and I agree—that very real problems will arise.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Moses has indicated that some of these may possibly result in legal proceedings against the Department.

WILEY BILL TO IMPROVE METHOD OF PAYMENT

In order to avoid the problems which are already looming on the horizon from this kind of action—and which may result in much lower return to the farmers, I am introducing a bill which would provide uniform standards by which payment for crops would be made.

These standards, as I have indicated, would be: payments based on the net return of the normal yield, rather than on the appraised yield. This would be a fairer compensation to the farmer.

I am glad to report that a companion bill in the House, H. R. 11958, offered by Representative POAGE, of Texas, has been reported out of the Agriculture Committee, and is now on the House Calendar. Since it is imperative that this kind of specific guidance be available to carry out the soil-bank program, I am hopeful that the Senate will be able to act on it quickly—if possible, prior to adjournment.

I have recently contacted Secretary Benson, pointing up this inherent problem in the method of payment, as well as enumerating other factors to be taken into consideration in the administration of the soil-bank program.

I should like to point out that it is feasible administratively to accomplish what Congressman POAGE and I am seeking to assure legislatively.

In the event, therefore, that in these closing jampacked hours of the session, it proves impossible for the Congress to complete action on a legislative mandate, I trust that the Secretary, after proper review, will see his way clear to acting on this subject by administrative interpretation.

I ask unanimous consent to have my letter to Secretary Benson printed at this point in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4297) to amend the acreage reserve provisions of the Soil Bank Act to permit inclusion of acreage up to 30 days prior to harvest, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The letter presented by Mr. WILEY is as follows:

JULY 25, 1956.

The Honorable EZRA T. BENSON,
Secretary of Agriculture, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am writing to you to urge, most respectfully, that the conservation-reserve program, for participation under the soil bank, be put into operation immediately.

In addition, I am urging that nonbasic commodities receive equal treatment, under the conservation-reserve program, with that received by the so-called basics under the acreage-reserve program.

The provisions of the soil bank, I believe, should be liberalized as much as possible, so that Wisconsin farmers, and those of other States, may have the fairest possible chance to participate.

As you are aware, the State of Wisconsin will have wider opportunity to participate in the soil bank under the conservation reserve than under the acreage reserve, since the overwhelming portion of our Badger farm income is from sources other than the basics.

We must, of course, provide maximum opportunities under both programs.

Contrary to the announced policy by the Department, however, I believe the amount for payment in the acreage-reserve program needs to be a sum comparable to that which would have been realized from the net return of a normal crop—payments being based on normal yields, rather than on appraised yields. This would be a fairer compensation for the farmer.

As you know, a very serious problem arises in appraising crops, since it would be extremely difficult to make uniform appraisals of different crops which would be fair to all farmers.

We know, of course, that the basic purpose of the soil bank is not to be a substitute for disaster insurance. However, if—under unusual circumstances—adjustment can equitably and properly be made so as to provide as wide a participation as possible, it would not only provide much needed help for the farmers, but would accomplish the objectives of the soil-bank program.

The intent of Congress in the enactment of the soil bank program—we must acknowledge—was to bolster farm income as well as to reduce production of surplus products and conserve the nation's soil.

Recently, as you may know, in Wisconsin, there have been disasters resulting in tremendous economic loss for our farmers. In Polk, Fond du Lac, Marathon, Iowa, and other counties of Wisconsin, many of the crops have been completely "wiped out" by hail storms.

And so, I am urging that this situation be examined with the objective of thus providing all possible assistance to the disaster-struck farmers.

Under the discretionary powers granted by the Soil Bank Act, I believe that these requests mentioned above could be carried out by your Department.

May I mention, too, that in contacts with farmers throughout my state, I have found that information is sadly lacking on the procedures for qualifying under the soil bank program—not only in disaster instances—but even under the normal terms of eligibility for the program.

I am sure that this can be remedied, and that you will do so as quickly as possible.

I know, too, that you are extending great effort toward providing as wide a participation in the program for 1956 as possible.

Consequently, I believe that it would be sound policy to quickly carry out the conservation reserve program, under a liberalized policy for the benefit of the farmers of Wisconsin and the Nation.

With kindest personal regards, and looking forward to hearing from you, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER WILEY.

COVERAGE OF EMPLOYEES OF GALLAUDET COLLEGE WITHIN FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' GROUP LIFE INSURANCE ACT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2858, House bill 3489, to bring employees of Gallaudet College within the Federal life insurance program, and transferring certain publications from fourth to second class material.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3489) to amend the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 to bring employees of Gallaudet College within its coverage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service with an amendment.

AREA DEVELOPMENT

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] a question with respect to the jurisdiction involved in the bill just passed relating to redevelopment of depressed areas.

I recall to the Senator's mind that on January 4 of this year I wrote him a letter. In that letter I called attention to the fact that the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction under rule XXV of the subject matter of the bill just passed. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HILL. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas has been most cooperative and most helpful in behalf of the passage of the bill. I think the amendment which he offered to the bill, and which the Senate adopted, was a fine contribution to the bill.

In reply to his question, rule XXV of the Senate rules, found on page 32 of the Senate Manual, provides that the Committee on Banking and Currency shall have jurisdiction over—

Financial aid to commerce and industry, other than matters relating to such aid which are specifically assigned to other committees under this rule.

We note the exception. However, it seems to the Senator from Alabama that general jurisdiction over legislation dealing with financial aid to commerce and industry would be in the Committee on Banking and Currency, with the exception set out in the rule.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. To make the record with regard to future action under this legislation, let me say that a similar bill passed in the House was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Full Employment Act of 1946, which is quite similar to this legislation, came from the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate.

With respect to the last inquiry, assuming that this legislation becomes law, and an administrator is appointed pursuant to the provisions of the bill, the question of the confirmation of the nomination of such administrator would come before the Senate. Is it not the Senator's view that such nomination would be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. HILL. I should think, from reading rule XXV, without committing myself too definitely, that the likelihood is that the nomination would be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

We know that a rule was laid down by the Supreme Court many years ago, in a decision written by Chief Justice John Marshall, in the case of Muskrat against United States to the effect that it would not pass judgment or make a decision except when there was a live issue, when there was litigation or specific controversy in court. It seems to me that under rule XXV, general jurisdiction in dealing with financial aid to commerce and industry would be, and is, in the Committee on Banking and Currency, with the exception noted in the rule.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I have the floor, but I am glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Cannot the Senator from Alabama assure us that so long as he is chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare—which we hope will be many decades—he will not claim jurisdiction over the confirmation of the nomination of any administrator appointed under this act, and will willingly concede jurisdiction to the Committe on Banking and Currency?

Mr. HILL. I thank the distinguished Senator from Illinois for his hope. I certainly hope his hope will be realized.

As chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I will say that this question has never been considered by the committee, and I do not feel that I can speak for the committee, without consideration by the committee, or at least consultation with members of the committee.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. If the question of jurisdiction should arise, I would be clearly in the middle, as I am a member of both committees.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. So was the Senator from Illinois at the time he introduced this measure.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HILL. It is very painful to have to acknowledge that the Senator from Illinois is no longer a member of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, but is a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Naturally his first allegiance now must be to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement which I have prepared on this subject, together with two letters bearing on the subject, be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FULBRIGHT

On January 4, 1956, I wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare asserting the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, over the bill S. 2663 and reserving the privilege of requesting an opportunity for that committee to consider the bill. A copy of this letter was sent to the Senator from Illinois, the sponsor of the bill and the chairman of the subcommittee which held hearings on it. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

On June 28, 1956, I wrote a letter to the majority leader indicating my intention to ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

It had been my intention to move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. However, I realize that at this stage of the session such a motion, if successful, would have the result of killing the bill. I have also been assured by the chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], that he agrees that jurisdiction of this matter in the future would lie within the Committee on Banking and Currency. This would include jurisdiction over the confirmation of the administrator of the program provided for in the bill. (May I ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], to confirm this understanding?)

I have also received informally, advice from the Parliamentarian that, in his opinion, confirmation of the Administrator and future legislation dealing with the substance of this bill should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

So far as I am concerned personally, therefore, I am willing that the bill be considered by the Senate on its merits without a motion to refer it to the Committee on Banking and Currency. My own decision, of course, would not prejudice the right of any other member of the Committee on Banking and Currency to make such a motion.

For the record, however, I wish to state reasons for my belief that the substance of the bill lies within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Under Senate rule XXV, the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction over matters relating to the following subjects:

"1. Banking and currency generally.

"2. Financial aid to commerce and industry, other than matters relating to such aid which are specifically assigned to other committees under this rule."

The Committee on Labor and Public Welfare presumably would claim jurisdiction of this bill as a matter "relating to the following subjects:

"1. Measures relating to education, labor, or public welfare generally.

"10. Vocational rehabilitation."

The House bill, which is a companion to S. 2663, H. R. 11811, was referred in the House to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Another bill dealing with the same subject, introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], S. 2892, was referred to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

Although the purpose of the bill S. 2663, as set forth in its title, is to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of excessive unemployment in certain economically depressed areas, an examination of the bill will show that its principal programs to meet this purpose are such as would come under the category of "financial aid to commerce and industry," the language of the rule defining in part the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency. This language of the rule is followed by the phrase "other than matters relating to such aid which are specifically assigned to other committees under this rule." Thus, it is clear that the rule contemplates that all such matters of "financial aid to commerce and industry" not otherwise specifically assigned should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, regardless of what the purpose of such aid is. It is clear that the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction over matters relating to employment or unemployment where the method of dealing with this problem is a method within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Employment Act of 1946, which the committee report on S. 2663 cites on page 2 as background justification for its bill, was itself originated by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There are many other matters within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency that relate to employment; for example, housing programs and the Small Business Administration.

JANUARY 4, 1956.

Hon. LISTER HILL,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HILL: S. 2663, the Distressed Areas Act, was introduced by Senator DOUGLAS, for himself and seven other Senators, on July 28, 1955, and was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare on that day.

The bill provides for a number of forms of financial aid to commerce and industry in distressed areas, which are within this committee's jurisdiction under rule XXV. Accordingly, I feel it is necessary to advise you that this committee is compelled to reserve the privilege of requesting an opportunity to consider the bill.

In view of Senator DOUGLAS' interest as principal sponsor of the bill, I am taking the liberty of sending him a copy of this letter.

Sincerely yours,

J. W. FULBRIGHT,
Chairman.

JUNE 28, 1956.

Hon. LYNDON B. JOHNSON, Majority Leader,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LYNDON: I understand the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare today voted out a bill S. 2663, to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of excessive unemployment in certain economically depressed areas.

I enclose, for your information, a copy of a letter which I wrote to Chairman HILL of that committee on January 4, 1956. I did not receive a reply to this letter.

On January 9, 1956, S. 2892, to assist areas to develop and maintain stable and diversified economies by a program of financial and technical assistance and otherwise, and for other purposes was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The purpose of this bill is obviously identical to that of S. 2663.

The House Committee on Banking and Currency has before it H. R. 11811, "To alleviate conditions of excessive unemployment and underemployment in depressed industrial and rural areas," which will be reported in a few days.

I believe an examination of S. 2663, as it was reported by the Labor Committee, will clearly show that the Committee of predominate jurisdiction is the Committee on Banking and Currency. This committee under rule XXV has jurisdiction over matters relating to "Financial aid to commerce and industry, other than matters relating to such aid which are specifically assigned to other committees under this rule," and, of course, "Banking and currency generally." The principal programs under S. 2663 consist of financial assistance for industrial plants and public facilities.

It is my intention to ask that the bill, S. 2663, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and, if the House should pass H. R. 11811 or, a similar bill, to ask that it be referred to this committee when it reaches the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

J. W. FULBRIGHT,
Chairman.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I felt that it was necessary, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, to raise this question, because I believe it is my duty to protect the jurisdiction of that committee under the rules. So in the future there should be no confusion on this question, particularly with regard to the Parliamentarian's possible ruling.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 30 seconds?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. The reason I ask the Senator to yield is that I must leave the Chamber.

I wish to explain, in 30 seconds, why I voted against the so-called depressed areas bill. I wish to make the explanation while the able Senator from Arkansas is present in the Chamber.

The reason I voted against the bill was that, while I was in complete sympathy with the original bill reported by the committee, I felt that the amendments of the Senator from Arkansas were extremely unwise. I felt that they destroyed the safeguards provided in the committee's bill for protecting workers in areas that are now prosperous. With these safeguards deleted by Senator FULBRIGHT'S amendments I could not vote for the bill.

REQUEST TO FILE REPORT DURING ADJOURNMENT PERIOD

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency be permitted to file, during the adjournment of the Senate, a report summarizing its activities during the 2d session, 84th Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, has the Senator from Arkansas cleared that request with the minority leadership?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No; I have not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I ask the Senator to do that and then to renew his request. He will have ample time in which to do it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Certainly.

PAULINE H. CORBETT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3957) for the relief of Pauline H. Corbett. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3957) entitled "An act for the relief of Pauline H. Corbett", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

ESTES KEFAUVER,
OLIN D. JOHNSTON,
WILLIAM LANGER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

E. L. FORRESTER,
HAROLD D. DONOHUE,
WILLIAM E. MILLER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, as I understand, the conference report is on a claims bill, on which the House has receded from its amendment to a Senate bill. Is that correct?

Mr. KEFAUVER. No; the Senate amended a House bill by providing a larger amount, and the House has receded from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. As I understand, the conference report is signed by all the conferees.

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PROPOSED CIVIL RIGHTS BILL LEGISLATION

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I have received a telegram from a great number of responsible organizations urging the Senate to take up the House-passed civil rights bill at this session of Congress. I ask unanimous consent that the telegram be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 25, 1956.

Hon. HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of our organizations we urge that the Senate take up the House-passed civil rights bill in this session. Under circumstances prevailing in the Senate votes on procedural motions to bring up the bill are votes on civil rights.

Philip Randolph, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, AFL–CIO; Kenneth Peterson, International Union of Electric Workers, AFL–CIO; Patrick M. Malin, American Civil Liberties Union; John Blue, American Council on Human Rights; Leo Pfeffer, American Jewish Congress; Kenneth Birkhead, American Veterans Committee; John J. Gunther, Americans for Democratic Action; Edward F. Snyder, Friends Committee on National Legislation; Bernard Weitzer, Jewish War Veterans; Clarence Mitchell, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Mrs. William T. Mason, National Council of Negro Women.

SHIPMENT OF CERTAIN PERISHABLE AND OTHER COMMODITIES IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point. It deals with some amendments to the ICC Act and shipments of certain perishable and other commodities in interstate commerce. I also ask that my letter to the chairman of CAB be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAGNUSON

On behalf of myself and the junior Senator from California (Mr. KUCHEL), I introduced early in this Congress S. 1192, a bill to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to exempt operations in the transportation of livestock, fish, and agricultural, floricultural, and horticultural commodities from the act and from regulation by the Civil Aeronautics Board thereunder.

S. 1192 would exempt from regulations as freight forwarders nonprofit cooperatives and shipping associations engaged in facilitating for their own members utilization of air transportation in the interstate shipment of agricultural and horticultural products. This bill would extend the same exemption in air transportation for agricultural, horticultural, and floricultural commodities that is presently extended to surface carriers of these same products as a matter of national policy.

In this coming air age, when competitive rates are essential to survival, it is particularly vital that the economies of consolidation and bulk handling be provided to growers and shippers of perishable and specialized agricultural products, especially cut flowers and decorative greens. This is vital to the Pacific Northwest and in fact, to the entire west coast.

Such competition helps both the producers and the consumers, as well as commercial aviation.

We deferred action on the bill because the Civil Aeronautics Board was conducting an investigation into this problem. On April 30, 1956, the Board issued decisions, opinions, orders, and regulations which contained provisions substantially accomplishing the purpose of S. 1192.

Inasmuch as the CAB has done administratively what S. 1192 proposed to do legislatively, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has decided to table this bill. I have requested notification by the CAB should it ever contemplate any change in its decision.

JULY 26, 1956.

Hon. JAMES R. DURFEE,
Chairman, Civil Aeronautics Board,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As you are aware, S. 1192, a bill to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to exempt operations in the transportation of livestock, fish, and agricultural, floricultural, and horticultural commodities from the act and from regulation by the Civil Aeronautics Board thereunder, is presently pending before my committee.

The committee has decided to table S. 1192 at this time because it believes that the Board action in Docket No. 5947, et al., the Air Freight Forwarder Investigation, insofar as it relates to the subject matter of this legislation, substantially accomplishes the purpose of my bill. In other words, the committee is satisfied that the administrative action taken by the Board makes unnecessary enactment of S. 1192 to provide the relief requested by cooperatives and shipping associations engaged in the air transportation of agricultural and horticultural products, including decorative greens, for their members.

The committee is of the opinion that the Board decisions, opinions, and orders of August 30, 1955, and April 13, 1956, effective June 12, 1956, and the regulations issued thereunder, in this matter are appropriate to the problem.

In the meantime, I would appreciate it if you would advise me if there is any change whatsoever in the Board's treatment of these agricultural shipping cooperatives and associations.

Sincerely yours,

WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Chairman.

PROGRAM FOR THIS AFTERNOON

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to announce that I have agreed with the minority leader, and the Senate has agreed, to recess at 5 o'clock this afternoon for a reception in the Old Supreme Court Chamber in honor of our colleague, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. It is our plan to recess the Senate for that purpose from 5 to 6 o'clock this afternoon.

The leadership has also agreed that we will try to avoid rollcalls before 2:15 o'clock this afternoon. It is now 12:40, and we shall try to avoid rollcalls between now and 2:15 this afternoon. I understand the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has a speech of about 20 or 25 minutes, and that the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ALLOTT] has a speech that will take about an hour to deliver.

Some minor resolutions and some noncontroversial bills may be brought up by unanimous consent, if that is possible, during that time. After 2:15 this afternoon, depending on action by the House, we may take up some conference reports and some other proposed legislation, as to which announcement has been previously made.

I wanted to make that announcement now so that Senators would be on notice about our agreement and about our plans.

THE GAS BILL INCIDENT

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, on the 3d of February, in connection with the debate on the natural gas bill, I made a speech which became the background for an investigation by a select committee of the Senate under Senate Resolution 205.

The time for filing the report of that committee was twice extended due to unexpected developments in the inquiry. The result was that the report was finally made while the Senate was in recess at Eastertime, early in April. It was therefore filed with the Secretary of the Senate and has never had occasion to be presented on the floor of the Senate or to be made a part of the official proceedings as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Inasmuch as the RECORD, of course, does carry my original speech and the debate that followed incident to the adoption of the resolution creating the select committee, I have thought it appropriate that the report of the committee be made a part of the published RECORD of Senate proceedings for this session. I had expected that it might naturally be introduced at the time when bills dealing with elections and campaign contributions were considered. Since that does not now appear likely to happen and we are facing adjournment within a day or two, I ask unanimous consent that the complete text of the report of the select committee under Senate Resolution 205 be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1724) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There follows the report of the select committee which the Senate established by Senate Resolution 205. Specifically, the select committee was given the task of investigating the charge made by the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], which was in essence that there had been an attempt to influence his vote on the Harris-Fulbright bill, S. 1853, the so-called natural-gas bill.

[S. Res. 205, 84th Cong., 2d Sess.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES—FEBRUARY 6 (LEGISLATIVE DAY, JANUARY 16), 1956

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas (for himself and Mr. KNOWLAND) submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie over under the rule:

"FEBRUARY 7, 1956.—CONSIDERED AND AGREED TO

"Resolution

"Resolved, That there is hereby established a select committee to investigate the circumstances involving an alleged improper attempt through political contributions to influence the vote of the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], in connection with the Senate's consideration of the bill S. 1853, the natural gas bill.

SEC. 2. The Vice President shall appoint 2 members from the majority and 2 members from the minority Members of the Senate who shall constitute the select committee. A chairman shall be selected from among the members appointed upon their first meeting to be called by the Vice President.

"SEC. 3. The select committee is hereby authorized and directed to conduct an immediate investigation of these circumstances and report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the earliest possible date, in no event later than March 1, 1956, and upon the filing of its report, the select committee shall case to exist.

"SEC. 4. For the purpose of this resolution the select committee is authorized (1) to make such expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate; (2) hold such hearings; (3) sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjournment periods of the Senate; (4) require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and production of such correspondnce, books, papers, and documents; (5) administer such oaths; (6) take such testimony either orally or by deposition; and (7) employ on a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants and consultants as it deems advisable.

"SEC. 5. The expenditures authorized by this resolution shall not exceed $10,000."[1]

ORGANIZATION OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

Its scope and authority

On February 7, 1956, the Vice President appointed the following Members of the Senate to the select committee in accordance with the resolution: WALTER F. GEORGE, senior Senator from Georgia; CARL HAYDEN, senior Senator from Arizona; STYLES BRIDGES, senior Senator from New Hampshire; and EDWARD J. THYE, senior Senator from Minnesota.

The select committee met on the afternoon of that day and selected the President pro tempore of the Senate, Mr. GEORGE, as chairman, and former President pro tempore of the Senate, Mr. BRIDGES, as secretary. The committee reconvened on the morning of February 8, 1956, selected Charles W. Steadman as its chief counsel, organized its staff, and began preparation for hearings which commenced on the morning of February 10, 1956. These hearings were continued on February 20, February 28 and 29, and March 2, and were concluded on March 5, 1956. A total of 22 witnesses appeared and testified under examination by the committee. This testimony covers 849 pages in the report of proceedings (transcript).

[1] As subsequently amended to extend the life of the committee until March 31, 1956, and increase the amount of the funds to $20,000.

The committee brought before it, by means of subpena and otherwise, all of the persons that it believed might have pertinent testimony on the subject of this investigation.

The select committee was limited in its scope and confined in its authority by the express direction of the Senate, to immediately inquire into the limited area surrounding the circumstances of the complaint made by Senator FRANCIS CASE on the floor of the Senate on February 3, 1956. It was from this that Senate Resolution 205 stemmed and became the basis for this inquiry.

In his speech, Senator CASE announced his decision to vote against the natural gas bill. He assigned as a reason what seems to be a charge that there had been an attempt to influence his vote improperly on the natural gas bill through an attempted contribution of $2,500 to his campaign fund. He did not make this charge specifically. He did specifically disclaim that there had been an effort to bribe him. The select committee thus had some difficulty in discerning the exact nature of the complaint. This problem was somewhat aggravated by reason of the fact that, as the inquiry disclosed, the information known to Senator CASE on February 3, 1956, would have made it difficult for him to have known whether there was an attempt, improper or otherwise, to influence his vote. This factor prevented Senator CASE from being more definite. Because of this uncertainty the committee was required to make a penetrating examination of the complaint's character and content in a move to ascertain the exact circumstances into which it was to make inquiry. The committee does not intend to cast any reflection upon Senator CASE.

Statement of facts and comment

Mr. Howard B. Keck, who is president of Superior Oil Company of California, in 1947 or 1948 established, without any clearcut arrangement, a personal campaign contribution fund from which he gave money to Elmer Patman at various times, both in cash and by check, and so it would be available for various purposes. The distribution of this fund was left to Patman's judgment because, as Mr. Keck stated, "I am quite busy and there has to be someone who expedites those matters." Over the years, this fund averaged five or six thousand dollars a year. In 1954, however, Patman received $9,000, $8,000 of which was paid by a single check dated March 2, 1954. In 1955, Patman received either $8,500 or $9,500 from Mr. Keck. Keck was unable to establish the exact amount. It was testified that this discrepancy was caused by the fact that neither Patman nor Keck maintained any records, and Patman, under the arrangement, accounted to Keck orally when he happened to see him. According to Keck, the contribution to Senator FRANCIS CASE was not at his instruction, and, as Patman said, "I didn't tell him (Keck) until after the speech, and then I called him and told him that it was his money."

Elmer Patman "expedites" Mr. Keck's personal campaign funds, and is an attorney who has served as a full-time employee of the Superior Oil Company of California since approximately 1943. Previously, he had been chief enforcement officer, oil and gas division, Texas Railroad Commission. Patman, who testified that he performs legal duties for the company, has authority to employ the services of lawyers in other States. His arrangement with Howard Keck has been a personal one which he carried out while performing his company duties. It began when "A number of years ago, Mr. Keck began to trust me with matters over and beyond my official duties." The Superior Oil Company of California paid his entire salary and expenses, and bargained for all of his time.

Some 25 years ago Elmer Patman, while working and attending law school in Washington, D. C., met and became friendly with John Neff. Neff ultimately became a practicing attorney in Lexington, Nebr. During the intervening years, Patman maintained contact with Neff, and in 1947 employed his friend on behalf of Superior Oil Company of California to assist in the preparation of a brief concerning the Anglo-American Treaty. Again in early 1955 Patman, on behalf of the company, employed Neff to work as a lobbyist on conservation matters then before the Nebraska State Legislature. This employment of Neff by Patman was brought to Mr. Keck's attention.

In October 1955, John Neff was retained by Superior Oil Company of California, through Elmer Patman, at $1,000 a month. The ostensible purpose of this employment was that Neff would be available to handle legal problems of the company in the State of Nebraska. Both Neff and Patman confirmed in testimony that the only work performed by Neff in connection with this employment was that of determining the attitude of Senators with regard to the Harris-Fulbright bill, and the distribution of personal campaign funds of Mr. Keck. Concerning Neff's retainer, Keck "knew sometime after he was put on retainer in October that he was reemployed." He said that he approved of what Mr. Neff had done in attempting to make the contribution to Senator CASE. Mr. Keck testified, however, that no contribution that he had ever made had been "tied into any legislation." On October 1, 1955, Patman telephoned John Neff, and offered him employment as an attorney for the Superior Oil Company of California. It was indicated that this employment would be on a monthly retainer basis and would last for several years. Patman, in this conversation, suggested that Neff determine the "attitude of the Nebraska Senators with respect to the Harris-Fulbright bill." In this or a subsequent conversation on October 8, 1955, Patman also indicated that $5,000 would be available as a contribution to the Republican Party of Nebraska.

It is of the utmost significance that all of the activity that came to light here and everything that was done in this case was with respect to a bill pending before the Senate—S. 1853, known as the natural gas or Harris-Fulbright bill.

The $7,500 which Howard Keck handed to Elmer Patman became involved with the Harris-Fulbright bill. This money was a generator of the activity in this case—$5,000 of it was actually used for campaign contributions that had a relationship to the Harris-Fulbright bill. This money was given by Mr. Keck to Mr. Patman pursuant to the "loose arrangement" between them.

Based upon Mr. Keck's own testimony, his personal funds that were distributed through the arrangement with Mr. Patman averaged $5,000 to $6,000 yearly. It is therefore apparent that a sum approaching $50,000 has been distributed in political contributions by Elmer Patman. The very fact that insofar as the record reveals, this political fund was established with Mr. Keck's money rather than corporation funds lends emphasis to his awareness that these moneys were intended to be used for political purposes. There can be no reasonable criticism of Mr. Keck's desire to have elected to public office candidates who share his beliefs. This is a basic element that every person considers in making campaign contributions, and indeed in voting for a candidate. His contributing to the campaign of those candidates is a thing that he is fully entitled to do.

There appears to have been here, however, a remarkable laxity in the supervision and direction of the activities of Mr. Patman and Mr. Neff through whom the Keck fund was flowing. Patman was given almost appalling latitude by Mr. Keck, who contented himself with merely handing the money over to Mr. Patman, apparently with a hope that it would reach and serve deserving causes.

The select committee does not subscribe to the point of view that the distribution of this fund through others should insulate Mr. Keck from the consequences of the chain of events which were initiated by the use of his money. This does not relieve him of a responsibility to take such steps as will reasonably assure the propriety of its use rather than permitting his resources to drift with uncertainty.

The actual designation of the purpose for which the money was to be used was delegated to Patman, whose activities seem to have been uncontrolled. Mr. Patman's intended objectives were beclouded by an evasive line of testimony, but his intended accomplishments were not beyond discernment.

Mr. Patman was interested in the enactment of the Harris-Fulbright bill. He hired Mr. Neff. Both he and Mr. Neff testified that Mr. Neff was not hired as a lobbyist. Both testified that Mr. Neff was hired on a long-term basis to perform general legal services for the Superior Oil Company of California and work on conservation matters in Nebraska. But both testified further that their conversations in October 1955, at which time Mr. Neff was retained, embraced three principal matters: (1) Terms of employment, (2) attitude of the Nebraska Senators with regard to the Harris-Fulbright bill, and (3) availability of the $5,000 contribution to the Nebraska State Republican Committee. According to the testimony of both Mr. Patman and Mr. Neff, Mr. Neff's activity with respect to the Harris-Fulbright bill was to be confined to determining the attitude of the Nebraska Senators on this bill. He did this on October 11 and 12, 1955, and reported to Mr. Patman, giving him this information sometime after October 12 and before October 28, 1955. His mission with respect to the Harris-Fulbright bill would then seem to have been accomplished. Yet his activity was only beginning. He conferred with Mr. Patman in Washington on October 28, 1955. He was given $2,500 by Mr. Patman for the Nebraska State Republican Finance Committee. He gave this to Mr. Joseph Wishart, chairman of that committee, in Washington on that same day.

He went to Sioux Falls, S. Dak., on November 1, 1955, and spent part of November 2 in Sioux Falls trying to learn Senator CASE's attitude on the natural-gas bill. On the same day, after he left Sioux Falls, he stopped in Storm Lake, Iowa, to find out Senator HICKENLOOPER's attitude on the natural gas bill. He made a subsequent trip, or perhaps two trips, to Des Moines, Iowa, for the same purpose. There he talked with Mr. Robert K. Goodwin, Republican National Committeeman for the State of Iowa. Mr. Goodwin made inquiry about Neff and refused to become involved with him. He telephoned Wyoming to determine the attitude of Senators O'MAHONEY and BARRETT on the natural-gas bill. He went to Billings, Mont., to solicit information concerning the position of Senators MANSFIELD and MURRAY respecting this bill.

After a trip to Washington about the 12th of January 1956, where he received $2,500 for Senator CASE from Mr. Patman and $2,500 from Mr. Patman for another contribution to the Nebraska committee, he made a second trip to Sioux Falls. On this occasion he left $2,500 with Mr. Ernest Kahler in an attempt to contribute it to Senator CASE's campaign fund.

From the time of Mr. Neff's employment by the Superior Oil Company of California on October 1, 1955, to February 1, 1956, Mr. Neff's own testimony was that he had performed no services for the Superior Oil Co. except in connection with the Harris-Fulbright bill. During this period, on his statements for fees he included the expenses which he incurred on these miscellaneous junkets and for the activity in which he engaged respecting the Harris-Fulbright bill. These statements were sent to the Superior Oil Co. through Mr. Patman. Mr. Patman testified that he readily approved them without any inquiry as to their nature or the nature of the services in which these expenses were incurred. But across the face of three of the bills submitted by Mr. Neff, Mr. Patman wrote the words, "Natural Gas Bill" or "Natural Gas Act."

These facts which bear upon the scope of Mr. Neff's employment are of vast interest here for they bear directly upon what was hoped to be accomplished by his activity, and the activity itself is a bold witness to these intentions.

The following evidence spoke eloquently:

(1) The extensive activity of Mr. Neff in five separate States, and his expressed interest, to a greater or lesser extent, in the attitude of the Senators of those States in oil and gas legislation;

(2) From October 1, 1955, to February 1, 1956, Mr. Neff performed work solely in connection with the Harris-Fulbright bill under his retainer from the Superior Oil Company of California;

(3) The contribution of $2,500 in cash in each of two States;

(4) The typewritten list of the entire Senate membership divided into groups of "For," "Doubtful," and "Against," with certain Members singled out by unexplained signs or marks which Mr. Neff inadvertently left on Robert K. Goodwin's desk, and

(5) The initialed approval of Mr. Neff's expense accounts by Mr. Patman and the Houston office general attorney of Superior Oil Company of California.

In the light of this evidence the select committee finds it difficult to believe that Mr. Neff was on a frolic of his own and that he acted only upon his own initiative outside of Nebraska and his second trip to South Dakota. Mr. Patman testified that Mr. Neff had a lot of initiative. But it is hard to believe that Mr. Neff was entirely self-propelled. It may be that some of the things that he did were done without express consent from his employer, but it is certainly difficult to conceive that there was not an implied authority or an implied consent given to him for the conduct of his activities as disclosed by the record. The activity of Neff and Patman in dispensing Keck's money can only be characterized as galloping irresponsibility.

Whatever the long-term purpose of Mr. Neff's employment might have been, it is indelibly clear that the immediate objective was concentrated activity on the natural-gas bill and such activity was ratified and condoned by Mr. Patman, whether or not all of it was directly ordered by him. In utter disregard of his legal knowledge and training, Mr. Neff acted with consummate indiscretion in making his promiscuous contacts.

Issues presented

On the state of the record what are the issues presented?

1. Did the activities here constitute a bribe or an attempt to bribe or otherwise to influence illegally the vote of Senator CASE on the natural-gas bill?

2. Was there an improper attempt to influence the vote of Senator CASE on the natural-gas bill?

3. Did the activities of Mr. Neff and Mr. Patman constitute lobbying?

4. Was the $2,500 contribution which was made to Senator CASE's campaign fund a political contribution by the Superior Oil Company of California?

5. Did the payment of salary and expenses and of fees and expenses of Messrs. Patman and Neff by Superior Oil Company of California constitute a political contribution by the corporation?

Findings and conclusions

A. The select committee finds and concludes that there was neither a bribe nor an attempt to bribe.

The evidence is clear that the contribution which Mr. Neff attempted to make to Senator CASE's campaign fund was not conditioned upon the Senator's agreeing to vote for the natural gas bill or to take any other specific action. Senator CASE himself, while being unclear on the one hand as to the exact nature of the thing of which he was complaining, did define it at least negatively to state that he did not consider this attempted campaign contribution to be an offer of a bribe. The record is replete with testimony, moreover, that the contribution was given without the attachment of "strings." And there was some testimony to the effect that it did not make any difference how Senator CASE voted on the natural gas bill. Self-serving declarations, of course, do not make something other than that which it is. But the committee has not ignored this testimony. It is worth observing that the conduits of contribution, Messrs. Patman and Neff, had satisfied themselves that Senator CASE would vote for the bill before the contribution was made. In this sense, it is possible to conclude that the contribution was in the nature of a reward to Senator CASE for his supposed intent to vote in favor of the legislation. Or perhaps a kind of insurance to the donor that Senator CASE would continue to think and act favorably, the contribution being the premium on the policy.

While Mr. Neff appears not to have violated the statute governing this matter [2] in his attempt to contribute to Senator CASE's campaign, his conversation with Mr. Wendell Edson deserves comment. He may have come closer to a violation of the statute when he indicated to Mr. Edson that he would contribute to Senator HICKENLOOPER'S campaign if the Senator favored the natural gas bill. As Mr. Neff testified, "twenty-five hundred just seems to stick out everywhere."

Mr. Edson was not closely or officially connected with Senator HICKENLOOPER, however, and perhaps was too remote for such an offer to constitute an infraction of the law. The committee also regards a certain amount of Mr. Neff's conversation here as just talk. While Mr. Neff succeeded in not violating any law here, he appears to have had every intention to do so.

B. The next issue confronting the select committee was whether there had been an improper attempt to influence the vote of Senator CASE on the natural gas bill. To state it differently, this contribution was something other than a bribe or an attempted bribe; its exact character, however, and its significance presents a most complicated problem. In essence this can be reduced to the question of whether this was a bona fide campaign contribution as distinguished from a gift to a Member of the Senate in connection with pending legislation, the relationship of the gift to the campaign being only incidental.

Mr. Neff testified that when he saw Mr. Kahler on November 2, campaign contributions for Senator CASE were discussed at least to the extent that Mr. Kahler expressed the view that Senator CASE might need "funds, or campaign funds, or help." Mr. Kahler has denied that the subject of campaign funds was discussed at the time of Mr. Neff's first meeting with him on November 2, 1955. However, Mr. Kahler appears to have left the impression with Mr. Neff that he had a close relationship with Senator CASE, and it would have been reasonable for Mr. Neff to have concluded that Mr. Kahler was a proper person to whom a contribution for Senator CASE might be made.

This will point out the need to have every candidate for Federal office designate a person or persons as fiscal agent or agents who shall be officially authorized to solicit and accept campaign contributions. Such information should be made a matter of public record by being published in a newspaper of general circulation in the community where such agent or agents live.

But was this a bona fide campaign contribution?

It was made from a fund with respect to which there was testimony that it had as one of its purposes the election of people to public office who were sympathetic to the views of the founder of the fund, Mr. Keck.

Senator CASE had established a committee for soliciting or receiving contributions, although Mr. Kahler was not a part of that committee, and had a campaign for reelection approaching, so this is not in the nature of a contribution for a remote campaign.

As it has been stated before, there is uncontroverted testimony that there were "no strings attached." There was also testimony that Mr. Neff had inquired of Mr. Patman whether the contribution should be made before or after the vote on the natural gas bill. Mr. Patman testified that this matter should be left to Mr. Neff's judgment.

On the other hand, the fact is inescapable that Mr. Neff's mission in going to South Dakota in November 1955, and to Senator CASE's office in Washington, D. C., in January 1956, was for the purpose of ascertaining Senator CASE's position on the natural gas bill. Also, Mr. Patman gave Mr. Neff the $2,500 for Senator CASE after Mr. Neff had informed him that Senator CASE was favorably inclined toward the bill. Within a few days after this, and before the vote on the bill, Mr. Neff exercised his "judgment" and made the contribution.

The list of the Members of the Senate which Mr. Neff had and which he inadvertently left on the desk of Mr. Robert Goodwin in Des Moines in early November, set forth Senator CASE's name in the column of those Senators whose position on the bill was "doubtful."

These factors make it difficult to believe that this contribution had much more than an incidental connection with Senator CASE's campaign. Contributions are entirely within the bounds of propriety when the purpose for which they are given is the election of the Member and not for the purpose of influencing his vote.

The circumstances here partake of a meaning making almost inexorable the conclusion that the paramount motivation for this contribution was interest in the natural gas bill as contrasted with aiding Senator CASE's campaign. It thus follows that the offer of the contribution was for the purpose of influencing the Senator's vote.

C. One of the issues presented in this inquiry is whether or not the enumerated activities of Superior Oil Company of California employees brought them within the purview of the Federal Lobbying Act.[3]

If representative government is to continue as the great forum of public expression, individuals and organized groups must be able to petition or otherwise manifest their views to their elected representatives. This is a right conferred by the Constitution. The very expression of such opinion is a vital and necessary service to Congress inasmuch as the presentation of a comprehensive study of particular legislation, to be successful, must be extensive and informative. Legislators are thereby provided with valuable knowledge which might not otherwise be available. Important legislation involves the consideration of a multitude of complex problems which can be solved only through careful analysis and on the basis of extensive practical experience. An individual or group seeking to guide legislation places before Members of Congress the collective ideas, opinions, and conclusions of those represented. Legislators may then evaluate the issues in light of the advice and material brought to their attention by people representing all sides of a controversial subject. It is also by virtue of this presentation of research and experience by groups on opposite sides of proposed legislation that the problem may be brought into proper focus and perspective. This is analogous to our adversary system of dispensing justice wherein evidence and arguments are presented by opposing litigants, then weighed and evaluated by a tribunal in the interest of right and justice.

Attempts to guide and influence the course of legislation by individuals or groups has been defined as lobbying which, as pointed out above, is, in its proper use, a necessary and beneficial adjunct to the orderly processes of government. The danger to rational and enlightened legislative decision is not in being subjected to the arguments of individuals or groups seeking to express their views on particular legislation, but is in the difficulty of evaluating the information furnished when there is concealed from the Member of Congress the identity, purposes, and financial participation of those seeking to influence legislation. Another danger is that of combining political contributions and lobbying. Like oil and water—they do not mix.

It is the conclusion of the select committee that Mr. Neff was engaged in lobbying. In an inept fashion, Neff intended to and in some instances did make contact with Senators. It is significant that he sought to determine their attitude with regard to the natural gas bill. It would be nonsensical to assume that he would have gone to the extensive trouble which he did in acquiring this information unless he further intended to use the information in a manner calculated to bring those opposed or indecisive to a point of view favorable

[2] 62 Stat. 692 (1948) provides: "Offer to Member of Congress. Whoever promises, offers, or gives any money or thing of value, or makes or tenders any check, order, contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, to any Member of either House of Congress, or Delegate to Congress, or Resident Commissioner, either before or after he has qualified, or to any person with his consent, connivance, or concurrence, with intent to influence his action, vote, or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may at any time be pending in either House of Congress, or before any committee thereof, or which by law may be brought before him in his capacity as such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, shall be fined not more than three times the amount of such money or value of such thing or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both."

[3] Title III, 60 Stat. 841 (Aug. 2, 1946), the Federal Lobbying Act, sec. 307, "Persons to Whom Applicable," provides: "The provisions of this chapter shall apply to any person (except a political committee as defined in ch. 8 of this title, and duly organized State or local committees of a political party), who by himself, or through any agent or employee or other persons in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, solicits, collects, or receives money or any other thing of value to be used principally to aid, or the principal purpose of which person is to aid, in the accomplishment of any of the following purposes: (a) The passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States; (b) to influence, directly or indirectly, the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States."

to the bill. There is certainly no prohibition upon gathering information with respect to the potential position of a Member of Congress on any given legislation.

Whether the circumstances of this case required the registration of any persons involved in this inquiry is another question, but is not one necessary for this committee to decide. The incident examined by the select committee does emphasize the need, however, for a substantial clarification of the definition of those acts that constitute lobbying, the areas within which lobbying shall be permitted or proscribed, the ethical standards of conduct which will distinguish between proper and improper contact with Congress respecting legislation, the requirements for full and complete disclosure of those seeking to influence legislation, and the nature and identity of their participation both financially and otherwise. It is the committee's considered opinion that the language of the present Lobbying Act is too vague and loosely defined. Had the act been clear, the course of events examined here might never have happened.

D. Was the $2,500 contribution to Senator CASE's campaign fund made by the Superior Oil Company of California?

The testimony is that this money and, in fact, all of the $7,500 which Mr. Patman gave to Mr. Neff in this situation, was the personal money of Mr. Keck and was not that of Superior Oil. The committee, however, had no opportunity to audit the record of Superior Oil and is entirely dependent upon the statements made in the record concerning this point.

E. The circumstances here have raised the question of whether there was a political contribution by a corporation, in a sense different from that discussed above. The select committee has considered this. The Superior Oil Company of California paid all of the salary and expenses of Mr. Patman and bargained for all of his time. This same corporation paid Mr. Neff's fees and expenses. To the extent that Mr. Patman and Mr. Neff devoted their time to the dispensing of Mr. Keck's funds for political campaigns, was the Superior Oil Company of California making a political contribution? The select committee does not believe that this constituted a political contribution and was not proscribed by the law governing elections and political activities [4] nor was in any other sense illegal. This view has been followed by the courts in a related case.[5]

Disposition of $2,500 contribution

During the course of the hearings the select committee received in evidence the $2,500 which Mr. Neff had attempted to contribute to the campaign fund of Senator CASE. The Senator did not commingle this money with other campaign funds and ultimately on February 1, 1956, divested himself of any semblance of title through rejection of this intended gift.

Whether Senator CASE ever had title or color of title to this money or whether it was an incomplete gift is not necessary to decide. The law abhors a vacuum in title, in the posture of this case as we find it, when the gift was finally rejected by Senator CASE complete ownership of the money became that of Mr. Keck.

In the record there are some variances in statements by witnesses. In addition, there are several specific instances of conflict in and contradictions of sworn testimony. The committee has judged the credibility of each witness on the basis of the record. The matter of perjury is not within the province of this committee to determine. Nor has it been the purpose of the select committee to draw final conclusions regarding any other possible violations of Federal statutes. Such considerations are left to the Department of Justice.

Summation

The select committee, after examining the witnesses and evidence under the revealing light of public scrutiny, has concluded that the objective of the individuals who initiated and carried out this chain of events was to influence by political contribution the vote of a Member of the United States Senate. The select committee condemns such activity.

Lobbying is proper; contributions are proper—but they must not be combined for an ulterior purpose.

This is a case of irresponsibility run riot. Mr. Howard B. Keck delegated his judgment and responsibility with respect to the use of his private funds to an employee, Elmer Patman. Patman, in turn, delegated his judgment and responsibility to John Neff, a friend and Nebraska attorney. Mr. Neff, in a space of 4 months, covered 5 States and sought out the attitude of 10 United States Senators concerning a single piece of legislation. A sum totaling $10,000 was at least considered and spoken of by Mr. Neff as contributions, and $5,000 of this was actually contributed. He exercised incredibly poor judgment. Mr. Patman was responsible for the direction of Mr. Neff's activities and directed this activity either expressly or impliedly. Both Mr. Patman and Mr. Neff are severely censured for their failure to act as responsible citizens in these circumstances.

Mr. Donald Ross, United States Attorney for Nebraska, arranged an appointment for Mr. Neff with Senators CURTIS and HRUSKA of Nebraska. In appreciation of past favors Mr. Neff opened savings accounts for each of Ross' five children and sent the pass books for these accounts to Mr. Ross. He refused to accept them and returned the books within 15 minutes after receiving them. This committee believes that Mr. Ross' conduct in this matter is not reproachable and that he was merely a victim of an environment created by Mr. Neff.

Recommendations

The select committee makes these recommendations:

1. That the Justice Department examine the transcript of these hearings in order to determine whether or not any Federal statutes have been violated, and whether or not there has been any perjury by witnesses in connection with these hearings, and take such action as is appropriate.

2. That the Congress make a thorough and complete study of the Federal Lobbying Act.

The language of the present act is drawn so loosely as to make it difficult for even the best intentioned citizen to determine permissible and proscribed areas of activity, as well as whether he is required to register under the act.

3. That the Congress make a study and reevaluation of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act.

4. That the Congress consider the advisability of amending the election laws to require:

(a) That every candidate for Federal office designate a person or persons as fiscal agent or agents who shall be officially authorized to solicit and accept campaign contributions; that such information be made a matter of public record by being published in a newspaper of general circulation in the community where such agent or agents live, and that evidence of such publication be filed with the Secretary of the Senate.

(b) That every person, political committee, group, or other organization making any campaign contribution or contributions, the total sum of which is in excess of $5,000 during any 1 calendar year for the furtherance of the campaign or campaigns of any and all candidates for Federal office, shall file with the Secretary of the Senate a detailed account thereof including the name and address of the person or persons making such contributions, the date or dates made, the amount of such contribution or contributions, and the names and addresses of the candidates to whom said contribution or contributions were made. This information shall be filed not later than 30 days prior to the election. This report should include all contributions received prior to that date. Thirty days after the election a second report should be filed including therein all contributions received subsequent to the date of the first report.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I have another request to make, and then I shall speak briefly.

The first recommendation by the select committee in its report was that the Justice Department examine the transcript of its hearings to determine whether or not any Federal statutes had been violated in the matter which was the subject of the inquiry or in the proceedings thereunder. The subject, it was generally known, was under investigation by the Department of Justice. Day before yesterday, late in the afternoon, it was announced by Attorney General Brownell that certain indictments had been returned by a Federal grand jury in the matter. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, to place in the RECORD at this point an account of that action as reported in two of the Capital City newspapers.

There being no objection, the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TWO LAWYERS INDICTED IN GAS LOBBY—NEFF AND PATMAN ACCUSED WITH OIL COMPANY IN OFFER TO SENATOR

(By Morrey Dunie)

Two lawyers and the Superior Oil Co., key figures in last winter's natural gas lobby investigation, were indicted yesterday by a Federal grand jury.

The attorneys were John M. Neff, of Lexington, Nebr., who admitted offering a $2,500 campaign contribution to Senator FRANCIS CASE, Republican, of South Dakota, while working for the oil company, and Elmer Patman, of Austin, Tex., a full-time lawyer for Superior.

The six-count indictment alleges a conspiracy to violate Federal lobbying laws, an attempt to influence CASE unlawfully, and four violations of the lobbying statutes.

Although the indictment came as a surprise, the grand jury has been investigating the Neff-Patman-Superior matter since last February, Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., said yesterday the probe will continue.

Case ignited the situation February 3 when he dramatically disclosed to the Senate that he had rejected a $2,500 contribution by a lawyer who favored the natural gas bill.

Despite the furor raised by Case's disclosure and a unanimous Senate vote to investigate it, the natural gas bill passed the Senate by a vote of 53 to 38. But President Eisenhower, although favoring the measure to exempt natural-gas producers from direct Federal control, vetoed the bill.

The President said he favored its objectives but felt he should veto the legislation because of the "arrogant" efforts of a small segment of the gas and oil industry "to push it through * * * in defiance of acceptable standards of propriety."

Neff, Patman, and Superior were charged with conspiring between October 1, 1955, and February 6, 1956, to carry out alleged lobbying activities without meeting the registration requirement of the lobbying laws.

Part of the conspiracy, the grand jury alleged, arose when Neff and Patman received money from Howard B. Keck, president of Superior, "to be used principally to aid in the passage" of the Harris-Fulbright (natural gas) bill.

The conspiracy count also charged that Neff and Patman were to "make personal contact" with various Senators and to "cause to be compiled a pamphlet or brochure entitled 'The Natural Gas Issue—Background,' which would fail to disclose thereon its author or sponsor, and which would be designed * * * to support and influence the passage" of the measure.

Among the overt acts mentioned by the grand jury to support the conspiracy accusation were allegations that Patman gave Neff $2,500 last October 28 and $5,000 more last January 12, and Neff talked with Senators ROMAN L. HRUSKA, Republican of Nebraska, and CARL T. CURTIS, Republican of Nebraska, concerning the then-pending gas bill and that last October 28 Patman gave Neff a list of Senators "who were considered to be favorably disposed" toward the measure as well as those opposed to it and other Senators whose positions were considered doubtful.

In the second count, Neff and Patman are charged with unlawfully offering CASE $2,500 "with intent on the part of said defendants, to influence the action, vote and decision of the said FRANCIS CASE" on the natural gas proposal.

William A. Paisley, the Justice Department lawyer who conducted most of the grand jury's investigation, said this charge is based on a law pertaining to Congressmen and is comparable to a bribery offer.

The remaining four counts in the indictment charged substantive violations of the lobbying regulations. The allegations are:

1. That Neff was employed by Superior for the purpose of attempting to influence the passage of the natural gas bill; that he personally contacted HRUSKA and CURTIS in an effort to persuade them to vote favorably on the bill, and that he did these things without first registering as a lobbyist.

2. That Patman received money to be used in obtaining the passage of pending legislation; that he caused the issuance of the pamphlet designed to influence passage of the natural gas measure, and that he did not register as a lobbyist.

3. That Patman received $3,000 May 23, 1955, from Keck for lobbying purposes but did not file a statement giving the data on the contribution.

4. That Patman received $5,000 from Keck last November 9 and $2,500 from Superior last December 5 for lobbying activities and did not file the statements required by law.

Attorney Rober Robb, representing Patman and Superior, said yesterday, "We're confident we'll be vindicated." According to the Associated Press, Neff had "no comment at this time" on the indictment.

Paisley said the maximum penalties possible are: For conspirary, a $5,000 fine and/or imprisonment for 1 year; for giving money to a Congressman with intent to influence him, three times the amount of the money and/or 3 years imprisonment; each lobbying violation carries a maximum of a $5,000 fine and/or 1 year imprisonment.

TWO INDICTED IN GAS BILL LOBBYING—NEFF, PATMAN NAMED ALONG WITH OIL FIRM—UNITED STATES CHARGES STEM FROM $2,500 OFFER TO SENATOR CASE

(By Howard L. Dutkin)

A Federal grand jury today indicted Attorney John M. Neff, Elmer Patman, a lawyer for the Superior Oil Co. of Austin, Tex., and the corporation itself on charges of violating the Lobbying Act.

The charges stem from a $2,500 offer as a campaign contribution from Mr. Neff to Senator CASE, Republican, of South Dakota, during congressional consideration of the natural-gas bill.

Neff and Patman also were indicted on charges of offering "a thing of value" to a Member of Congress to influence his actions. The oil company was charged only with conspiracy.

Senator CASE, whose revelations brought about an inquiry in which Messrs. Neff and Patman and Superior Oil were named, learned of the indictments from a reporter for the Star. The Senator refused to comment.

PROBE TO CONTINUE

The indictment was returned before Federal Judge Charles F. McLaughlin in United States district court. Attorney General Brownell announced that the grand jury investigation, underway since last February, would continue.

Neff and Patman also were indicted on four other counts charging violations of the Lobbying Act.

Maximum penalty for the conspiracy charge is a $5,000 fine and 12 months' imprisonment. Maximum for the charge of trying to buy a Congress Member's actions is a fine of 3 times the amount of the bribe plus 3 years in prison.

The indictment charged that the two attorneys and the oil company organized the alleged conspiracy beginning in October 1955. The conspiracy extended, it was asserted, until last February during which time the natural gas bill had been passed by the House and was awaiting Senate debate.

WERE NOT TO REGISTER

The indictment declared that the heart of the conspiracy was that Neff and Patman should collect from the oil company and from Howard B. Keck, president of the corporation, funds to be used to push through the natural gas bill.

As part of this, the indictment charged Neff and Patman were to press for passage of the legislation without registering as lobbyists.

The two men, it was asserted, were to contact Senators and to bring pressure on others to persuade Senators to vote for the bill.

Among the overt acts listed as furthering the conspiracy were:

1. On January 12, 1956, Patman gave Neff $5,000.

2. On the same day Neff visited Senator CASE's office to discuss the bill, but did not see him.

3. Neff also discussed the bill with Senators ROMAN L. HRUSKA, Republican, of Nebraska, and CARL T. CURTIS, Republican, of Nebraska.

4. On October 28, 1955, Patman gave Neff $2,500.

5. On the same day Patman gave Neff a list of Senators. The list included names of those considered in favor of the bill, those considered against it and those whose positions were doubtful.

6. Patman and Superior distributed a brochure on the gas issue to Senators in violation of lobbying provisions.

In another count of the indictment, Neff and Patman were charged with unlawfully, knowingly, and willfully offering $2,500 to Senator CASE to influence his vote.

DISCLOSED OFFER

The Senator voted against the bill and revealed the offer to the Senate after rejecting it.

Patman also was accused of personally visiting Senators to press for passage of the measure while having failed to register as a lobbyist with the House Clerk and the Secretary of the Senate.

The gas bill, although passed by the Senate, was vetoed by President Eisenhower who, at the same time, criticized the actions of some interested parties.

Following Senator CASE's revelation, the Senate organized inquiries into the gas bill situation and lobbying in general.

The case was presented to the grand jury by Assistant Attorney General Warren Olney and William A. Paisley, special assistant to the Attorney General.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I have no desire to reopen debate either on the natural gas bill or the incident which was thrust upon me in relation thereto, and for which those active in the legislation here in the Congress, pro or con, had no responsibility whatsoever. I do think, however, that in order that the record may be clear for anyone who may have occasion to review this matter in the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that I should speak briefly on three aspects of the affair.

First, I did not make my speech of February 3 as a means of making charges against anybody. I made it to give my reasons for voting against the then pending bill.

As clearly and directly as I could, in that speech and in subsequent discussion of it, I said that the fact that the attempt to put a large sum of money into my campaign fund by a party or parties interested in the passage of the pending bill gave weight to the argument that somebody expected to make large profits from the passage of the bill and made me concerned lest the bill did not adequately protect the public interest.

I made no charge of bribery as such. Nobody made any proposition to me. No promise was made by me—nor was any asked. But I wholly agree with the conclusion of the select committee that—

> Contributions are entirely within the bounds of propriety when the purpose for which they are given is the election of the Member and not for the purpose of influencing his vote. The circumstances here partake of a meaning making almost inexorable the conclusion that the paramount motivation for this contribution was interest in the natural gas bill as contrasted with aiding Senator CASE's campaign. It thus follows that the offer of the contribution was for the purpose of influencing the Senator's vote (p. 9 of report).

The day that I established the identity between the man who had left the money in Sioux Falls, S. Dak., 9 days before I ever heard about it, with the name mentioned only casually in a letter received 2 months earlier as having inquired about my position on the gas bill, that day I immediately by telegram directed that it be returned if possible, and at the first moment I could get recognition, made my speech on the floor of the Senate the next day.

In fact, when I first heard that such a sum as $2,500 in hundred-dollar bills had been left with a person not connected with my campaign in any way, I had requested that the money be held intact in the way in which it was received and not spent, deposited, or mingled in any way with any funds for my benefit.

My speech of February 3 told of the incident to illustrate why I thought we should retain Federal regulation until it was certain that the legislation carried adequate protection for consumers and the public interest.

Second, I wish to have the record clear that there was uncertainty as to how I might vote on the natural-gas bill.

My letter of December 14, written in response to the inquiry made through the party at Sioux Falls said that while I inclined to favor it, I was retaining "freedom of action" should it appear upon analysis that the bill had issues which conflicted with what I understood to be its main purpose—"maintaining State control for intrastate development."

The letters in my office, written on January 11 and 12 in response to letters from constituents, presumably the letters which Mr. Neff saw when he called at the office and talked with my legislative clerk, those letters clearly left in doubt how I might vote on the bill. They carried this language:

> The bill has received a great deal of discussion by proponents and opponents, and I shall be very much interested in following the debate on the floor. I should like, of course, to be assured that the natural gas consumer will not be charged exorbitant prices for the product, but I question the advisability of the Federal Government exercising control of commodities at their source.

There was no pledge in any letter to vote one way or another on the bill.

I mention these points, Mr. President, only because it appears that some persons thought I was committed to vote for the bill and that if so, I should have continued to vote for it regardless of the offer of the money for reelection purposes. They possibly have not known of these passages in my letters and they overlooked what I have stated earlier—namely, that the attempted use of large sums of money to influence a vote of itself, in my opinion, indicated that the bill offered extraordinary profits to some and was deficient in protection of the public interest.

As for Mr. Neff's idea of how certain or uncertain my vote was, his letter to the effect that I was a wise legislator to withhold judgment until the debate on the bill took place and the fact that I was in the "doubtful column" on the list which the select committee discovered appear to be reasonable indications.

So, I would have the record clear on the fact that I had not been committed to vote on the bill one way or the other until I made the speech of February 3.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the select committee and its work. Seldom, if ever, has a committee been created that placed upon exceedingly busy senators the extra chore that service on this particular committee entailed.

To each of the four, the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], whose abilities and high sense of honor have so eloquently been mentioned on the floor of the Senate in recent days, chairman; the distinguished and venerable Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], chairman of the Appropriations Committee, a man whom I admired long before I came to this body; the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], dean of the Republican Senators, who entered the Senate when I first entered the House of Representatives, and with whom I shared my first national radio hookup as a freshman Member of Congress many years ago; and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], loved and respected in my State of South Dakota, which was the State of his birth—to each of these Senators I wish to express my deep appreciation for the diligence with which they applied themselves to the extra burden of work and to the impartiality with which they pursued their responsibilities.

My President, I also wish to express my appreciation to the distinguished majority leader, Senator LYNDON JOHNSON, of Texas, and to the distinguished minority leader, Senator WILLIAM KNOWLAND, of California. They were courteous to me in every respect during the ordeal or during the proceedings incident to the creation of the select committee and in all matters relating thereto.

They submitted to me the resolution which they proposed to present to the Senate. They consulted with me on its wording and made a modification in it. It is true, of course, that I did not ask for the resolution, but I felt that the resolution should be presented, and it was their judgment that it should be. I certainly wanted to cooperate with them.

So to the members of the select committee and to the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished minority leader I express my full appreciation for their courtesies and for their meeting of their responsibilities, which were extraordinary and which were over and above the normal duties they had at that particular time.

In this matter, as I suppose in any other, a very complicated pattern develops through trivial incidents which have no natural relationship, but which profoundly affect the course of its development. As I reflect on it, I suppose the committee was led at the outset to think that in one respect my account of the affair was deficient, namely, my statement that I had had no idea of the connections or interests of Mr. Neff other than that found by mention of his last name in a letter of inquiry many weeks earlier. The committee had reason to think, until the evidence in sworn testimony showed otherwise, that I might have had a visit or visits, by telephone or otherwise, with Mr. Neff concerning his interest in my vote.

But a careful checking of telephone calls, which was made unknown to me, both here and in Sioux Falls, a checking of itineraries, and direct testimony under oath of all parties concerned, however, fully sustained by statements that there had been no such visits and no direct contacts or acquaintance between me and any of the persons connected with the Superior Oil Co.

As a final comment, Mr. President, I wish to express the hope that the additional recommendations of the Select Committee dealing with improvements of our laws relating to campaign contributions and the conduct of elections will be given further attention by the appropriate committees of the Congress.

In that connection, I would suggest that consideration be given to a revolutionary approach to campaign contributions that would make it legal for any person or any organization to contribute to political campaigns "provided"—and I put "provided" in quoted letters by way of emphasis—the contribution be made by traceable means—check or draft—and that it be made not later than 15 days prior to an election and that it be reported not later than 10 days before the election by the candidate or committee to whom it is given. Such a change would make it possible for labor organizations, trade associations, professional societies, corporations or individuals, to contribute directly within specified amounts and get away from subterfuge, split committees, and devices of whatever character that our outdated election laws now invite.

The people, Mr. President, can be trusted greatly—if they are given the facts on which to make their judgments.

The security of our institutions rests with the freedom of informed expression whether in the ballot box or in the Halls of Congress. I close by repeating a sentence from my remarks on the resolution creating the select committee, February 6, when I said:

> My faith, Mr. President, is the belief that Government can be free, that good laws can be written, only when the minds of the men who write them are free.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4058) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad Co. for the term of 10 years a lease of a tract of land in the United States Department of Agriculture Range Livestock Experiment Station, in the State of Montana, and for a right-of-way to said tract, for the removal of gravel and ballast material, executed under authority of the act of Congress approved June 26, 1946, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3386) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to establish a commission for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Theodore Roosevelt," approved July 28, 1955.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12130) making appropriations for Mutual Security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. KIRWAN, Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. ROONEY, Mr. FOGARTY, Mr. TABER, Mr. PHILLIPS, Mr. HAND, and Mr. BOW were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

PROPOSED CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. MCNAMARA. Mr. President, throughout the 20 years of Democratic leadership in this country—under Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry Truman—tremendous strides were taken in the field of civil rights.

Minority groups in the United States for the first time caught sight of their deserved goal of first-class citizenship.

It is acutely distressing to me that progress toward this goal has been halted in the tangles of a parliamentary jungle.

This is especially distressing in view of the fact that the very minimum of what we could expect in the way of progress was contained in a bill which had passed the House. But when the bill reached the Senate, it was sucked into the legalistic quicksand.

Senate activities on the subject of civil rights, far from being concerned with the merits of the bill at hand, were confined solely to parliamentary maneuvering. To bottle up the bill, on the one hand, and to spring it loose, on the other.

It is a sad departure from the role of this body to consider legislation on its merits.

I believe there were two major issues before the 84th Congress—support of the Supreme Court's decision on segregation in schools and at least a minimum advance in civil rights legislation. I do not like to think we have failed.

INTERNATIONALISM OR ISOLATIONISM?—BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, a great struggle is going on within the American mind to determine whether our "internationalist policy should be continued at its present pace and form or whether we shall revert to isolationism.

No matter where a person stands in this internationalist-isolationist axis, we cannot deny that the success of our foreign policy depends first of all upon a thorough knowledge and understanding of the behavior of this earth's peoples—not just the diplomats, nor the politicians, but the common people of all lands. Without an intimate knowledge and thorough understanding of their deepest motivations, their interests, and their cherished ambitions, we cannot expect to tailor our policies to the environment in which they must operate.

The great battle which goes on throughout the world to free men's minds from the straitjacket of communism—is one that will go on endlessly. Some of the greatest battles to free men's minds will be fought in the less-well-developed areas of the world.

Areas that will achieve greater significance as we progress; areas in which we lack adequate knowledge of the cultural background, habits, customs, mores, and the underlying motivations and interests of these people.

I therefore propose, Mr. President, a plan which is set forth in a bill which I now introduce; and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed at this point in the RECORD, so that it may be studied by Members of Congress and by the people of this country, for consideration in the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4293) to promote individual liberty and development through international understanding, introduced by Mr. ALLOTT, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress hereby finds that, in order to complement the notable efforts of the private and governmental organizations of this country to diffuse the principles of individual freedom and development, it is necessary to obtain a broader base of understanding with all peoples of the world, particularly in areas less advanced economically. Therefore the purposes of this act are (1) to encourage the establishment and development of programs of study of the cultural background, habits, customs, mores, and underlying motivations and interests of such people in order that we may obtain a knowledge and understanding of them which, if available, would make it possible to bring to them a better comprehension of our principles of individual freedom and development, and (2) to assist people in economically less advanced areas to better develop their human and natural resources by providing more and better facilities for learning.

SEC. 2. The United States Commissioner of Education (hereinafter referred to as the "Commissioner") is authorized and directed to make grants out of funds appropriated for the purposes of this act, subject to the provisions of this act and such other conditions and requirements as the Commissioner may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, to public and nonprofit private universities and colleges in order that such universities and colleges may (1) develop and carry out programs of organized study by United States citizens of the cultural background, habits, customs, more, and underlying motivations and interests of the people in foreign countries in which such studies are invited, and (2) establish or expand, or both, centers of learning in foreign countries for the purpose of providing to the people in economically less advanced areas of the world access to modern techniques and sciences in order that they may develop their human and natural resources. Wherever possible the programs provided for in clauses (1) and (2) of this section shall be undertaken conjunctively.

SEC. 3. (a) In order to receive grants provided for in this act a college or university shall—

(1) submit a program, acceptable to the Commissioner, to carry out the purposes of this act or part of such purposes, and agree to use and use any such grants only as provided in such program;

(2) provide in such program for such participation in the cost of such program as may be possible, and for the encouragement of private foundations and organizations to take part in such participation;

(3) provide in any such program for study in foreign countries that only mature individuals of high intellectual capacity, having at least 3 years of education beyond the high school level, will be selected to make such study, and that such individuals will make such study in supervised organized groups; and

(4) provide in any such program for study in foreign countries that all information obtained in such study will be collected in usable form and made available to the Commissioner.

(b) Except as specifically provided in this act colleges and universities shall be allowed the widest possible discretion in developing programs to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 4. In order to more effectively carry out the purposes of this act, the Commissioner shall—

(1) coordinate the programs undertaken under this act by colleges and universities;

(2) make arrangements with any Federal departments or agencies offering language training in order that such training may be made available as needed to individuals participating in programs under this act; and

(3) collect information obtained in programs under this act and make such information available to the Librarian of Congress for public use.

SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I recently heard a man of God say:

If we are to understand these people, we must speak with them; and if we are to speak with them, we must meet with them; and if we are to meet with them, it must be on their own level.

No words could express more adequately our needs and our weapons in the struggle to free men's minds.

To complement the present private and Government efforts to facilitate our gathering progress in these areas, I am submitting a program to encourage study abroad by Americans of the social, economic, cultural, and ethnic attributes of the nations of the world—but particularly of those areas in which such knowledge is lacking.

In the past 180 years our Nation has gone from one extreme position to another. Our first President announced in his Farewell Address the principles which were to guide American foreign policy for more than a century. He said:

Our detached and distance situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. * * * Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

The Monroe Doctrine confirmed this policy in 1823 when the President said:

Our policy in regard to Europe, which was adopted at an early stage of the wars which have so long agitated that quarter of the globe, nevertheless remains the same, which is, not to interfere in the internal concerns of any of its powers.

It was not until our participation in World War I that we attained a sense of international awareness. This was short-lived. During the roaring twenties and through the thirties we saw a reversal of that feeling. We were bombarded with isolationist propaganda.

We had the Oxford movement in which students swore they would never again enter military service to fight for their country. The general acceptance of an extreme isolationist position blinded us to several incidents in the 1930's that were the storm flags—the forerunners and indicators of what was to follow during the 1940's. Despite this, only a vicious attack upon Hawaii destroying the greater part of the American fleet, finally electrified an isolationist, sleeping people into action.

By the end of World War II the leadership of the world had been thrust upon us. During the ensuing years we have devoted $50 billion in economic and military assistance to our friends and neighbors throughout the world in an attempt—

First. To make them economically strong and able to resist the onrushing tide of communism;

Second. To give them military supplies for self-protection against Communist military force, and Third. To provide technical assistance and know-how as well as supplies with which to develop and build their own economies against the poverty which is an invitation to communism.

Moreover, our assistance has not been limited to our wartime allies. We have demanded of the conquered—not the historical tribute of conquering nations—but merely the will to rebuild themselves along lines which would offer possibilities for individual and moral freedom.

To accomplish this, we have exacted tribute—but it has been from ourselves, the victors.

Is it any wonder then, that even the most internationalist and generous of us, is dismayed by some of the apparent results of this policy?

Today it is difficult to pick up a newspaper without finding some reference to Cyprus, or India, or Israel, or Japan, or Italy, or even France or Great Britain with whom we have cherished the ideals of equality and fraternity for over 200 years—without finding evidences of resentment of the United States.

In some degree, our troubles are the heritage of leadership. Britain found out in the last century that leadership cannot be carried on without offense to some people—part of the time. In part, our problems spring from our great wealth, because starvation and disease is no stranger to most of the world's peoples.

Another element should be added to this: The surge of national consciousness, now possessing many countries of the world—a surge not unlike our own 200 years ago. We, as a nation, should understand this in others better than any other nation on this earth. Russia understands it, and reverts it to her own purpose.

We have this perplexing, contradictory world: The victorious nation exacts tribute of itself, and its generosity is returned with resentment, and sometimes insults.

As a natural reaction to foreign criticism and distrust of the United States, Americans are showing an inclination to return to the hibernation of the isolated state.

There has arisen in this country a perplexity and frustration evidenced by the following excerpts from letters I have received on this subject:

MARCH 23, 1956.

DEAR SENATOR ALLOTT: * * * I think it is time that America started looking out for herself, and for her citizens, instead of being so much concerned with foreign nations. To give aid of any kind to any nations such as India is the rankest nonsense in my opinion. I don't mind paying high taxes for anything that will benefit this Nation, but I do strongly object to being taxed to support Frenchmen who won't pay an income tax, or socialistic experiments in Great Britain, dams in Egypt * * *.

JUNE 19, 1956.

DEAR SENATOR ALLOTT: People are convinced that most of this money goes down the drain as pure waste. We have demonstrated that we can neither purchase friends with our American dollars, nor stem the tide of communism by trying to play the role of Santa Claus. Fifty-four billion dollars since 1945 is a tremendous sum of money, especially from a government that is terribly in debt and unable to meet its current expenses without borrowing. Is it not time to call a halt to this reckless and wasteful showering of billions on nations that secretly dislike us? * * *

JUNE 18, 1956.

DEAR SENATOR ALLOTT: If you wish to keep faith with the voters, scuttle foreign aid entirely——lock, stock, and barrel. No more money down Tito's rathole or any other. This is one program that the President is entirely wrong on. It is unconstitutional, unproductive, creates nothing but ill will, and is too costly.

The idea of security and friendship through it, is false and erroneous. Point out one friend, or any security gained through it. We will always have to defend ourselves and any allies, and we haven't a real durable friend on the world of nations, other than by way of getting out of us what they can.

This does not mean we should follow a program of isolation, but merely one of worldly good sense. Let's use this sense instead of our cents * * *.

I quote these letters, Mr. President, as an example of the thinking I am sure is being indulged by a great many people. I would not say it is the thinking of a majority, but of a great number of people in the United States.

More and more Americans are beginning to believe, as they did in the 1930's, that we should resolve ourselves into Fortress America and simply ignore the rest of the world. Can we do this? Should we do this? To these questions I shall devote myself briefly.

Because of its geographical location, an isolationist philosophy has always been natural to our great country.

This was pointed out in the Monroe Doctrine and in the Farewell Address of our first President, to which I have already referred.

To the east and to the west, the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans formed a great barrier which permitted us to live through most of the history of this Nation in an isolated paradise. We were blessed with friendly folks to the north, and, except for two short periods, have had peace on our southern borders.

During the last 50 years, the new fast ships, and more lately the airplane, have moved Europe and Asia closer to us than the adjoining county seat was in our grandfathers' day. In this way, we have been forced into extending the horizons of our own thinking. We have had to start thinking of other countries and our relationship to them, as European countries have had to do for centuries. As our economy expanded, we demanded and received more raw materials—rubber, tin, uranium—almost endless is the list of raw materials we have swallowed up and used in our industrial machine.

In addition to these changes, after World War II the world looked to us as the sole surviving source of supply and for moral leadership. The other countries looked to us for military leadership. They looked to us for manpower, for technical know-how. The strongest nations—Japan, Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, Italy—and most of the industrialized world were prostrated by their war efforts; so the rest of the world sought our leadership, and it was necessary for us to extend our generosity to them and enable them to rebuild their countries and their economies. This position of world leadership is not one that the United States wished; it is not one that it asked for; and it is not one that we seek to retain—just for the sake of leadership. These, then, are a few of the inexorable forces that have led us to world leadership.

Having shown an unprecedented beneficence toward our former allies and our former enemies, the American people find it hard to understand why dislike for United States is apparently so widespread. But if, in response to this dislike, we abdicate leadership, there will be a vacuum, and no peace. Without peace, there will inevitably be engulfment by or war with the Soviet bloc.

We cannot abandon this leadership. The alternatives are too stark in their reality. But continuing leadership does not necessarily mean that we must continue foreign aid in its present form. There are other alternatives.

Since this leadership is inevitable, so far as the foreseeable future is concerned, we must, as practical Americans, and also as idealists, determine what elements not fully employed in the past can make that leadership fruitful in expanding man's desire to be free and to achieve a peaceful world.

It is not my intention at this time, Mr. President, to go into certain fundamental mistakes and grevious errors that have been made in the last 15 years in American foreign policy.

But one of the things we must ask ourselves is: What aspects of our actions have failed to bring other nations to a recognition of the value of individual freedom that we cherish in our hearts? And we must ask ourselves whether we really believe in that freedom, or whether we are merely rendering lip-service to it.

In the assistance which we have given to other countries, we may have paraded our own wealth arrogantly—and with too much emphasis on the material aspects of our achievements.

What we do have in America, we have achieved because of the Spartan sacrifices of our forefathers, their devotion to Almighty God, and an enterprising nature that has become indigenous to this country.

We have fought for freedom again and again.

We have established an elaborate governmental process to enshrine and preserve the principles of freedom.

We, who are Americans, must just as surely and certainly believe that this spark of freedom, this desire to be free, this desire to speak freely, to worship freely, to assemble freely, and to publish the fruits of our mind freely—all of these must exist in the breast of every man and woman alive upon this earth.

The true nature of freedom includes the compulsion to provide to all who live the same rights which we have ourselves. Obviously, we can never reconcile communism with this statement of freedom.

We know and recognize—as a part of our basic belief—that as each and every one of our fellow creatures is endowed with this great individual dignity, it must be nourished and fanned to flame wherever it exists.

So, Mr. President, if through our great military, economic, and technical assistance, we have failed to carry forth to other nations the spark of this great fundamental belief, there must be a logical reason for this failure. It is ironic that we could share with others so much of our material wealth, and yet so little of the essence of America.

Why is this true and what can we do?

We must, as has been said, understand these people, meet with them, and speak with them, but on their own level.

That is to say, Mr. President, we must understand the minds, the hearts, the cultural, national, and ethnic backgrounds of all the peoples of the world. We must, in effect, undertake motivational research in our efforts to make truly free the minds of the world's peoples.

For example, what do we actually know about the Arab nations, other than what is recorded in the history books? What is the great surge of nationalism doing to the attitudes of the Arab peoples, and what do they really dream of and hope for? And what do we know about the thinking of the Indonesians and the Burmese? And what about Africa, with its teeming millions? Here will probably be fought the most decisive battle of all, for men's minds; yet we know very little about them. And, last, what do we know about the millions behind the Iron Curtain, the countries now under Communist domination in southeast Europe, who have contributed so many thousands of builders and dreamers to our great American melting pot.

The answer must be that we know so pitifully little about a great portion of the world that will help us to preserve or lose our freedom.

I therefore propose, Mr. President, a plan which is set forth in a bill that I have introduced, to be studied by this Congress and by the people of this country, for consideration in the next session of Congress.

I propose that we make grants to American universities, to facilitate study abroad by mature and highly qualified students with a minimum of 3 years of college education. The grants would go to institutions willing to organize student teams for extended study, under faculty supervision, in nations where they are invited. To encourage university assistance to other peoples, some of these grants would go to universities which will undertake to organize schools and facilities for the training of local people, as well. By joining the education of Americans with the provision of knowledge to foreigners, through universities operating abroad, I hope to obtain the mutuality of effort which is necessary for the furtherance of international understanding and to provide a long-run basis for continued interchange of knowledge on a private basis.

More than 50 universities and colleges have well-developed programs for the study of particular areas of the world. By the addition of funds, we can exploit the existing resources of our American educational system to further international understanding. International understanding is best gained through "on-the-ground" laboratory work abroad; and the heavy costs of foreign study cannot, of course, be fully met by tuition payments. After the initial stages of development, I would hope that additional institutions of higher education would enter this field, which may be so productive to our future welfare. I further hope that as this program proves itself successful, additional financing can be found among private foundations and American business, to the end that the Federal Government may recede from the primary position.

Currently, many Americans are studying abroad, to gain fuller understanding of foreign areas and ideas. Last year, some 6,000 or 7,000 Americans were enrolled in foreign universities. Nearly 3,000 of these were supported by the GI bill, approximately 1,000 held United States Government grants, 600 or more had grants from private sponsors, and between 300 and 350 were studying on socalled "junior-year-abroad" arrangements.

A number of well organized and effective programs has been in operation to assist American study abroad. Under the well-known Fulbright-Smith-Mundt program, some 6,000 Americans have studied in foreign universities. But these grants are made only for study at the graduate level and in 1954 only 38 percent of the grants went to students who had just received their bachelors degree. In other words, a degree above that of bachelor is required in order to qualify for these grants, for the most part.

A number of American universities have made it possible for their students to study abroad in the third year of their college education. These programs are supervised by American faculty members and have the general purposes of providing American students an opportunity to live in another country, to acquire fluency in another language, and to obtain a better understanding of another culture. Certain American foundations have undertaken to finance study abroad by Americans. Perhaps chief among these is the Ford Foundation. In its last fiscal year the Ford Foundation granted 161 foreign area training fellowships which, in some instances, financed foreign travel. With few exceptions, these grants have been made to graduate students or faculty members. The Ford Foundation has also made grants to a number of universities for the support of their foreign-area studies. In addition, a number of American colleges and universities have partnership relations with foreign institutions which have involved exchanges of students and instructors.

There is much to be gained by giving American universities the chief role in the prosecution of this plan. Existing State Department programs have had some difficulty in distinguishing themselves from American diplomacy and foreign policy objectives with a consequent diminution of their value in furthering international understanding. It is recognized that the history of the Fulbright program has shown, according to a report of a recent conference on international exchange, that the most successful Fulbright projects have been those in which Commissions, American and foreign universities, professional societies, and private educational philanthropic foundations have collaborated. An additional advantage in making the university the focal point of this program is that the benefits are more likely to redound to the university staff and student body as a whole than just to the individual who pursues his own studies abroad. The long-range benefits to universities of this program are found in the fact that these young students who gain knowledge and interest will become the future scholars of their staffs, the future applicants for foundation grants.

In the interest of gaining true understanding, we shall avoid sending excessive numbers of cloistered scholars to work with other cloistered scholars. The purpose and intent of this program is not to furnish scientific people or people who have been perfected in professions, in an interchange with the world, but to send students to those countries to live with them, to study the language, and to learn to really know the peoples of the various individual countries. Despite the very great value of some of the existing programs, the emphasis on several years of graduate study, in the words of a conference organized by the Institute of International Education, "inevitably limits the peoples-speaking-to-peoples aspect of the exchange." In order to permit the unspecialized student to participate effectively in this program, I propose that the language training facilities of Federal agencies be opened for intensive use by participants prior to their study abroad. To date, language barriers have deterred extensive travel and study in many newly important nations; evidence of this is found in the fact that almost 40 percent of the Fulbright applications have been made for scholarships in the United Kingdom. I may also suggest that language barriers have prevented a full understanding of many of the peoples of the world.

The institutions receiving grants would be allowed the widest possible discretion feasible to develop and direct the program, including the selection of students. The Commissioner of Education would have general responsibility for administering this program, including the approval of the proposed program by the various institutions to the end that duplication is minimized. The universities involved shall cooperate with the Commission of Education and with the Librarian of Congress to accumulate and make available for general use the product of the studies abroad financed by this plan.

I do not contend that this proposal will itself solve the major problem of our time. But, by gaining understanding and knowledge by Americans of foreign peoples—that is, foreign to us, but not to themselves—I believe we can add another rung to the ladder of peace. As Secretary of State Dulles has said:

> We believe that human contacts are designed, not to serve governmental purposes, but to enable the members of the human family to have the understanding and the knowledge of each other which is a foundation for durable peace.

So, Mr. President, I offer this bill for the consideration and study of Congress. In the language of the bill, the purposes of the bill are—

> (1) To encourage the establishment and development of programs of study of the cultural background, habits, customs, modes and underlying motivations and interests of such people in order that we may obtain a knowledge and understanding of them which, if available, would make it possible to bring to them a better comprehension of our principles of individual freedom and development, and (2) to assist people in economically less advanced areas to better develop their human and natural resources by providing more and better facilities for learning.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLOTT. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I wish to commend the distinguished Senator for the scholarly address which he has just delivered. I know that he has given this subject a great deal of thought and consideration. I want him to know that many of us on this side of the aisle consider that he has made a distinct contribution to a better understanding of the foreign policy of this country, and that we appreciate the fact that he has come forward with some recommendations which have a great deal to merit and which we hope will be given serious consideration.

The Senator from Colorado is to be highly complimented for his very able address.

Mr. ALLOTT. I thank my good friend for his more than kind words. It is my sincere hope that the bill will provoke discussion and later, legislation, to accomplish its purposes, which I am sure are the purposes of all Americans, including all Senators, no matter on which side of the aisle they may sit.

RETURN OF ALIEN PROPERTY SEIZED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to speak briefly on a subject which I regard most important to our national interest.

Time will not permit consideration of legislation proposing return of alien property seized during World War II. I appreciate the hard work of the Senate Judiciary Committee in studying this expansive subject and reporting a comprehensive bill to the Senate. It is to be hoped that the work of the committee will merit action on this important subject early in the next session.

One very important and timely aspect of return of seized property is the need for manifestation of good faith toward the government of West Germany. I think no one will disagree with me when I say that the present government of West Germany under the leadership of Chancellor Adenauer is the most friendly to the United States of any government in our history. It shares our ideals and principles of democracy and there is between our Government and the Adenauer government a feeling of mutual confidence and of a common purpose in maintaining freedom and resisting dictatorship whether of the right or of the left. West Germany's participation in NATO, its opposition to neutralism and its continuing and firm resistance to seemingly attractive Soviet proposals show that it intends to adhere not only to the partnership agreement it has made with us, but also that it intends to be a partner of firmness and strength. Our self-interest in the present posture of West Germany compels our sincere manifestation of complete good faith.

A second aspect of this important problem is our adherence to the moral law. We are not a government of men and we cannot afford to temporize on an issue so fundamental as our recognition of the right of private property. Seizure of property during a time of conflict is not confiscation. It is a temporary measure to support national security. Return of seized property is an American principle supported since the founding of our Government. Any action to subvert that principle would be unthinkable.

The closing hours of this session void any opportunity to consider the merit of this important issue. I am in hopes it can be brought before the Senate early in the next session of the Congress.

REVIEW OF FOREIGN POLICY—X

THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION AND UNITED STATES FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, today concludes the series of remarks on the international situation and foreign policy which I began last January. This final statement is the tenth in the series. It is in the nature of a summing up.

When this series was initiated some months ago I knew that time would not permit me to discuss this subject as fully as it ought to be discussed. While the sum of these remarks is extensive, as the Members who have listened patiently to them are well aware, there are, nevertheless, gaps, important gaps.

I have passed over many details in the previous statements on southeast Asia, north Africa, the Middle East, the African Continent, Latin America, Europe, the Far East, and the Soviet Union. Moreover, lack of time has made it impossible for me to survey our good relations with Canada, our not-so-good relations with south Asia, and the status of our relations with the Southwest Pacific. Yet each of these areas is the scene of developments that are of great significance to the United States.

In this, as in so many other matters which confront us, the press of Senate business leaves us little choice. We do the best that we can and then hope that it is not too little.

I do not know whether this series of statements has done justice to the question of the international situation and our foreign policy. It is only one Senator's effort. While I do not regret the effort, I recognize its limitations.

Even the limited attempt may be regarded in certain quarters as unwarranted. I know that there are some who hold foreign policy to be of little concern to the Senate or Congress. Foreign policy, they say, is too remote from the interests of ordinary citizens. But, Mr. President, if World War II could cost Montana the grief of 4,000 casualties, as it did, then foreign policy is not remote from the interests of the citizens of my State. If the Korean conflict could inflict 500 casualties on my State, as it did, then foreign policy is a matter of vital importance to the Senators from Montana. If, in a decade, national-defense requirements can extract $300 billion from the earnings and wages of the American people and aid programs place on them an additional charge of $50 billion, as they have, then foreign policy is of the greatest significance to every citizen of this country.

If foreign policy can influence the course of world events toward peace or war, as it does, then the Senate of the United States has more than a casual concern in the matter.

This body has a deep obligation. We have a profound obligation to make what contribution we can to improving the Nation's foreign policy. In a nuclear age, with the dangers of sudden atomic annihilation ever present, it is perhaps an obligation beyond all others.

The Constitution reminds us of that obligation if, in our concern with pressing and important domestic issues, we are prone to forget it. From the Constitution, the President derives the power to conduct the foreign policy of the United States. And from the Constitution, the Senate derives the responsibility "to advise and to consent" in foreign relations.

The President's power is not expressed in the Constitution but it is clearly implied. The Senate's responsibility is not expressed but it, too, is clearly implied.

I have upheld the powers of the Presidency in foreign policy even when it has seemed to me that the President was intent upon delegating them to the Congress. I shall continue to do so. In the same fashion, I have sought to uphold the responsibilities of the Senate in foreign relations whenever, in my opinion, the executive branch has tended to overlook or circumvent them. And I shall continue to do so.

This Government, Mr. President, functions best when neither branch—the executive or the legislative—encroaches on the powers of the other. It functions best when neither branch abandons its responsibilities to the other. It functions best in foreign relations when there is cooperation coupled with independence on the part of both branches in seeking to serve the interests of the people of the United States.

It was with these thoughts in mind, Mr. President, that I began this series some months ago with an initial statement entitled "A Review of Foreign Policy Is Needed." Now, at the conclusion of the series, I am convinced that such was the case. A review has been needed. It has taken place in part and is continuing to take place. The newspapers of the Nation are heavily engaged in the process. Many Members of the Senate and House have made outstanding contributions to it. There are signs that the executive branch is finally awakening to its necessity.

This general review, Mr. President, is helping to clarify the international situation and the needs of foreign policy to which the situation gives rise. It has already shown that throughout the world we are dealing today with a set of facts that is vastly different from those of a few years ago or even a year ago. It has shown, too, that while the international facts have changed, our foreign policy has not changed. At any rate, that it has not changed sufficiently to keep pace with shifting international developments.

I have had no desire to be critical of the executive branch in this review. I have said many times that the President and the Secretary of State do the best they can with the enormous responsibilities in foreign policy which rest on their shoulders. I have pleaded many times on this floor for an understanding of their problems and the difficulties which confront them. On many occasions I have given support to their efforts when they desperately needed support in this Chamber.

It is one thing, however, to recognize that the national interest requires a nonpolitical approach of this kind. It is another to equate a nonpolitical approach in matters of vital importance to the Nation with a blind and uncritical acceptance of the views of the executive branch in foreign relations. If we differ with that branch, if we perceive in good conscience weaknesses in our policies, we have an obligation to speak out.

Mr. President, that is what I have been trying to do in this series of statements. My understanding of the international situation has differed in important respects from that of the executive branch. I believe I have perceived weaknesses in the policies which we pursue in connection with that situation. And I have spoken out freely and frankly.

I have tried to avoid a partisan approach in this matter. I have tried to be objective and constructive in these statements. But I have not tried to avoid facing the facts as I see the facts, or the logic, in terms of our policy which flows from the facts.

Mr. President, a total picture emerges from the type of review I have been pursuing these past few months. In this picture, the world situation is neither black nor white. It is many shades of gray. It contains elements which give hope for peace, freedom and human progress. It contains others which clearly threaten these goals. It contains still others whose significance is yet unknown.

On the one hand, there is no question that Western Europe has recovered in an economic sense from World War II and in some respects is more prosperous than ever. There is no question that Latin America is in the midst of a vast economic expansion. There is no question that massive colonial areas have emerged into national independence in Asia, and that this transition is now extending into Africa. There is no question that the enemy states of World War II, principally Germany and Japan, have been restored and for the present remain linked with other free nations. There is no question that the Soviet system is in the grip of obscure but powerful internal forces released by the death of Stalin and that, in consequence, the danger of war in the west has receded, at least for the moment.

All of these developments and others provide hope for the future. We ought to welcome them. We ought to take comfort in whatever part our foreign policies of the past decade may have played in bringing them about.

Reassuring though they may be, however, the total world situation does not provide cause for optimism, unless it is a whistling-in-the-dark optimism. It does not afford occasion for the fatuous assumption that all is well with the world and our foreign policies have made it that way.

There is another side to the coin, another side of the international situation. It is a dark side. For each positive, encouraging aspect of the international situation, there is a negative, discouraging aspect. Furthermore, there are some negatives for which I have looked in vain for positives.

If we take, for example, the positive fact of the recovery of Western Europe, we find that we must balance it against a negative. The European nations and, in a larger sense, all of the Western nations are not acting to reinforce the unity which made recovery possible. What, as a result, is happening to European unity? What is happening to NATO? Both these and other bases for the common action of the free nations are crumbling. As they crumble, what will happen to the recovery and newfound strength of the Western nations? I may be wrong, Mr. President. I hope I am wrong. It seems to me, however, that the Western nations may be entering into a new era of devil-take-the-hindmost, not too dissimilar from that which preceded World War II. We may be entering into it in a blind binge of prosperity that is taking place on the brink of disaster.

Turning to the Western Hemisphere, what of the tendencies toward estrangement as between ourselves and the other American Republics? Are these cause for optimism, especially when the Soviet Union moves rapidly to fill the widening gaps? I was delighted that the President was able to attend the Inter-American Conference recently in progress in Panama. That is all to the good. Inter-American relations, however, will require consistent and constant effort if they are to be effectively maintained.

What, we may ask, of the growing pressures within Germany to separate from Western Europe? What of similar separatist pulls on Japan?

The achievement of national independence in most of the former colonial areas of Asia is a step toward freedom, and, as such, is to be welcomed by this country. But what of the vast array of social, economic, and political problems in these countries which demand solution even if they are the brutal and misleading solutions of totalitarianism? What of the growing Soviet and Chinese Communist influence in these newly independent states? Are these, too, causes for optimism?

And what of the turmoil within the Soviet empire itself? This turmoil may have relaxed for the moment the tyranny of a Stalin and the aggressive threat which is posed. That is a development which is to be welcomed and encouraged. At the same time, however, we ought not to lose sight of the fact that this very change has enabled Soviet totalitarianism to penetrate more effectively abroad, with diplomatic and economic means, by increasing the acceptability of communism.

In the light of these negatives, it would be wise, Mr. President, for the executive branch, for all of us, to restrain our optimism. It would be wise to temper our optimism with the sobering realities which I have just summarized. And in the light of the unsettled conflicts in Korea, Formosa, Indonesia, the Middle East, and Kashmir, it would be wise to temper our optimism a great deal. For these negatives—each of which contains the seeds of war—the positives are, as yet, nonexistent, or, at best, only dimly discernible.

Let me make clear, Mr. President, that I am not suggesting that we go from a fatuous optimism to a bleak pessimism in our approach to foreign relations. One is as meaningless as the other, and an effective foreign policy has little to do with either.

An effective foreign policy has to do, first, with an accurate perception of the facts of the international situation, with an understanding of the world as it is and not as we would wish it to be. It has to do with an evaluation of those facts in terms of our national interest in peace, freedom, and progress. It has to do, finally, with intelligent action calculated to serve the national interests in the light of the facts and their evaluation.

An effective foreign policy, Mr. President, is one which recognizes that there is no virtue in action for the sake of action but does not use this principle as an excuse for inaction when action is essential. It is one which recognizes that there are some situations in which to do less is better than to do more, to say less better than to say more.

An effective foreign policy is one which recognizes human limitations. It is one which contains sufficient humility and religious faith to recognize that history is not shaped by one nation alone and cannot be reshaped by one nation alone.

This review has led me to the conclusion that our foreign policy is deficient in many of these characteristics of effectiveness. I say this not in criticism of individuals but in the hope that we may reduce the deficiencies. I do not believe we shall ever eliminate them as long as policy is made and conducted by human beings, be they Republicans or Democrats.

There are, however, degrees of deficiency, and it is the responsibility of this Government to take all reasonable measures to reduce the deficiency.

There is a road to a better foreign policy, Mr. President. I have tried to indicate where that road is to be found. Throughout this series, I have pointed to many situations in which I believe weaknesses exist. I have advanced ideas which I believed would help to correct them. Other Members of the Senate have done the same. It is a hopeful sign to me, as I know it must be to them, to see evidences of an awakening awareness in the executive branch to weaknesses in policy, to see a gradual incorporation of some new ideas into policy.

The need, however, is very great. It cannot be met from the Senate alone, or from Congress alone. The responsibility for meeting it, the responsibility for improving our policies, lies largely within the executive branch. It is that branch which must strive to make certain that the international facts which go into the formulation of policy are actually facts and not the fiction of bias, wishful thinking, or fear. It is that branch which to a large extent must interpret these facts into countless decisions which safeguard the total interest of the people of the United States. It is that branch which must act on these decisions—act honestly, act intelligently, act promptly, act firmly, and with a singleness of purpose.

Mr. President, if that is the case, it is clear that the executive branch, and particularly those parts of it involved in foreign policy, must function with efficiency and with confidence if we are to have an effective foreign policy. In my opinion it has not functioned in that fashion in the recent past. Out of a concern with this failure, I have sought with other Senators to establish a Joint Congressional Committee for Central Intelligence. Out of the same concern, as chairman of the Subcommittee on the State Department of the Foreign Relations Committee, I have sought to restore some measure of confidence and morale in the Department of State. Out of the same concern, I have many times stood here in the Senate and denounced the multiplicity of voices in the executive branch which from time to time take unto themselves the responsibility for speaking for the Nation on foreign policy. This practice, Mr. President, appears to be on the decline, but it has not yet disappeared entirely. As a result of it, we have come very close to talking ourselves into a war on a number of occasions. We shall not have an effective foreign policy until it is clear that it is the President, and, on his behalf, the Secretary of State, who alone speak for this country to other nations.

Mr. President, the questions which I have been discussing concern essentially the mechanics of foreign policy. There is another factor, the fundamental factor. That is the attitude of our people and how it is expressed in our relations with other peoples. In the last analysis, we shall have the kind of foreign policy we desire and deserve. If we are fearful, if we are arrogant, if we are indifferent, if we are petty, sooner or later our foreign policy will reflect these characteristics and no matter what artful words or how many words the policy may be clothed in, these characteristics will not be concealed. If, on the other hand, as a Nation, we proceed at home, as befits the traditions of this country, with a sure faith in ourselves, in our institutions, and in the spirit of human freedom which gave birth to them, we need not fear for the effectiveness of our foreign policy. We shall have a foreign policy that is attuned to the heart of America and to the heart of decent humanity throughout the world. We shall not need massive aid programs or massive word programs. The policy will speak for itself. We shall have a foreign policy dedicated beyond the power of words to dedicate—dedicated to peace, to freedom, and to human progress.

In the last analysis, the choice does not lie with the President or with the Congress. This choice lies with the people of the United States.

At the conclusion of my 10th speech in the series on foreign policy, I take occasion to pay my respects publicly to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, the President pro tempore of the Senate, the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

To him I owe much for the advice and counsel he has so freely and willingly given during the time I have had the opportunity and the privilege of serving with him and under him on the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The impression which the Senator from Georgia has made upon me in my thinking will last throughout the rest of my life. I say publicly that I owe to him a debt which I can never be able to repay in full, but which I hope in the years ahead I may be able to repay in part.

Mr. President, we are in the final hours of the 2d session of the 84th Congress and I want to take a few moments to pay one final tribute to our great and distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate and chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the senior Senator of the Senate, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

We in the Senate have expressed our sincere regret on several occasions that Senator GEORGE will not be with us when Congress reconvenes in January. But the plain and simple fact remains that the absence of Senator GEORGE from these chambers will set in motion a chain reaction of regret emanating from the Senator's home State of Georgia, throughout the Nation and the world.

The folks back home in Georgia will miss their senior Senator because of his unceasing and untiring efforts in their behalf. I know they will remember him fondly for the many contributions he has made for the State's welfare and betterment.

The senior Senator from Georgia is a recognized leader of national standing, a Senator at large for the entire country. His legislative record has always been one guided by the best interests of America. There is no more vivid or timely illustration than the Senator's recent brilliant leadership in expanding the social-security program.

The Senator is world renowned for his positive action and guidance in the field of foreign policy, doing what he could to keep the democracies free and to stop the onrush of aggression and subversion. I want to say that it has been one of my most cherished experiences to have worked with the distinguished Senator on the Foreign Relations Committee during my years in the Senate.

We in the Senate will all miss the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, but his departure is not all sadness. Senator GEORGE is not retiring into oblivion after 34 years of service in the Congress of the United States. He will continue to serve this great Nation of ours, but in a new capacity as United States representative to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

We should be thankful that the United States and the free world, as well as the Senate, will continue to benefit in the years to come from the service, counsel, and advice of one of the Nation's greatest statesmen.

I do not say farewell to the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, but I do wish him Godspeed in his new post as ambassador to NATO.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOUSING AND CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF URBAN COMMUNITIES

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, page 14428 of the RECORD of the proceedings of the Senate on Wednesday, July 25, 1956, contains an incorrect account of the amendment which I offered to the housing bill. The RECORD fails to include the following portion of my amendment:

On page 28, beginning on line 14, strike out all through line 23 on page 29, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'(m) For the purpose of increasing the supply of low-rent housing for elderly families, the Authority may assist the construction of new housing or the remodeling of existing housing in order to provide accommodations designed specifically for such families. Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection 10 (g), any public housing agency, in respect to dwelling units suitable to the needs of elderly families, may extend a prior preference to such families and may waive the provisions of clause (ii) of section 15 (8) (b) with respect to such units: Provided, That, as among such families, the "First" preference in subsection 10 (g) shall apply.'

"(c) Section 15 (5) of such act is amended by inserting after the word 'Alaska' the following: 'or $2,250 in the case of accommodations designed specifically for elderly families'."

The failure to include this portion of my amendment in the RECORD has created the impression that the public housing features of the housing bill which passed the Senate last night differ from the public housing features of the bill which passed the House yesterday afternoon. Such an impression is erroneous and should be corrected. I want to make it absolutely clear that the public housing provisions of the bill which passed the Senate last night are absolutely identical with the public housing features of the bill which passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Indiana to ask unanimous consent to change the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with respect to what his amendment does?

Mr. CAPEHART. My only purpose is to have my statement appear in the RECORD. My statement speaks for itself.

Mr. MONRONEY. It does not necessarily represent the interpretation of the other members of the committee; does it?

Mr. CAPEHART. The RECORD neglects to show the complete amendment which I offered last night.

Mr. MONRONEY. But it does not change the legislative position.

Mr. CAPEHART. It does not change anything; it merely corrects an error.

IMPORTATION OF WATCHES

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I call the attention of my colleagues to a statement made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 101, part 10, page 12301, by our late colleague, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Barkley. He was referring to the importation of watches.

The watch industry to which Senator Barkley referred is what we in America would term small business. Often taxes and importations are the difference between the success and failure of our American business. The Senator has brought to our attention how important it is to carefully study all such matters.

Mr. President, on July 23, 1955, the Senate passed a bill which removed excise taxes on motorcycles. This action permits the motorcycle builders of our country to continue in business. If the excise tax had not been eliminated, they would have been forced into bankruptcy, which would have meant the loss of the investment and the loss of jobs to many Americans.

Mr. President, it is the duty of Congress to give careful consideration to subjects of this character, which mean gainful employment for Americans and sound investments for our people.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement made by Senator Barkley on July 30, 1955, be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BARKLEY

Ever since 1930, when I was the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Metals of the Committee on Finance, which considered the tariff on watches and other products made of metals, I became interested in and somewhat acquainted with the watch industry and the tariff on watches.

During the consideration of a bill, we finally arrived at the tariff rates to be imposed on imported watches dependent on the number of jewels in a watch. Because of the importance of skilled watchmakers in the manufacture of precision instruments in connection with our defense, the Tariff Commission made an investigation and recommended an increase in the tariff on watches, which President Truman declined to put into effect, but which President Eisenhower has inaugurated by an increase in the tariff on watches.

The tariff on a watch which contains 17 jewels is $3.15. The tariff on a watch which contains 21 jewels is $10.75.

In recent years—in the past 2 or 3 years—a practice has developed in the Swiss watch industry, in cooperation with certain American importers, to bring into this country 17-jewel watches which have been so manufactured as to contain 4 concealed components into which jewels can be inserted—the 4 components are concealed by a metal plug or some sort of device—so that the watches come in as 17-jewel watches, on which there has to be paid only the $3.15 tariff.

After those watches come into this country, the little plugs or metal pieces are removed, four jewels are inserted, and the watches then become 21-jewel watches. The tariff duty paid on such watches was only $3.15 instead of the $10.75 which would have to be paid on a watch which contained 21 jewels.

The Treasury Department wrestled with the problem, and endeavored to prescribe regulations to take care of the loophole, which permits a practice which is unfair to American watch manufacturers and to importers who have to pay a tariff of $10.75 on watches which contain 21 jewels, and as to which there has been no device of deception put into the watches. The matter is in court and has not yet been settled.

Working with the problem, members of the House Ways and Means Committee drafted an amendment which would suffice to plug the loophole, which cannot be plugged without congressional action. The Ways and Means Committee reported the bill, and it is on the House Calendar. Because of the situation which now prevails, and because the Rules Committee of the House announced it would grant no more rules on legislation at this session, the House cannot act.

However, hoping that they would send the bill over, the Finance Committee unanimously authorized me to report the bill when and if the bill came to the Senate. Since it will not come to the Senate, it cannot be put on the calendar.

I had intended to offer an amendment to this bill. Since the bill deals with revenue matters, such an amendment would be in order. I had intended to offer the amendment to the House bill, but inasmuch as the House would not consider the bill, and inasmuch as we would not get anywhere by taking action on it, and the result would be to kill the bill if the amendment were attached to it—which I do not desire to do—I have protected my right to offer the amendment, because the bill still remains on the calendar of the House, and the intention of the Finance Committee is to report the bill when it comes to the Senate. It is intended to report it in January. For that reason, I am not offering the amendment to the pending bill; but I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I had intended to offer be printed at this point in the RECORD.

(Copy of the proposed amendment is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 101, pt. 10, p. 12302.)

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The Senator from Pennsylvania probably recalls that very recently a subcommittee of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report submitted a report which touched on the watch industry. The minority members of the subcommittee, of whom I am one, felt the report was highly erroneous when its findings were based on assumptions which were cut out of whole cloth.

As a result, on yesterday I submitted and asked to have printed the minority views of myself, Representative WALCOTT, and Representative THOMAS B. CURTIS, of Missouri. I should like to refer the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania to those views when they are printed, because I think he will suspect the real temper and thinking of the full membership of the committee, which is entirely different from that which is reflected in the report of the majority itself.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. I appreciate what the distinguished Senator from Arizona suggests. It will be a pleasure for me to read the minority views.

I have brought up the matter only because the statement of our late distinguished colleague, Senator Barkley, was, I think, quite to the point. I think this is a matter to which all of us must give great consideration; otherwise many of our important industries will go out of business.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Was the Senator referring to the subcommittee's report?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. I was referring to a statement made by the late Senator Barkley about a year ago in the Senate. I think it was to the point. I have placed it in the RECORD, in the hope that many of my colleagues will refer to it and read it.

Mr. CURTIS. I am very much disappointed in the action of the subcommittee. I do not think it is in conformity with the best interests of our economy or our national defense. I commend to our colleagues the minority views, which will be available, because it is important to the economy of the country and vital to the national defense to maintain the American watch industry, particularly the jeweled watch industry.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

THE PORT OF BALTIMORE

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, in a very real sense, commerce is the lifeblood of the economy of the excellent port of Baltimore. Likewise, the prosperity of the great Free State of Maryland is inextricably entwined with commerce moving through the port of Baltimore. On this theme, I have prepared a statement entitled "Foreign Trade and the City of Baltimore," which I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOREIGN TRADE AND THE CITY OF BALTIMORE

Early Baltimoreans were a seafaring people. For many years following the establishment of Baltimore Town in 1729, the economic life of the community was heavily dependent upon foreign trade.

The period between the Revolutionary War and the close of the War of 1812 has been called Baltimore's "Golden Age." This was the period when Chesapeake-built "Clipper Ships" roamed the seven seas, trading Baltimore-made goods for raw materials and products in almost every corner of the globe. These ships, swifter than any others then afloat, carried the lion's share of all world commerce, owing largely to the crippling effects of the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars upon European shipping. Baltimore's growth was so rapid that, by 1800, it had become the second city of commercial importance in the country.

After the War of 1812 there was a letup in this rapid rate of growth, partly because the new Erie Canal made serious inroads into the city's trade with the West. Construction of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in 1827, the first railroad to be built in the United States, was Baltimore's answer to this threat.

An even more serious roadblock, however, lay ahead—the Civil War. Because of Maryland's position as a border State, Baltimore enjoyed little of the war prosperity of the cities of the North and the hitherto rich markets in the South were casualties of the conflict.

For the next half century Baltimore labored under great difficulties. Then came World War I, which ushered in a new prosperity. In the 1920's many important industrial establishments located in the city. Shipping took a new lease on life, and Baltimore again became an outstanding seaport. World War II accentuated the movement. In less than 2 years, more than 270,000 workers were employed in the city's busy industrial plants, two-thirds of them engaged in the production of steel, the building and repair of ships, and the manufacture of aircraft and electronics equipment.

Much of this wartime growth has been retained, until today Baltimore is the sixth largest city[1] in the country, and, in terms of foreign trade tonnage, is the Nation's second largest seaport, and one of its most important centers of industrial, shipping, commercial, and financial activity.

BALTIMORE CITY TODAY

It is estimated that there are over 1,700 manufacturing establishments in the city of Baltimore today, with a labor force of over 130,000, which accounts for over 28 percent of the total civilian labor force of some 450,000 persons.

The total value added by all manufacturing operations in the city in 1953 was estimated at $1,021,000,000. Steel, copper, aluminum, chemicals, and other basic materials, in addition to a large variety of finished goods, are produced in the area. A fact which tends to be overlooked, however, is that the largest single industry is the port of Baltimore itself.

About 40,000 jobs are directly connected with ships and cargoes moving in and out of Baltimore Harbor. Of this number 3,400 are longshoremen. The wages of this group of workers alone amount to $7 million a year. Many more persons, of course, are indirectly dependent upon the operations of the port.

Port operations, it has been estimated, contribute at least $200 million per annum to the city's income, which accounts for about 14 percent of its net effective buying income.

Merchandise moving as foreign commerce through the port (that is, exports and imports moving from, to, or through Baltimore) is valued at more than $940 million, which is equal to over 60 percent of the estimated net effective buying income of the city, and to over 90 percent of the value added by manufacturing operations of all kinds.

GEOGRAPHICAL FACTORS

Baltimore's favorable geographical location has been an important factor in the growth of waterborne commerce and hence in the development of the city. It is the most westerly seaboard city on the North Atlantic coast and is the center of an elaborate transportation system, including facilities for transport by water, land, and air.

Three major trunkline railroads serve the city in addition to several local lines. More than 150 common carrier motortruck lines have terminal facilities in the area, and it is served by one of the largest and best-equipped airports in the country.

Baltimore is also served by 88 overseas steamship lines, 5 inland and Atlantic coastwise carriers, and 6 intercoastal steamship lines which connect with major Pacific coast ports and the interior Pacific coast areas served by them.

The fact that Baltimore is closer than any other United States Atlantic port to many of the important industrial producing and consuming points in the Middle West has made Baltimore increasingly popular as an entrance to and exit from the country. For example, Baltimore is only 429 miles from Akron, Ohio, in comparison with New York, which is 550 miles away. The distance from Cincinnati to Baltimore is only 560 miles in comparison with a distance of 644 miles between Cincinnati and Philadelphia, and 724 miles between Cincinnati and New York.

Since United States seaports in the North Atlantic area have overseas freight-rate parity with reference to ports in Western Europe, advantages in rates arising out of differences in land distances between points of manufacture and ports of shipment are often the determining factors in the total cost of transportation to European markets. The territory from, and to which, Baltimore has equal or lower local freight rates than its competitor ports (Philadelphia, New York, and Boston) includes one of the most important sources of outbound foreign commerce. This territory is described by the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army and the United States Maritime Commission in their report "The Port of Baltimore" as including the territory delineated "from Elkton, Md., southward along the western Delaware State line to its southern limits; thence westward to Fredericksburg, Va.; thence southwest to Lynchburg, Va.; thence northward to Charleston, W. Va.; thence northward to the New York State line via Parkersburg, Wheeling, Pittsburgh, and Warren, and returning to Elkton, Md., through Williamsport, Lewiston and Harrisburg, Pa."

Much of the waterborne commerce moving through the port of Baltimore originates far beyond the borders of Baltimore City, even though substantial quantities of manufactured goods produced in the city itself are themselves exported.

[1] Being outranked only by New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, and Detroit.

BALTIMORE'S POSITION AS A PORT

The water-borne commerce entering or leaving Baltimore either goes to, or originates from, all corners of the globe and many points along the United States coast. About one-third of the water-borne commerce moving through the port is classified as "coastwise" or "internal" trade. By "internal" trade is meant traffic between a port and a locality on an inland waterway, where the entire movement takes place over inland waterways. The distinction between internal and coastwise trade is not a clear one, however. Traffic moving from as far away as Massachusetts can actually reach Florida without entering the open ocean. Such commerce is classified as "internal," whereas if the same shipment should enter the open ocean between the same two points it would be classified as "coastwise" traffic.

Foreign commerce accounts for about two-thirds of the business of the port, and it is this part of the port's activity with which I am concerned in this address.

Measured in terms of tonnages, Baltimore is the second largest foreign trading port in the United States, being outranked only by New York. Because such a large proportion of the merchandise moving through Baltimore consists of bulk commodities, the port ranks slightly lower when compared in terms of value than it does when compared in terms of physical volume.

In 1954 Baltimore ranked third with regard to the value of exports and imports, being outranked by New York and New Orleans. In that year 16,832,000 tons of foreign shipping passed through Baltimore. This was more than half the tonnage passing through the port of New York and 1.2 million tons in excess of the tonnage moving through Philadelphia, the next ranking port.

In terms of value of exports and imports, New York is in a class by itself, with merchandise moving from and to the port in 1954 valued at $6,727,000,000. New Orleans was second with foreign commerce valued at $1,500,000,000. Baltimore ranked third with exports and imports valued at $941,000,000.

Since the close of World War II Baltimore has been more than holding its own compared with other Atlantic coast ports. In the 1937–39 period close to 11 percent of all exports moving through Atlantic coast ports (in terms of tonnages) were shipped out of Baltimore. In 1953 and 1954 the comparable percentage was 15.5 percent. In 1946 and 1947, when exports of coal to Europe were at their peak, exports from Baltimore accounted for close to 25 percent of exports from all Atlantic coast ports. With the exception of the war period 1941–46, when imports into Baltimore fell off relative to imports into other Atlantic coast ports, Baltimore has held its own as a port of importation. In 1953 and 1954 between 17 and 18 percent of all imports (measured in tonnage) into Atlantic coast ports came through Baltimore, which was about the same percentage as prevailed in the prewar period 1937–39.

Baltimore has long been known as the favorite port for such bulk commodities as iron ore, coal, sugar, fertilizer, and grains. Nevertheless, Baltimore is moving ahead as a general cargo port. There have been important increases in the trade of such items as coffee, antiques, art objects, automobiles, rugs, toys, machinery, and cigarettes.

According to figures recently published by the bureau of business and economic research of the University of Maryland, exports from the port of Baltimore have been growing more rapidly than exports from either New York or Philadelphia, and more rapidly, in fact, than all Atlantic coast ports considered together. Tonnages of exports leaving the port of Baltimore increased at an annual rate of 16.1 percent in the period 1935–50, compared with 4.4 percent for New York, 11.9 percent for Philadelphia, and 8.8 percent for all Atlantic coast ports considered together.

With the exception of 1945–47, the period in which there was a large bulge in exports, imports into Baltimore have been considerably larger than exports. Nevertheless, imports do not show the same rate of growth as do exports throughout the period. The statistics indicate that in this 15-year period imports into Baltimore increased at about the same rate as imports into Atlantic coastal ports as a whole, but at a considerably more rapid rate than imports into the port of New York.

Considering the volume of exports and imports together, Baltimore and Philadelphia have been growing more rapidly than has Atlantic coastal foreign trade generally and much more rapidly than trade through the port of New York.

Baltimore and Philadelphia continue to be rivals for the position of second largest port in the United States.

EXPORTS

Grains are Baltimore's most important single export, accounting in a recent period for almost 40 percent of total export tonnage. Iron and steel products have accounted for almost 20 percent and fertilizers for about 14 percent. Coal, which in the period immediately following World War II was the most important single export, reaching a high point of 75 percent of all exports, had dropped by 1950 to less than 12 percent.

Exports of these 4 leading groups of commodities (grains, iron and steel, fertilizer, and coal) accounted for well over 80 percent of Baltimore's total exports in 1950.

Grains shipped out of Baltimore (mostly wheat and corn) in recent years have gone to Germany, the United Kingdom, and Ireland. About two-thirds of the iron and steel products (unfabricated) exported are shipped to South America and Europe.

Canada is the largest customer for phosphate fertilizer and in recent years large quantities of both phosphate and nitrogenous fertilizer have gone to Korea. The bulk of the coal exported immediately after the war went to European countries. More recently it has been shipped to South America, Canada, and Japan.

Exports of machinery are relatively small, tonnagewise, but have been increasing in recent years. In 1950 they accounted for a little over 2 percent of Baltimore's exports. Such exports are varied, with sizable shipments of motor vehicles going to Brazil, agricultural machinery to Algeria and Turkey, mining and pumping machinery to South America and Europe, metalworking machinery to South Africa, and electrical machinery and equipment to Cuba and France.

IMPORTS

In the period 1936–1940 imports through the port of Baltimore accounted for about 18 percent of all shipments into Atlantic coast ports. Between 1940 and 1944 the percentage dropped sharply, reaching a low point of about 8 percent in 1944. Recovery was rapid, however, and after 1946 imports into Baltimore again accounted for about 18 percent of total Atlantic coast imports. Thus, even though the volume of imports into Baltimore has been increasing, it has not been increasing any more rapidly than have imports into Atlantic coast ports as a whole.

Baltimore's most important import is iron ore and iron ore concentrates which, in recent years, have accounted for over 40 percent of total imports. Ferro-alloys account for another 16 percent, iron and steel scrap for 2 percent, and other iron and steel items for 1.7 percent. Together, these items account for over 60 percent of all shipments into the port.

Next in order of importance is petroleum and petroleum products, which account for another 20 percent. Other products, making up the remaining 15–20 percent of imports, are sugar and related products, bananas, paper base stocks, and rubber.

Baltimore is an importer of a small number of important bulk commodities. In recent years, iron ore, ferro-alloys and other iron and steel products and petroleum have accounted for more than four-fifths of the port's total import volume.

According to statistics prepared by the Bureau of Business and Economic Research of the University of Maryland from unpublished United States Census data, more than 50 percent of the imports of iron ore into Baltimore in 1950 originated in Chile (compared with over 80 percent in 1946). Over 26 percent came from Sweden and 9 percent from Brazil. In 1951 the first shipments of iron ore were received from the Bethlehem-owned ore field south of the Orinoco River in Venezuela and it is likely that these imports will increase substantially. It is expected that eventually imports from this source will exceed 6 billion pounds annually. The United States Steel Corporation is also obtaining iron ore from South America and it is probable that a large part of these imports will enter the country at Baltimore.

Imports of petroleum and petroleum products into Baltimore have consisted principally of fuel oil, including bunker oil and crude petroleum. There have been small imports of gasoline, kerosene, lubricating oil, petroleum asphalt and other petroleum products. Practically all of the petroleum products imported into Baltimore come from Venezuela and the Netherlands Antilles (including Curacao and Aruba). Small quantities, upon occasion, have come from Mexico and Colombia.

Some pig iron is imported into Baltimore, most of it from Germany and the Netherlands. Small quantities of iron and steel scrap have come from Germany, Japan, France, and the Netherlands.

Bananas come from the so-called "Banana Republics"—Honduras, Colombia, Panama, Guatemala, Costa Rica, and the Dominican Republic.

The great bulk of the paper base stock imported into Baltimore consists of wood pulp which originates, for the most part, in Sweden and Finland (87 percent of the total). Small quantities have come from Austria, Norway, and Canada.

More than 99 percent of the imports of "rubber and rubber manufactures" consists of unmanufactured rubber and comes principally from Malaya, Liberia, and Indonesia.

Baltimore receives such small quantities of manufactured goods that there would seem to be opportunity for development along this line. Increased imports of such goods, particularly from Western Europe and Japan, could be vital as part of the United States' contribution toward strengthening the countries of the free world. The port of Baltimore itself could contribute greatly toward stimulating such trade through programs designed to popularize imported merchandise. Trade fairs and exhibits of imported wares by large retail outlets are good ways of doing this. The leaders of Baltimore might be performing a great service for both themselves and their country if they were to think and act along such lines.

A RECENT FOREIGN TRADE SURVEY

A few months ago the League of Women Voters of Baltimore completed a survey showing the importance of foreign trade to the city. They did this by sending out questionnaires and by visiting many Baltimore manufacturing establishments. In all, they sent out over 330 questionnaires and received returns from approximately one-third of the companies contacted. In doing this work the league had the cooperation and advice of members of the staff of the bureau of business and economic research of the University of Maryland, the Chamber of Commerce of Baltimore, a member of the staff of the Johns Hopkins University, one from Goucher College, and others.

The great bulk of the manufacturing establishments replying to the questionnaire indicated that they have a direct stake in foreign trade, and most of those interviewed expressed interest in promoting the development of foreign trade. Only a few companies reported that they felt competition from imported goods. Most of these companies, in turn, were of the opinion that import competition was not as serious as competition from domestic competitors.

The fact that a large part of the exports going through the port of Baltimore originate inland beyond the boundaries of the city, and similarly that a large part of the imports into Baltimore go inland far beyond the city, should not blind us to the fact that manufacturers in Baltimore also have a substantial direct interest in foreign trade. Eighty-five of the 120 companies reporting (71 percent) stated that they themselves were importers, exporters, or both. In the words of the survey itself, "These are companies that actually do the importing and exporting themselves. There are many more who buy imported goods from suppliers or basic metal manufacturers, or who sell to companies that export the finished products. Many companies did not seem to realize that some of the basic raw materials used in their products, such as chrome, manganese, tin, tanning acids, must be imported."

The survey also reveals that manufacturing establishments in Baltimore rely to a considerable extent upon foreign sources for raw materials that cannot be obtained in the United States or that can be obtained only at great difficulty or in insufficient quantities.

The bureau of business and economic research of the University of Maryland, in its Regional Interindustry Study of Maryland, published in September 1954, estimated that of the $530,300,000 of goods exported in 1947 through the ports of Maryland over $221,800,000 came from other States, leaving $308,500,000 of goods produced or manufactured in Maryland and shipped abroad. Of the value of imports at that time, namely, $208,700,000, more than $34,300,000 went to other States. The balance of $174 million of imports remained in Maryland for the use of Maryland industries and consumption. Of this amount, of course, a large share undoubtedly went to Baltimore.

Over 60 percent of the manufacturing establishments replying to the league's questionnaire reported that they felt no impact of import competition upon their business, whereas 29 percent reported that they did feel such competition. Only 3 percent, however, felt that import competition was really serious.

The questionnaire also contained questions asking for opinions regarding present levels of foreign trade and future policies to be pursued. Over 50 percent of those replying were in favor of expanded foreign trade and thought that governmental policies should be shaped accordingly. Ten percent were in favor of additional intensified protection of domestic markets against import competition, and 31 percent either expressed no opinion at all or had opinions that were not conclusive.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN NON-FEDERAL LAND

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, on a previous day H. R. 9591, to amend the act of August 31, 1954 (68 Stat. 1037), relating to the acquisition of non-Federal land within the existing boundaries of any national park, and for other purposes, passed the Senate but was later recalled from the House because of an error in amending the title.

I move that the vote by which the title was amended be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment to the title.

The motion was agreed to.

Compton, of St. Louis, Mo., on September 20, 1956, be filled by the reappointment of the present incumbent for the statutory term of 6 years.

ACTION BY STATE OF FLORIDA RELATING TO ERADICATION OF MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senators who are in the Chamber may recall that the Senators from Florida have stated from time to time that the State of Florida proposed to match on a 50–50 basis the Federal appropriations for the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication campaign. A special session of the Legislature of Florida, called for this and other purposes, is in progress now. I have just received a telegram from the Governor of the State of Florida which reads:

> State appropriation for $5 million for fruitfly program passed both Houses, and I will sign bill this morning. Regards.
> LEROY COLLINS,
> Governor.

I wanted the Senate to know the legislature and the Governor of Florida had proceeded with the greatest possible dispatch to meet Florida's commitment in the matter.

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, 1,550 additional copies of Senate Document No. 83, 84th Congress, 1st session, entitled "Critical Materials—Factors Affecting Self-Sufficiency Within Nations of the Western Hemisphere."

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2819, Senate Resolution 320.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 320) providing additional funds for the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, could the distinguished acting majority leader [Mr. CLEMENTS] tell us how much money this resolution involves.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the resolution authorizes the expenditure of not to exceed $30,000, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, further reserving the right to object, does the resolution state what the money is to be used for?

Mr. CLEMENTS. "To employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants and consultants as it deems advisable." The word "it" refers to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Does the distinguished Senator know what the experts are to be used for?

Mr. CLEMENTS. The resolution would authorize the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate not more than $30,000 for miscellaneous investigations and for staff studies on the problems of the aging from August 1, 1956, through January 31, 1957.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I think I shall have to ask that the consideration of the resolution go over.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I was present in the Committee on Rules and Administration when the resolution was before the committee. We understood the request had come with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. The amount involved was $30,000. There was no opposition to the resolution, and it had the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. CLEMENTS. My friend from Arizona, I think, has in his hands now a copy of the budget which was presented by the committee. It shows the cost of the extra staff members to be $16,125.33, and it shows an administrative cost, which would cover stationery, travel, hearings, and other incidental matters, of $13,874.67, or a total of $30,000.

I may say to my friend from Arizona that before requesting consent for the consideration of the resolution it had been cleared with the minority leader, and it had been cleared under the usual procedure, and by those on the committee who were thought to have an interest in the matter. If the Senator desires that the consideration of the resolution go over, there will be no hesitation on the part of the acting majority leader in suggesting that that be done, but I can assure the Senator from Arizona that the resolution has had the clearance which I mentioned.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I shall not object at this time, but I serve on the committee concerned. Unfortunately, I did not attend the meeting when it was suggested that the report be made unanimous. I am very much concerned about the tendency in the Congress to add additional research members to the staffs. We are seeing committees become overstaffed. Instead of being a temporary matter, we shall be asked next January 31 to extend the authority. I want to go on record as being against a further extension of staffs. I think the committees are being overstaffed to the detriment, not only of legislation, but to the detriment of the budget, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with amendments on page 1, line 11, after the word "the", where it appears the first time, to insert "prior", and in line 12, after the word "concerned", to insert "and the Committee on Rules and Administration", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by section 134 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 and in accordance with its jurisdictions under rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized from August 1, 1956, through January 31, 1957, (1) to make such expenditures as it deems advisable; (2) to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants and consultants as it deems advisable; and (3) with the prior consent of the head of the department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to utilize the reimbursable services, information, facilities, and personnel of any of the departments or agencies of the Government.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $30,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

INSURANCE AGAINST FLOOD DAMAGE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3732) to provide insurance against flood damage, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this act may be cited as the "Federal Flood Insurance Act of 1956."

FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that in the case of recurring natural disasters, including recurring floods, insurance protection against individual and public loss is not always practically available through private or public sources. With specific reference to insurance against flood loss, the Congress finds that insurance against certain losses resulting from this peril is not so available. Since preventive and protective means and structures against the effects of these disasters can never wholly anticipate the geographic incidence and infinite variety of the destructive aspects of these forces, the Congress finds that the safeguards of insurance are a necessary adjunct of preventive and protective means and structures.

Inasmuch as these disasters impede interstate and foreign commerce, hamper national defense, and cause widespread distress and hardship adversely affecting the general welfare, without regard to State boundary lines, and in the absence of insurance protection from private or public sources, the Congress ought to provide for such protection in the case of flood, and study the feasibility and need for similar programs in the case of other forms of natural disaster against which insurance protection is not generally and practically available in all geographical areas.

(b) (1) It is the purpose of this act to authorize the establishment of a program of Federal insurance and reinsurance against the risks of loss resulting from flood as hereinafter defined, and to require a study and report on insurance and reinsurance against still other natural disaster perils to the extent that such insurance or reinsurance is not available on reasonable terms and conditions from other public or private sources; and

(2) It is the further purpose of this act to encourage private insurance companies to write insurance covering the extent of the risks above the limits prescribed in section 10 (a) and to provide Federal reinsurance to the extent desirable and necessary to carry out this purpose.

(3) It is the further purpose of this act to authorize the establishment of a program of loans, and a program combining insurance and loans, to assist flood victims who have entered into contracts with the Administrator under this act.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 3. (a) To assist in carrying out the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by this act, the Administrator may appoint a Commissioner, and the basic rate of compensation of such position shall be the same as the basic rate of compensation established for the Commissioners of the constituents of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

(b) The provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, shall apply to the functions vested in the Administrator by this act, to the same extent as applicable to wholly owned Government corporations.

(c) In the performance of, and with respect to, the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by this act, the Administrator, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, shall maintain an integral set of accounts which shall be audited annually by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial transactions as provided by the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, and no other audit shall be required: Provided, That such financial transactions of the Administrator as the issuing of insurance policies, the making of reinsurance agreements, and the making and guaranteeing of loans, and vouchers approved by the Administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government.

AUTHORITY TO INSURE AND REINSURE

SEC. 4. To aid in carrying out the purposes of this act, the Administrator is authorized to provide, upon such terms and conditions (including coinsurance requirements) as he may establish, insurance and reinsurance against loss resulting from damage to or destruction of real or personal property (including property owned by any State or local government) due to flood, as hereinafter defined, occurring within the United States: Provided, That after June 30, 1959, each State shall pay from time to time into the Disaster Insurance Fund, hereinafter created, an amount equal to one-half of the difference between the fees charged for insurance policies issued after such date on property in such State, and the amount which would have been charged if the estimated rates were applied.

LOAN CONTRACTS

SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator is authorized to enter into contracts with any persons (not including State and local governments and agencies thereof) to the effect that, in the event of any subsequent loss resulting from damage to or destruction of real and personal property due to flood, as hereinafter defined, occurring within the United States—

(1) the Administrator will guarantee any public or private financing institution against loss of principal and interest with respect to any loan in an amount not to exceed such subsequent flood loss (as modified by subsection (f) of this section, relating to deductibility), which may be made by such institution to any such person in connection with such flood loss; and

(2) to the extent that a loan to finance such flood loss is not available from any such institution on reasonable terms, the Administrator will make a loan directly to such person in an amount covering all or part (as provided for in the loan contract between the Administrator and such person) of the difference between the amount of such flood loss (as modified by such subsection (f), relating to deductibility) and the amount of the loan available from such institution.

Each such contract shall contain such terms and conditions, and require from any such person such monetary consideration, as the Administrator may prescribe by regulation. In issuing such regulations the Administrator shall fix such monetary consideration at the lowest practicable amount, following generally the same principles as apply under section 7 (a) with respect to the establishment of fees for insurance.

(b) Any loan made or guaranteed under this section shall bear interest at the rate, as determined by the Administrator, which is prevailing in the area where the money loaned is to be used but such rate shall not exceed 4 percent per annum on the unpaid principal balance.

(c) Any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the Administrator, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of the Administrator, as fiscal agent of the United States in guaranteeing loans under this section and in otherwise taking action in connection with such guarantees. Such funds as may be necessary to enable such bank to carry out any such guarantee shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority of the Administrator from the Disaster Loan Fund. Such bank shall not have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action in connection with such guarantees. Each such bank shall be reimbursed by the Administrator, from funds appropriated by the Federal Government, for all expenses incurred by the bank in acting as agent on behalf of the Administrator, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(d) Actions and operations of such banks under authority of subsection (c) of this section shall be subject to the supervision of the Administrator and subject to such regulations as he may prescribe. The Administrator is authorized to prescribe the term and incidental charges for loans guaranteed under subsection (c) of this section. The Administrator is further authorized to prescribe regulations with respect to the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the maximum extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(e) To the maximum extent practicable, loans under this section shall be on a long-term basis in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Administrator, if so requested by the person obtaining the loan.

(f) Loans under this section shall be made only with respect to amounts exceeding the first $500 of the amount of the loss.

(g) The face amount of all loan contracts outstanding under this section at any one time shall not exceed $2 billion; but such amount may be increased, with the approval of the President, by not to exceed $500 million in any one fiscal year.

(h) The provisions of sections 8, 9, 10 (a), 10 (b), 12 (b), 12 (c), 13, 14, 15 (e), 15 (g), 17 (a), 18, 19, 20, 22, and 23 of this act shall be applicable with respect to the loan contract program under this section.

COMBINATION OF INSURANCE AND LOANS

SEC. 6. The Administrator is authorized to establish, under such regulations as he may prescribe, a program combining insurance and loans in order to provide the greatest variety and amount of protection against loss to the greatest number of affected parties in accordance with individual needs.

ESTIMATED RATES AND FEES

SEC. 7. (a) The Administrator shall from time to time establish a schedule of "estimated rates" for insurance offered under the provisions of this act, which would be adequate, in his judgment, to produce sufficient proceeds to pay all claims for probable losses over a reasonable period of years. Such "estimated rates" shall be used as a basis for determining the fees to be paid by the persons insured. They shall be based on consideration of the risks involved and shall be uniform for similar risk within a given classification of property. They shall not include any loading for administrative expenses of the Federal Government under this act. The Administrator shall establish a schedule of fees to provide insurance protection at reasonable costs designed to achieve marketability: Provided, That no insurance policy shall be issued for a fee less than 60 percent of such "estimated rate," except that reduced fees may be established for insurance on any classification of owner-occupied dwelling units if the Administrator determines that without such reduction the owners of such dwelling units as a class could not afford to pay the fees chargeable for such insurance. The Administrator is authorized to establish such classifications of fees as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this act based on the use of the property to be insured, the availability of insurance from private sources covering such property, and the ability of the insured to self-insure or reinsure and may establish differentials in levels of fees for such classifications: Provided, That all such fees shall be uniform for similar risks within a given classification of property. The Administrator shall from time to time pay into the Disaster Insurance Fund, hereinafter created, an amount equal to the difference between the fees charged for insurance policies issued and the amount which would have been charged if the "estimated rates" were applied.

(b) The Administrator from time to time shall also negotiate with insurance companies seeking reinsurance for the purpose of establishing fees for reinsurance offered under the provisions of this act. Such fees shall be based on consideration of the risks involved and shall be adequate, in the judgment of the Administrator, to produce sufficient proceeds over a reasonable period of years to pay all claims for losses. The fees shall not include any loading for administrative expenses of the Federal Government under this act.

PROPERTY AND LOSS LIMITS

SEC. 8. The Administrator is authorized to provide for the determination of types and location of property with respect to which insurance or reinsurance shall be made available under this act, the nature and limits of loss or damage in any area (including subdivisions thereof) which may be covered by such insurance or reinsurance, and such other matters as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

RISK CLASSIFICATION

SEC. 9. The Administrator may from time to time issue appropriate regulations regarding the classification, limitation, and rejection of risks assumed by him under authority of this act.

POLICY AND PROGRAM LIMITS

SEC. 10. (a) The outstanding face amount of insurance issued by the Administrator under this act shall not exceed $250,000 per person: Provided, That the fact amount of such insurance on any dwelling unit (including any structures and personal property connected therewith) shall not exceed $10,000.

(b) The Administrator may from time to time issue appropriate regulations regarding insurance coverage available to joint owners and subsidiary and affiliated corporations as he shall deem advisable to effecuate the purposes of this act.

(c) Each insurance policy issued by the Administrator shall contain a loss-deductible clause relieving him from any liability for paying the first $100 of a proved and approved claim for loss, plus 5 percent of the remainder, or such larger amount or percentage as may be specified by the Administrator upon issuance of the insurance policy, taking into consideration the class of risk involved.

(d) The face amount of insurance policies and reinsurance agreements outstanding at any one time under this act shall not exceed $3 billion (which may be increased with the approval of the President by further amounts not to exceed $2 billion in the aggregate if such increase is deemed advisable to effectuate the purposes of this act) minus the aggregate amount of claims proved and approved under insurance policies and reinsurance agreements issued under this act, but plus fees collected hereunder. For the purpose of applying this limitation, the face amount of any policy or agreement shall be deemed to be the original amount minus claims proved and approved thereunder.

REINSURANCE REGULATORY AUTHORITY

SEC. 11. (a) The Administrator is authorized to issue such regulations regarding reinsurance under this act as he deems advisable in order to carry out the purposes of this act.

(b) The premium rate and terms and conditions of any policy reinsured under the provisions of this act shall be subject to approval by the administrator.

(c) The Administrator shall use his best efforts to encourage private insurance companies to undertake the issuance of insurance policies covering that portion of the loss in excess of the limits specified in section 10 (a) of this act resulting from damage to or destruction of real or personal property due to flood as defined in this act. The Administrator may seek to achieve this end by offering a program of appropriate reinsurance within the authority granted him by this act.

(d) Wherever practicable, the Administrator may encourage, by offering suitable reinsurance subject to the provisions of this act, the issuance by private insurance companies of policies insuring against loss resulting from damage to or destruction of real or personal property due to flood.

NONDUPLICATION OF AVAILABLE INSURANCE

SEC. 12. (a) No insurance or reinsurance, or loan contract, shall be issued under the provisions of this act covering risks against which insurance is available on reasonable terms from other public or private sources.

(b) No insurance or reinsurance shall be issued under the provisions of this act on any property declared by a duly constituted State or local zoning authority, or other authorized public body, to be in violation of State or local flood zoning laws.

(c) After June 30, 1958, no insurance or reinsurance shall be issued under the provisions of this act in any geographical location unless an appropriate public body shall have adopted and shall keep in effect such flood zoning restrictions, if any, as may be deemed necessary by the Administrator to reduce, within practicable limits, damages from flood in such location.

USE OF OTHER PUBLIC AND PRIVATE FACILITIES

SEC. 13. (a) In providing insurance or reinsurance under this act, the Administrator shall use to the maximum practicable extent the facilities and services of private organizations and persons authorized to engage in the insurance business under the laws of any State (including insurance companies, agents, brokers, and adjustment organizations); and the Administrator may arrange for payment of reasonble compensation therefor.

(b) In providing insurance or reinsurance under this act, the Administrator may use the services of other public agencies, and pay reasonable compensation therefor.

(c) The Administrator may supply, receive from and exchange with other agencies of the Federal Government, State, local, and interstate commissions or agencies, and private organizations experienced in the fields of insurance or reinsurance, such information as may be useful in the administration of the programs authorized by this act.

(d) In carrying out the functions authorized in this act, the Administrator may consult with other agencies of the Federal Government and interstate, State, and local public agencies having responsibilities for land use and flood control and for flood zoning and flood-damage prevention in order to assure that the insurance and reinsurance programs are consistent with the programs of such agencies. Where the program of the Administrator may affect existing or proposed flood-control works under the jurisdiction of agencies of the Federal Government these agencies shall cooperate with the Administrator in coordinating their respective programs. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator shall coordinate the administration of their respective programs relating to flood insurance and reinsurance for agricultural commodities.

CLAIMS PAYMENT AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 14. (a) Under such regulations as the Administrator may prescribe, he shall arrange for prompt adjustment and payment of valid claims for losses covered by insurance or reinsurance under this act.

(b) Upon disallowance of any claim against the Administrator under color of any insurance or reinsurance made available under this act, or upon refusal of the claimant to accept the amount allowed upon any such claim, the claimant may institute an action against the Administrator on such claim in the United States district court in which a major portion (in terms of value) of the insured property is located. Any such action must be begun within 1 year after the date upon which the claimant receives from the Administrator written notice of disallowance or partial disallowance of the claim. For the purposes of this section, the Administrator may be sued and he shall appoint one or more agents within the jurisdiction of each United States district court upon whom service of process can be made in any action instituted under this section. Exclusive jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon all United States district courts to hear and determine such actions without regard to the amount in controversy.

FUNDS AND TREASURY BORROWINGS

SEC. 15. (a) To carry out the purposes of this act, the Administrator is authorized to establish three funds to be known as the (1) Disaster Insurance Fund, (2) Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and (3) Disaster Loan Fund.

(b) Into the Disaster Insurance Fund shall be deposited all insurance fees collected by the Administrator for insurance policies issued by him under this act. Into the Disaster Reinsurance Fund shall be deposited all fees collected by the Administrator in connection with reinsurance made available by him under this act. Into the Disaster Loan Fund shall be deposited amounts accuring to the United States in connection with loan contract transactions.

(c) Moneys in each of the funds may be invested in obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States. Such obligations may be sold and the proceeds derived therefrom may be reinvested as above provided if deemed advisable by the Administrator. Income from such investment or reinvestment shall be deposited in the respective fund from which the investment was made.

(d) All salvage proceeds realized by the Administrator in connection with insurance made available under this act shall be deposited in the Disaster Insurance Fund; and all salvage proceeds realized by the Administrator in connection with reinsurance made available under this act shall be deposited in the Disaster Reinsurance Fund.

(e) The Administrator is authorized to issue to the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time and have outstanding at any one time, in an amount not exceeding $500 million (or such greater amount as may be approved by the President) notes or other obligations in such forms and denominations, bearing such maturities, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such notes or other obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations to be issued hereunder and for such purpose he is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of such notes and obligations.

The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated as public debt transactions of the United States. Funds borrowed under this section shall be deposited, in such proportions as the Administrator deems advisable, in the Disaster Insurance Fund, the Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and the Disaster Loan Fund.

(f) Moneys in the Disaster Insurance Fund, the Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and the Disaster Loan Fund may be used for the following purposes as deemed necessary by the Administrator:

(1) To pay from the Disaster Insurance Fund proved and approved claims for loss under, and other nonadministrative expenses arising in connection with insurance policies issued by the Administrator under this act;

(2) To pay from the Disaster Reinsurance Fund proved and approved claims under, and other nonadministrative expenses arising in connection with, reinsurance agreements entered into by the Administrator under this act;

(3) To pay from the Disaster Loan Fund the amounts of loans made by the Administrator, amounts in payment of guarantees, and other nonadministrative expenses in connection with direct and guaranteed loans under this act; and

(4) To repay to the Secretary of the Treasury sums borrowed from him in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e) of this section.

(g) All administrative expenses of the Federal Government under this act shall be paid from funds appropriated by the Federal Government.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

SEC. 16. In carrying out his functions under this act, the Administrator shall appoint an advisory committee as authorized by section 601 of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended (68 Stat. 590, 645). Such committee shall consist of not less than 3 nor more than 15 persons familiar with the problems of insurance or reinsurance, to advise the Administrator with respect to the formulation of policies and the execution of functions under this act.

STUDIES

SEC. 17. (a) The Administrator shall undertake a continuing study of the practicability of extending the coverage of insurance programs similar to those authorized under this act to any one or more natural disaster perils, other than flood, against which, and for the period during which, insurance protection is not generally and practically available in all geographical locations from other public or private sources.

(b) The Administrator shall also undertake a continuing study of participation by private insurance companies in the programs authorized by this act, in order that the protection it authorizes can be provided, whenever practicable, through insurance policies issued by private insurance companies and reinsured with the Administrator, in lieu of providing such protection through insurance policies issued in the name of the Administrator.

(c) The Administrator shall undertake a continuing study of the feasibility of having private insurance companies take over, with or without some form of Federal financial support, the insurance programs authorized by this act.

ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS

SEC. 18. For the purpose of carrying out functions under this act the Administrator may—

(a) sue or be sued;

(b) without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U. S. C. 529 and 41 U. S. C. 5), and section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412, as amended (40 U. S. C. 278a)), enter into and perform contracts, leases, cooperative agreements, or other transactions, on such terms as he may deem appropriate, with any agency or instrumentality of the United States, or with any State or agency or political subdivision thereof, or with any person, firm, association, or corporation and consent to modification thereof, and make advance or progress payments in connection therewith;

(c) without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U. S. C. 529 and 41 U. S. C. 5), and section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412, as amended (40 U. S. C. 278a)), by purchase, lease, or donation acquire such real and personal property and any interest therein, make advance or progress payments in connection therewith, and hold, use, maintain, insure against loss, sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of such real and personal property as the Administrator deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this act;

(f) issue such rules and regulations as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; and

(g) exercise all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this act and such incidental powers as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

RESERVATION OF RIGHTS IN REAL ESTATE ACQUIRED

SEC. 19. The acquisition by the Administrator of any real property pursuant to this act shall not deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil or criminal jurisdiction in and over such property or impair the civil rights under the State or local law of the inhabitants on such property.

TAXATION

SEC. 20. Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property, acquired and held by the Administrator in connection with the payment of any claim under this act, from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 21. The annual report made by the Administrator to the President for submission to the Congress under existing law on all programs provided for under this act shall contain a comprehensive report concerning (1) the operation of insurance, reinsurance, and loan programs authorized under this act, and (2) the status and result of studies authorized under section 17 of this act, together with such recommendations, if any, for legislative changes deemed by the Administrator desirable to improve the operation of programs authorized under this act. The annual report for the calendar year ending December 31, 1961, shall contain an express opinion of the Administrator, supported by pertinent findings, concerning the advisability of withdrawing in whole or in part Federal financial support for insurance policies to be issued at any time after June 30, 1962, offering protection as authorized in this act, taking into consideration, the desirability of offering such protection. Such opinion shall be accompanied by recommendations for legislative changes deemed desirable by the Administrator in the event the opinion is to the effect that any such withdrawal of financial support is advisable.

SEPARABILITY PROVISION

SEC. 23. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to any person or circumstance other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. FREAR in the chair) appointed Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. MONRONEY, Mr. MORSE, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. BRICKER, and Mr. BUSH conferees on the part of the Senate.

SERVICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY AS CHAIRMAN OF A SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, today I was most interested to read in the Washington Post an editorial dealing with a subject matter which has disturbed me considerably; and from my conversations with other Members of the Senate, I find that it has disturbed them, as well.

First, Mr. President, I should like to read the editorial. Let me say that by no stretch of the imagination could the Washington Post be considered to be a "Democratic house organ."

It consistently supported President Eisenhower in his campaign in the great crusade of 1952, and it has consistently supported him during his 3½ years of administration.

I think it is significant that this newspaper, which is one of the most friendly in the United States toward Mr. Eisenhower, his so-called team, and his administration, should publish this editorial, which I wish to read for the information of the Senate. After reading the editorial, I shall comment upon it.

The editorial reads as follows:

MR. HUMPHREY'S BITE

The interest of Treasury Secretary Humphrey in helping elect a Republican Congress in November is altogether understandable. Not so much can be said for Mr. Humphrey's judgment in agreeing to serve as chairman of the Bender-for-Senator Campaign Committee in Ohio. The committee reportedly was undertaken to raise a $400,000 campaign fund for Senator BENDER.

The Secretary of the Treasury has the ultimate responsibility for ruling on Federal tax cases from all over the country, including Ohio. Although Secretary Humphrey's personal integrity and honorable intentions are not in the slightest question, his position at the head of a campaign raising political funds might lend itself to misunderstanding on the part of persons solicited. The solicitations might be construed as alternatively a command or a come-in for favorable treatment. The chief fiscal officer of the Government, a senior member of the Cabinet, ought to be especially at pains to set an example in his conduct and to refrain from any political activity of the sort that might involve his office even remotely. Surely Mr. Humphrey, when he thinks about it, will see the impropriety of the extracurricular job he has undertaken.

Mr. President, I agree completely with the editorial in the Washington Post. I, along with many other Members of the Senate, was shocked at the lack of judgment, the lack of political acumen, and the lack of understanding of what occupation of the dual role of campaign chairman and political-fund raiser, on the one hand, and of the chief fiscal administrator of our Government, on the other hand could do our political system.

I have tremendous respect for the personal integrity, sincerity, and ability of the Secretary of the Treasury, even though I disagree with him on many political issues. I think every Member of this body shares that point of view, and appreciates the integrity of the Secretary of the Treasury; and by that I mean the present incumbent.

But, Mr. President, when the Secretary of the Treasury so far forgets the proprieties of his great office and the vast, overwhelming power of his office, as to actively engage as campaign chairman for a United States Senator, the Secretary of the Treasury is damaging the very fiscal machinery which he has taken an oath to administer with all propriety and with all due diligence.

Mr. President, it would seem to me that Mr. Humphrey should reevaluate and reassess the vast power he now holds as the Secretary of the Treasury. He holds power over our entire banking system, including the power to determine in most cases whether a bank shall have competition by means of the opening of a new bank in the same area, his control over the deposits of Federal funds in banks, and his right of determination as to which banks shall receive such deposits, all of which can affect the earning power of almost every bank in the United States, including those in the State of Ohio.

Furthermore, let me say that since there comes under the Treasury Department the vast Bureau of Internal Revenue, with its thousands of pending income-tax cases, and with the power of investigation over all income tax returns by the Internal Revenue agents being able to open and investigate any one of the individual income-tax returns made by any taxpayer of the United States, certainly the Secretary of the Treasury should place his office above any suspicion, justified or unjustified, of charges of political interference or political manipulation.

I have talked to some of the senior Members of this body, and not one of them can ever recall a time when a Secretary of the Treasury has ever injected himself into political fund raising or political campaign managing.

As I have said, Mr. Humphrey is a man of great integrity. But no matter how great his integrity may be, the things which will be done in his name in any political campaign, by the lieutenants in the lower echelons of money-raising activities, or the pressures which can be brought through junior lieutenants who might use his name for political power, may be extremely dangerous to a clean election and a fair election, an election in which any American voter who has vast financial interests may take a part—as a good American should—as a private citizen in the election of the candidate of his choice.

Therefore, Mr. President, if we in the Congress are as interested as we said we were when 85 Members of this body signed a clean election bill, in hopes of eliminating slush funds from politics, and of identifying the donors of political funds, and of reviewing the expenditure of such funds, in order to ascertain whether they were properly expended, then I think the Senate should be concerned about this new excursion under the name of the "Great Crusade," into the political management of a senatorial campaign, by the chief fiscal officer of the United States Government.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am happy to yield to the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I compliment the Senator on his statement. I agree with him that this is a very unusual step. I agree with the Senator that the Secretary of the Treasury has a very fine reputation as an individual, but it seems to me that he has shown a lack of understanding of the role of Secretary of the Treasury in our Government. It seems to me that an administration which was so sensitive with respect to the activities of fund raising in the case of the gas bill is for some reason or other very lacking in sensitiveness in this instance. I think the Senator will agree that the Secretary of the Treasury is in a better position effectively to solicit funds than anyone else in the country.

Mr. MONRONEY. I should certainly say that with his vast powers over fiscal matters, income-tax matters, and pending cases, the occupancy of the dual role which he has chosen for himself should, on mature reflection, convince the Secretary of the Treasury that his duty as the chief financial officer—as virtually a judge in fiscal matters—makes his position wholly incompatible with the management of a political campaign for Senator, for President, Vice President, or Member of Congress.

Mr. Humphrey should be allowed to participate as an individual American, and to donate what money he cares to donate, within the law, toward the election of the candidate of his choice. The very fact that he might say he favors the election of Candidate X as a Senator from the State of Ohio would have a great deal of effect in assisting that candidate. But when he is placed in charge of the campaign, with the money raising duties resting on his shoulders, that is a different situation.

I do not know whether the reports are accurate, but it is reported in the Washington Post editorial that a fund of $400,000 will be raised to elect a Senator from Ohio.

That is many times the legal limit. I do not know the source of the information, but it is published in a reputable newspaper. The report is that it is proposed to raise a $400,000 slush fund. If that be true, then the Secretary of the Treasury, unless he denies the $400,000 story, is today guilty of violation of the Corrupt Practices Act, which prohibits the expenditure of such a sum for the election of a United States Senator.

We are moving onto dangerous ground, when people become careless about the proprieties which should surround the office of a high official. He should not accept such a position as this.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Senator know of any precedent in our history for such action on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. MONRONEY. I have talked with senior Members of the United States Senate, with many men who for years have been dealing with the Treasury Department in connection with income-tax matters and other subjects under the jurisdiction of that Department. They tell me that they know of no precedent for this action. They cannot even recall a case in which a Secretary of the Treasury had served on a committee to raise funds.

It has seemed so important to the President that we keep our politics and our campaigns clean that, for that reason alone, he vetoed the gas bill. The distinguished Senator from South Dakota spoke today about certain indictments which had been obtained by the Department of Justice in connection with the campaign contribution issue involving an incident in which $2,500 was supposed to have been offered or donated toward the campaign of a United States Senator in South Dakota. Indictments have been obtained. With that action I have no quarrel. If the law has been violated, I hope those who violated it will be brought to justice.

But we have an entirely different question when the Secretary of the Treasury is placed in charge of a money-raising campaign. If the Washington Post story be true, that a $400,000 campaign fund is to be raised in behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], under the chairmanship of the Secretary of the Treasury, we shall find that the great confidence that should be reposed in the Secretary of the Treasury will be severely shaken.

I have just received a note from the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections of the Committee on Government Operations, the distinguished junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]. I inquired as to the limit, under the Ohio State law, for contributions to the election of a United States Senator. His staff informs me that this Ohio law limits it to $2,500, and not $400,000. I am also informed that the maximum amount in any State, under our present Federal Corrupt Practices Act, is $25,000.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma a question. If I correctly understood him, he stated that the newspaper article to which he referred indicated that Secretary Humphrey was raising funds in the State of Ohio for the senatorial campaign. Does the Senator know that Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey will have nothing to do with raising funds, and that the responsibility in that connection has been placed in the hands of Joseph C. Schouvlin, of Springfield, Ohio, who is the chairman of the finance committee. Has the Senator taken the trouble to learn the facts in that connection?

Mr. MONRONEY. Let me say in reply to my distinguished and beloved friend from Kansas that the Senator from Oklahoma is not so naive—nor is the Senator from Kansas—as to believe that the power of Mr. Humphrey's name and the influence of his office can be dissociated from the money-raising feature of any campaign, any more than the sun could be divided from the rest of the universe. He is the head of the campaign. There may be a dozen junior lieutenants or finance chairmen. The chairmanship is entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. The reports will all come to the chairman of the campaign committee.

When investigations are made—and they must be made, if this $400,000 figure is correct—the first witness to be called will be the chairman of the campaign committee. The distinguished Senator from Kansas knows that to be so.

The Secretary of the Treasury can no more take off his hat as Secretary of the Treasury and hang it on one peg, put on another hat as campaign manager for a senatorial political campaign, and walk out a different man, than he can put on a hat as chairman of the committee and avoid the money-raising issue. I say that because the Secretary of the Treasury is the director and chairman of that campaign. The Senator from Kansas knows that to be a political fact of life, and so does the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does the Senator from Oklahoma feel that all Cabinet members, whether Democrat or Republican, should be barred from any political activity?

Mr. MONRONEY. I would say that a member of the Cabinet, certainly a member of the Cabinet in the sensitive position of Secretary of the Treasury, who controls all the banks and all the deposits and all the Federal money in the banks, and who heads the income-tax division and the income-tax investigators through a subagency, has no right to participate, in a managerial or any other official capacity, in the campaign of a United States Senator or in the campaign of a candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I am glad to have the Senator's frank view on the subject. I wonder how many of his good Democratic friends on the other side of the aisle—and I am not excluding the Senator from Oklahoma—subscribe to that theory so far as the last two Democratic administrations are concerned.

Mr. MONRONEY. I can remember the last campaign very distinctly, when not one of the Cabinet members made a speech during the campaign. They felt it was improper to do so. The Secretary of State declined to make any political speeches. I do not recall any other Cabinet member making a speech. The Secretary of Defense declined to do so. Certainly a man who occupies the high position of Secretary of the Treasury should have a keen sensitivity about his relationship to the powerful and important and responsible position he holds, and should not assume the duties of manager or chairman in a senatorial or a presidential campaign.

There is a very good reason why Federal law prohibits a national bank from making any contribution to any kind of political campaign. Yet now we hear of a man, who is in charge of all the banks and all the deposits of the Government in the banks, going onto the firing line and leading the charge, with his saber drawn, to do or die for dear old GEORGE BENDER.

I want him to be for GEORGE BENDER, if he chooses; but certainly, if he chooses to become chairman of his campaign, he should resign his position as Secretary of the Treasury. Either that, or he should resign his position as manager for Senator BENDER'S campaign.

I have no objection if he wishes to manage that campaign. It is a high calling to manage a campaign. I am happy to have had friends who were willing to manage my campaigns. However, it must be remembered that a Federal employee, even one in the humble position of postmaster or letter carrier, cannot, under the provisions of the Hatch Act, engage in political or campaign activities. Apparently that is not the case with the Secretary of the Treasury. If it is wrong for a postmaster, who has very little power to exert in a political campaign, to serve even as a member of a political committee, then it is certainly wrong, and it compounds the abuse and the evil, for a man who is in command of a very important post in our Government to forsake that high post and engage in the razzle-dazzle of campaign management and campaign expenditures.

Whether the Senator from Kansas believes it or not, the money raising which will be done during the campaign will be quite extensive. Perhaps it may be done without the Secretary's knowledge, but if so, it will only be because he will have put on earmuffs or have quarantined himself in a vacuum to avoid knowing who is putting up the money for the big fund to elect the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one final question.

Mr. MONRONEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. By way of observation—and I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma agrees—I should like to say that George Humphrey is a reliable man and a man of great integrity, and would not do anything illegal or anything that was in conflict with the law.

Mr. MONRONEY. I agree with what the Senator has said. I have already said so a half dozen times in my remarks. However, he is a man of very poor political judgment. I am afraid he is so intent on electing a Republican Senate that he is willing even to put the high post of Secretary of the Treasury, with all its responsibilities and dignity, on the block of a political campaign, in order to win the seat for the hard-pressed Republican candidate in Ohio.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator will agree to check the record in connection with the distinguished list of Democrats I hold in my hand. It is a list of distinguished Democrats who actively participated in campaigns of a few years ago. The list is headed by the name of the great Ickes, who occupied a very important Cabinet position. Then there is Jim Farley, who is a great Democrat. He is respected all over the country. Then there is Mr. Hannigan and also Louis Johnson. I wonder whether the Senator will reflect for a moment before he goes too far with his remarks about the present Secretary of the Treasury. I recognize the Senator from Oklahoma has a right to be alarmed. This is the first time I have heard the admission made by Democrats that there is a good chance of completely losing the State of Ohio. Formerly they had insisted they would win the senatorial seat in Ohio.

Mr. MONRONEY. I recall no campaign management or any money-raising activities by Mr. Ickes.

I remember that Mr. Farley was the campaign manager for President Roosevelt. I believe he retired as chairman of the Democratic National Committee after he took the position of Postmaster General. I do not know of any official position in a political campaign that was held by Mr. Louis Johnson. This is the first time that a Cabinet official has taken the position of campaign manager, after entering the Cabinet.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is it not a fact that Mr. Farley was Democratic national chairman during all the time he was Postmaster General?

Mr. MONRONEY. I do not believe so.

Mr. CAPEHART. Oh, yes; he was.

Mr. MONRONEY. During the campaign. As soon as he was appointed Postmaster General, he sought his successor, who was appointed.

Mr. CAPEHART. He was Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee at the same time. I do not see anything particularly wrong with it, of course.

Mr. MONRONEY. That is what is beginning to worry me, that the Republicans do not see anything wrong in allowing these things to go on. A Secretary of the Treasury should have a greater perception of the duties of his office.

Mr. President, I understand the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], concerning whose campaign I have been speaking, wishes me to yield to him. I shall be delighted to yield to him or to yield the floor. I shall be glad to yield the floor, but I promised to yield to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who has temporarily left the floor.

But in answer to the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], let me say that Attorney General Brownell managed the Eisenhower campaign, and, along with Mr. Summerfield, raised money for the campaign. They did that before they became Cabinet members. Mr. Summerfield's position is recognized as having the duty to see to it that no Democratic postmaster is appointed if a living Republican can be found to fill the office. He is still in the Cabinet and may take an active part in the Republican campaign, I suppose. I do not believe there is any precedent within 100 miles for a man occupying such a sensitive position as Secretary of the Treasury to be appointed campaign chairman.

Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, mention has been made of Mr. Farley's name. I have been very closely associated with Mr. Farley since the time when I was First Assistant Postmaster General.

I wish to say what I know to be a fact, that it was the custom throughout many administrations, Republican and Democratic alike, to appoint as Postmaster General the man who had managed the campaign for the election of the President. Republican President after Republican President, and Democratic Presidents, also, named as their Postmaster General the man who was supposed to be the political manager of their campaign.

Anyone who attempts to compare such service in a political campaign with the service of the Secretary of the Treasury, under whose jurisdiction all taxes are collected, who has all power over banks, all power over the financial aspects of the country, in the campaign of 1956, when the great issue of small business versus big business will be debated—anyone who attempts to compare the service now undertaken by the Secretary of the Treasury with the service of Democratic and Republican Postmasters General in the past is making a comparison of incomparable services.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is it not a fact that James Farley was chairman of the Democratic National Committee from 1932 to 1940, and is it not also a fact that he was Postmaster General from 1933 to 1940?

Mr. MONRONEY. My memory does not go back that far, though I know, as the Senator from Wyoming said, that for dozens of years it has been customary for Democratic and Republican campaign managers to assume the duties of the Postmaster General. But does the Senator consider the sensitivity of the office of the Postmaster General to be comparable with the vast powers of the Secretary of the Treasury? The Senator is a member of the Banking and Currency Committee——

Mr. CAPEHART. I would say that the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Jim Farley, who was likewise Postmaster General and the manager of Mr. Roosevelt's campaign, was in a rather sensitive spot.

Mr. MONRONEY. If the distinguished Senator sees no difference in the control of the income-tax machinery, the control of the banks, and all the other vast powers possessed by the Secretary of the Treasury, perhaps that explains why the Secretary of the Treasury has been persuaded to undertake the job of campaign chairman.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, we have four bills to dispose of, and when we finish with them Senators can talk politics into the night, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. President, I asked recognition, but I am happy to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

COVERAGE OF EMPLOYEES OF GALLAUDET COLLEGE WITHIN THE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' GROUP LIFE INSURANCE ACT

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2858, House bill 3489.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3489) to amend the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 to bring employees of Gallaudet College within its coverage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which has been reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service with an amendment.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2851, House bill 4392.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4392) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide a special method of taxation for real estate investment trusts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] make a brief statement concerning the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, H. R. 4392 provides substantially the same treatment for real estate investment trusts as present law provides for regulated investment companies. Real estate trusts are organizations specializing in investments in real estate and real estate mortgages while the regulated investment companies specialize in investments in stocks and securities.

Under present law regulated investment companies, which distribute 90 percent or more of their ordinary income are taxed only on their retained earnings. In general, the beneficiaries of these companies are treated as if they had received the income directly from the same sources as the investment company. This bill removes the discrimination against real estate investments by according real estate investment trusts and their beneficiaries this same conduit type of tax treatment. The bill carefully restricts this tax treatment to what are clearly passive real estate investments. Your committee believes that any real estate trust engaging in active business operations should continue to be subject to the corporate tax in the same manner as is true in the case of similar operations carried on by comparable enterprises.

Your committee believes that the equality of tax treatment between the beneficiaries of the real estate trusts and the shareholders of regulated investment companies is desirable since in both cases the methods of investment constitute pooling arrangements whereby small investors can secure advantages normally available only to those with larger resources. These advantages include the spreading of the risk of loss by the greater diversification of investment; the opportunity to secure the benefits of expert investment counsel; and the means of collectively financing projects which investors cannot undertake singly.

In addition to providing equality of tax treatment between the trust beneficiary and the investment company shareholders, your committee believes that it is also desirable to remove taxation to the extent possible as a factor in determining the relative size of investments in stocks and securities on one hand and real estate equities and mortgages on the other. This is particularly important now because currently the financing of these real estate equities and mortgages is dependent largely on Government-guaranteed money, and investments by special groups, such as insurance companies and pension trusts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 4392) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARITABLE DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN BEQUESTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2852, H. R. 11834; and that the bill be considered without amendments, except committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11834) to allow a charitable deduction for certain bequests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, under present law, a deduction is allowed for estate tax purposes for the amount of a bequest to charity. This deduction is allowed if the property actually goes to charity, with regard to the fact that the bequest was made outright to charity or that the bequest was only paid to charity because the named beneficiary renounced his right to receive the gift. In some cases it is not possible for a legatee to renounce and allow the property to go to charity under the terms of the will. Under this bill, if the surviving spouse of the decedent is over 80 at the time of the decedent's death and has a life estate plus a power of appointment over the corpus of a bequest in trust, he may name the charities in whose favor he intends to exercise the power of appointment within 1 year of the decedent's death, and if the power of appointment is exercised by his will in favor of the charitable organizations as he stated he would, the bequest will be treated as a bequest by the decedent to the charity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREIGN TAX CREDIT FOR UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2853, H. R. 7643; and that the bill be considered without amendments, except committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7643) to amend the Internal Revenue Code with respect to foreign tax credit for United Kingdom income tax paid with respect to royalties and other like amounts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the bill amends the foreign tax credit provisions in the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for tax years beginning on or after January 1, 1950. It provides that a United States recipient of a royalty for the use of copyrights, patents and other similar properties derived from sources within the United Kingdom is to be deemed for purposes of the foreign tax credit to have paid any income, war profits, or excess-profits taxes paid to the United Kingdom by which the royalty was reduced. This bill is intended to give the same tax result to recipients of royalties who have permanent business establishments in the United Kingdom as is given to royalty recipients who do not have permanent business establishments under existing tax conventions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOWANCE AS DEDUCTIONS OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO MEDICAL RESEARCH ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2854, H. R. 12152; and that the bill be considered without amendments, except committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12152) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for the allowance as deductions of contributions to medical research organizations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to raise the charitable contribution limit for individuals from 20 to 30 percent of adjusted gross income in the case of contributions made to certain medical research organizations in the same manner as the limit for contributions to educational institutions, hospitals, and churches was increased by the 1954 Code. Under the bill, the contributions to medical research organizations that will qualify are only those made to organizations directly engaged in the continuous active conduct of medical research in conjunction with a hospital and only if during the calendar year in which the contribution is made the organization is committed to spend the contribution for such research within the 4 years following the year the contribution was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLACEMENT OF GUAR SEED ON THE FREE LIST

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2833, H. R. 9396. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9396) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place guar seed on the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, testimony was given on the bill before it passed the House. It was stated that none of these beans are grown in the United States. I want to be certain that the RECORD is correct about that.

The information I have is that in 1955 more than 100,000 acres of these beans were planted in Texas. In 1956, 65,000 acres have been planted. Experiments are now being conducted with the guar plant, and the question I wish to address to the chairman of the Committee on Finance is this: Is this tariff exemption extended for an indefinite period?

Mr. BYRD. It is; the bill extends the period indefinitely.

Mr. THYE. I believe it would be a mistake to do that, because if it proves advisable to grow these beans in the Southwest, there will then be an expansion of the acreage grown. The development of this plant should be encouraged.

If imported guar beans are to be placed on the free list, the planting of this type of crop in the United States will be discouraged. Therefore, I believe the exemption should not be for more than 1 or 2 years, until a definite report can be made.

Mr. BYRD. I will accept an amendment providing for a 2-year exemption.

Mr. THYE. I thank the distinguished chairman for permitting this amendment to be made on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Virginia submit the amendment?

Mr. BYRD. The amendment provides an exemption for 2 years from the date of passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On what line will the amendment appear?

Mr. THYE. I do not have a copy of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment be made at the appropriate place in the bill, so as to provide for a limitation of the exemption for 2 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the chairman of the committee is that a proviso be included in the bill to limit the exemption to 2 years. Is that the sense of the amendment?

Mr. THYE. And that that amendment appear in the appropriate place in the language of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement with respect to the bill.

Guar seed is the seed of a grass-like plant, and is used principally to produce a type of gum used in the paper industries and recently in the processing of uranium.

The plant does not grow well in the United States. It is true that some is being grown experimentally. The seed is in great demand but is available only in very limited quantities.

Making it free of duty would be of assistance to consumers in the United States in the purchase of limited quantities in foreign countries.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, for myself and on behalf of my colleague, the distinguished junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PURTELL], I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill, to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to admit free of duty any stained glass or any prefabricated panels consisting of stained glass set in reinforced concrete with fastening devices which may be imported within the 12-month period commencing on the date of enactment of this act for use in the construction of a new sanctuary and auxiliary buildings of the First Presbyterian Church of Stamford, Conn.

Mr. BUSH. The amendment was discussed with the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I believe he is willing to accept it.

Mr. BYRD. I will accept the amendment and take it to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I shall yield to Senators for the purpose of submitting reports and making insertions in the RECORD. There are 4 or 5 bills we are endeavoring to have considered. The Senator is trying to catch a plane. Reports can be filed until midnight.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, the bill has not been passed yet, and I have an amendment to offer to it. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, after line 5, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph 1774 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U. S. C. 1201, par. 1774), is amended to read as follows:

"PAR. 1774. Altars, pulpits, communion tables, baptismal fonts, shrines, mosaics, or parts of any of the foregoing, and statuary (except casts of plaster of paris, or of compositions of paper or papier-mache), imported in good faith for the use of, either by order of or for presentation (without charge) to, any corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious purposes."

(b) This section shall apply to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption on or after the date of enactment of this section, and to mosaics covered by entries or withdrawals which have not been liquidated or the liquidation of which has not become final on such date of enactment.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, this amendment is the same language as that contained in H. R. 11035, which unanimously passed the House of Representatives on Tuesday. It provides for the duty free entry of mosaics imported for religious purposes.

Under present law, altars, pulpits, shrines, statues, and related items, imported by or for the use of organizations operated exclusively for religious purposes, are exempt from import duties. The bill provides for the inclusion of mosaics imported for those purposes in the list of exempted items.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 9396) was read the third time and passed.

EXEMPTIONS FROM TAX IMPOSED UPON CERTAIN PERSONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2832, H. R. 7634, under the same conditions previously requested, that only amendments that are acceptable to the chairman of the committee be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7634) to provide that amounts which do not exceed 60 cents shall be exempt from the tax imposed upon amounts paid for the transportation of persons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill, under the conditions stated by the majority leader? The Chair hears no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, at the appropriate place, to insert a new section as follows:

(g) For the purposes of this subtitle if property is sold or disposed of solely as the result of proceedings brought pursuant to the provisions of section 4 of the Sherman Act (26 Stat. 309, 15 U. S. C. 4), or pursuant to section 15 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 736, 15 U. S. C. 25), and none of the defendants in such proceedings have been named as defendants in criminal proceedings because of the acts complained of in the civil action at the time of filing such civil action, such sale shall be treated as an involuntary conversion to which this section applies.

(h) In the case of property sold to which the preceding subsection applies the requirements of (a) (1) dealing with investment in similar or related property shall be satisfied if the proceeds of the sale are invested with the approval of the Secretary in other property for use in a trade or business.

(i) The amendments made by this act shall apply only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1955.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the amendment provides that where property is sold because of a civil suit under the antitrust laws, a taxpayer is given 1 year to reinvest the proceeds in property to be held for productive use in a trade or business. If the civil action seeking divestiture is in any way connected with a criminal proceeding against the defendant named in the civil action, then the benefits of this section do not apply. The proceeds of the sale must be invested in property held for productive use in a trade or business with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate. The language of section 1033 requiring investment in similar properties has been changed to permit reinvestments, with the approval of the Secretary, in other business properties. However, it is anticipated that the Secretary's approval will be withheld where the properties acquired are not closely related in use to the property sold.

By adding these subsections to section 1033 dealing with involuntary conversions generally, the basis rules and the replacement fund rules in that section will govern reacquisitions.

In other words, what the amendment means is that if a company is forced to divest itself of property under the antitrust laws because of court action, no tax shall apply, provided the money is reinvested in property used in a productive business within the course of a year.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, did that provision pass the House?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; my understanding is it has not passed the House. I understand the House committee was favorable and agreeable to it.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator from New Hampshire have any idea of the loss to the Treasury which would be incurred by adoption of the amendment?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not think in the end there would be any loss. If, as the result of a civil suit, a company was ordered to divest itself of property, and there was any criminal undertaking or criminal connection with the civil suit, the amendment would not apply.

Mr. BYRD. Has the Treasury approved the amendment?

Mr. BRIDGES. I understand so. I cannot vouch for it, but that is my understanding.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Is this the amendment that was offered in the Finance Committee, and which the Finance Committee discussed and finally rejected.

Mr. BRIDGES. Not to my knowledge, but it may have been. I am not on the Finance Committee.

Mr. SMATHERS. Is this not the amendment that applies only to the Hilton Hotel group?

Mr. BRIDGES. I presume it might apply to that group, but it would apply to anybody who was forced to divest himself of property under an antitrust suit in a civil suit.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator from New Hampshire know of anybody else than the Hilton people to whom the amendment would apply?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not know that it would apply even to the Hilton people.

Mr. SMATHERS. As I recall, both the Treasury and the Department of Justice are opposed to this amendment at this time.

Mr. BYRD. The amendment was considered in the committee and was not approved.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is not the effect of this amendment to free from the capital-gains tax the gains which a company might make if it sold a hotel for more than it paid for the hotel?

Mr. BRIDGES. It postpones the application of the capital-gains tax.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It frees from the capital-gains tax the profits which might be made from the sale of a hotel if the sale had been ordered under a civil procedure.

Mr. BRIDGES. If it is an involuntary sale.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. There would be a very substantial tax saving to the beneficiary under the amendment, would there not?

Mr. BRIDGES. There would be a postponement of the tax.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. The postponement would be dependent upon what, on ultimate disposition, the property might bring.

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. If the hotel were sold at a time when the market was high, the amendment might result in a substantial tax saving. If the hotel were sold when the market was low, there might not be any tax.

Mr. BRIDGES. The tax on the new property might take the place of the old, because the basis of the old property continues. I realize that this amendment is being proposed on the floor. I have not approved of a good number of the measures which have been passed in the last few days. I am not forcing my amendment, but it seems to me when the Federal Government steps in, and, by compulsory action, forces the sale of property against the wishes of the owner, or an owner sells property under orders to dispose of the property, then there should be some leeway in the taxes, regardless of whether a hotel or any other type of property is involved.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe the amendment ought to have the consideration of the committee. The amendment was before the committee. The committee laid it aside for further consideration.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if the distinguished chairman of the committee feels that way, the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw the amendment, with the assurance that the committee and its staff will study the matter and give prompt consideration in the new Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have an explanation of the bill printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BYRD

Under present law an exemption is provided in the case of the tax on the transportation of persons for commutation or season tickets for single trips of less than 30 miles or for amounts paid for commutation tickets for 1 month or less. Present law also provides an exemption from the transportation tax for charges not in excess of 35 cents.

This bill increases the exemption I have just referred to from 35 cents to 60 cents. When this bill was reported out by your committee this exemption was contained in subsection (b) of section 4262. Since the President signed H. R. 5265, relating to the application of the transportation tax to foreign travel, the section referred to is changed to section 4263.

The 35-cent exemption was first provided when the transportation tax was imposed in 1941. Since 1941 prices of transportation services have advanced considerably with the result that this exemption is now considerably less effective in exempting commutation travel than at that time. Railroad coach fares in the eastern part of the country, for example, since 1940 have increased 68 percent or approximately the equivalent of the increase provided by this bill in the exemption level.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 7634) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COVERAGE OF EMPLOYEES OF GALLAUDET COLLEGE WITHIN THE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' GROUP LIFE INSURANCE ACT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of Calendar No. 2858, House bill 3489. That bill was previously taken up, and then was temporarily laid aside; and I thought the bill had been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3489) to amend the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 to bring employees of Gallaudet College within its coverage, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service with an amendment on page 1, after line 9, to insert:

SEC. 3. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the postage on the periodicals defined in section 203 of the act of July 3, 1948 (39 U. S. C. 291b), under the heading "Controlled Circulation Publications," shall be at the same rate as prescribed in such section of such act, regardless of the weight of the individual copies which rate shall remain in effect until otherwise provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act covers generally officers and employees of the United States Government and of the government of the District of Columbia including certain Government owned and controlled corporations. In view of the status of Gallaudet College as a private corporation, its officers and employees were not included under the provisions of this act. This bill brings such employees under the Federal insurance program.

The Senate amendment changes the classification "controlled circulation publications" from that of fourth-class to that of the second-class category.

The committee has just finished a study of this mail classification, and has concluded that this amendment will correct a longstanding inequity in mail classification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 3489) was read the third time and passed.

REVIEW OF CUSTOMS TARIFF SCHEDULES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2834, House bill 12254, under the same circumstances, namely, that only amendments acceptable to the chairman of the committee be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12254) to provide additional time for the Tariff Commission to review the customs tariff schedules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this bill merely extends until March 1, 1958, the time in which to make certain studies now being made by the Tariff Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 12254) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 3266. An act to authorize officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to act as notaries in places outside the United States.

S. 3314. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to pay the expenses of an Advisory Committee on Soil and Water Conservation; and

S. 3831. An act to provide for the establishment of a fish hatchery in the State of West Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7225) to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide disability insurance benefits for certain disabled individuals who have attained age 50, to reduce to age 62 the age on the basis of which benefits are payable to certain women, to provide for continuation of child's insurance benefits for children who are disabled before attaining age 18, to extend coverage, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7619) to adjust the rates of compensation of the heads of the executive departments and of certain other officials of the Federal Government, and for other purposes.

IMPORTATION FREE OF DUTY OF CERTAIN SHOE LATHES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2836, House bill 10177, under the same circumstances, namely, that only amendments acceptable to the chairman of the committee will be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10177) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide that certain lathes used for shoe last roughing or for shoe last finishing may be imported into the United States free of duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the word "act", to insert "and prior to the expiration of 2 years after such date."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer. I have previously submitted the amendment to the distinguished chairman of the committee. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Section 313 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting after "linseed oil," wherever it appears, the following: "or printing papers, coated or uncoated."

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I should like to explain the amendment.

Under existing law and customs regulations, magazine publishers are entitled to a drawback of 99 percent of the duty they pay on imported Canadian paper, provided that the same paper is reexported to Canada in the form of magazines. This leads to endless and obvious bookkeeping and production problems, to make sure that the imported paper goes into the exported magazines.

The American paper manufacturing industry has no objection to this amendment. Magazine paper is in extremely short supply.

Canadian circulation of American magazines is roughly 5 percent of total circulation. The tariff on magazine paper, which this amendment would not change, is prohibitive. Hence, there is no possibility that more than 5 percent of our magazines will be printed on Canadian paper; and it is extremely unlikely that the use of Canadian paper would even approach that percentage.

This amendment would merely permit "substitution" such as already is provided for in section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930 for sugar, metal, ore, flaxseed or linseed, or flaxseed or linseed oil. In other words, the magazine publisher, if he sent 100 tons of magazines to Canada, could import 100 tons of Canadian magazine paper with a drawback. He then could put this paper into his general paper "bank" and could use it for either domestic or foreign-circulated magazines.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am willing to take the amendment to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 10177) was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to suspend for 2 years the import duties on certain lathes used for shoe last roughing or for shoe last finishing, and to permit substitution for drawback purposes in the case of printing papers."

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the fact that the mutual-aid appropriation bill conference report has been agreed to by the House of Representatives; the social security bill conference report has also been agreed to by the House of Representatives; and the conference report on the second supplemental appropriation bill is now in progress. As I understand, the conference report on the executive pay bill has also been agreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes, it has been agreed to by the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. So all of those conference reports may be called up either later in the day or on tomorrow; and I should like all Senators to be on notice in that connection.

Mr. President, I should also like to give notice, if I have not already done so, that we plan before we go out either today or tomorrow to consider Calendar No. 2751, H. R. 2128, to authorize the extension of patents covering inventions whose practice was prevented or curtailed during certain emergency periods by service of the patent owner in the Armed Forces or by production controls.

I should like Senators to be on notice that there is a possibility that that bill will be considered.

Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

AMORTIZATION OF GRAIN-STORAGE FACILITIES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2472, House bill 9083, under the same conditions; namely, that only amendments acceptable to the chairman of the committee be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9083) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the period for amortization of grain-storage facilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That (a) section 169 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to amortization of grain-storage facilities) is amended—

(1) by striking out in subsection (d) thereof "December 31, 1956," wherever appearing therein, and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1958"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) Cross reference.—

"For special rule with respect to gain derived from the sale or exchange of property the adjusted basis of which is determined with regard to this section, see section 1238."

(b) Section 1238 of such code (relating to amortization in excess of depreciation) is amended by inserting after "section 168 (relating to amortization deduction of emergency facilities)" the following: "or section 169 (relating to amortization deduction of grain-storage facilities),".

(c) The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply only with respect to sales or exchanges of property on or after the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 2. Section 172 (f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to net operating loss deduction) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) The net operating loss deduction shall be, in lieu of the amount specified in section 122 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, the sum of—

"(A) that portion of the net operating loss deduction for such year, computed as if subsection (a) of this section were applicable to the taxable year, which the number of days in the taxable year after December 31, 1953, bears to the total number of days in such year, and

"(B) that portion of the net operating loss deduction for the taxable year, computed under section 122 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 as if this paragraph had not been enacted, which the number of days in the taxable year before January 1, 1954, bears to the total number of days in such year. A corresponding pro rata computation (notwithstanding subsection (e)) shall also be made in determining the adjustments to the taxable income of such taxable year for the purposes of the second sentence of subsection (b) (2)."

SEC. 3. (a) Section 1234 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to options to buy or sell) is amended by striking out "a privilege or option to buy or sell property" and inserting in lieu thereof "a privilege or option, acquired after February 28, 1954, to buy or sell property."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective as if enacted as an original part of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

SEC. 4. Section 1321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to inventory liquidation of LIFO inventories) is amended by striking out "January 1, 1956" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1957."

SEC. 5. (a) Section 4272 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to exemptions from the tax on the transportation of property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) Farm commodities: The tax imposed by section 4271 shall not apply to amounts paid for the transportation by or for the owner, tenant, or operator of a farm of an agricultural commodity (including livestock and poultry) in continuous movement from the farm on which such commodity was produced to a processing or distributing plant located within the local marketing area for such commodity."

(b) Section 3475 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 (relating to the tax on the transportation of property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) Farm commodities: The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to amounts paid by or for the owner, tenant, or operator of a farm for the transportation of an agricultural commodity (including livestock and poultry) in continuous movement from the farm on which such commodity was produced to a processing or distributing plant located within the local marketing area for such commodity."

(c) (1) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to amounts paid after December 31, 1954. The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply with respect to amounts paid after November 30, 1942, for transportation which begins after such date.

(2) No interest shall be allowed or paid in respect of any overpayment of tax resulting from the amendments made by this section.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. While we are sending for certain Senators who wish to be present when this bill is discussed, I ask unanimous consent to yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], who wishes to make a statement. He has been very courteous in facilitating the pending business. I am sure the Senator from Ohio will have finished his remarks by the time we can secure the attendance of Senators interested in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PERSONAL STATEMENT BY SENATOR BENDER

Mr. BENDER. Mr. President, I was at the Department of Commerce attending a hearing in connection with a small employee-owned airline in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York, when I learned of the most unfortunate attack on the Secretary of the Treasury by a Senator for whom I have great respect. In my opinion, he was the last person who should have been expected to make such an attack.

I was elected a Member of the House of Representatives in 1938. I served seven terms there. Six times I was elected at large in the State of Ohio, and thus had to run as a Senator runs, statewide.

At the time of the lamented death of the late great Senator Robert A. Taft the question arose as to who should be the candidate for his unexpired term. Among those who encouraged me most was the great Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey.

Almost throughout my life I have known George Humphrey. I have always had profound respect for him. He has been my close, intimate friend; and I resent any implication that George Humphrey would do anything dishonorable or would use his office in any way in any political campaign, or otherwise, to influence an election. He is not for sale.

As a matter of fact, here is a letter Secretary Humphrey wrote on September 30, 1954:

SEPTEMBER 13, 1954.

DEAR ———: I am not a member of any campaign fund soliciting committee, and I cannot be. In my official position it would be ridiculous for me to solicit funds. That is elemental.

Sincerely,

G. M. HUMPHREY.

I have an Ohio Republican Senate Finance Committee. I have a list of some of the most prominent people—Republicans and Democrats—on my finance committee. A man who spent most of his life as a Democrat, Mr. Joseph C. Schouvlin, of Springfield, Ohio, is chairman of my finance committee. The secretary and treasurer of the finance committee is Fred J. Milligan, of Columbus.

Senators can understand why there are so many Democrats on this committee. It is because my opponent is a part-time Democrat. Democrats do not know whether he is coming or going, nor do the Republicans. And we all understand that there are no seats in the center aisle.

Personally, I know that George Humphrey is not in any way connected or associated with any financial effort that is being made in my behalf. This finance committee contains the names of 165 prominent citizens of Ohio, and I should say that 150 of them had formerly voted for my opponent, when he was a candidate for governor at various times. However, the people simply do not like someone who is riding both horses at the same time.

Regarding Mr. Humphrey's part in my campaign, he is not my campaign manager. Mr. William Cody Kelly, of Cincinnati, is my campaign manager. Mr. Humphrey agreed very enthusiastically to accept the chairmanship of my committee. Certainly there is not a Member of the Senate or the House would say that the Secretary of the Treasury ever permitted a case to be "fixed" before the Treasury Department.

As a matter of fact, 97 percent of the employees of the Treasury Department are holdover employees. They were frozen in their positions. Secretary Humphrey has made no objection to that. George Humphrey would not do a dishonorable thing. He would not do anything in the way of political chicanery, or "fixing," under any circumstances.

There is not a member of this body who will say that George Humphrey is not the ablest man in the Cabinet. When I announced my candidacy for reelection to the Senate every member of the Cabinet, in addition to the President, sent me a letter thanking me for the cooperation I had given him.

I have not been partisan on this floor. I have not been petty. I have made few speeches on this floor. I have been in Congress and in politics too long not to know that sometimes one makes a terrible mistake by talking too much in a legislative body.

As a Member of Congress, let me say that we have not elected a Democrat in Ohio as a United States Senator since 1934; and we are not going to elect a part-time Democrat this year. The Republican Party is for me, and most of the Democrats in Ohio are for me in this election. I can give their names.

All the Republican Representatives in Congress from Ohio held a meeting in my behalf. They are supporting me enthusiastically, as is the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. Some of the Democratic Representatives in Congress from Ohio are supporting my candidacy.

Frankly, what is wrong with George Humphrey being my chairman? He has not used his office in any way. Ninety-seven percent of the people in his Department are holdover employees, and he certainly has no desire to do anything dishonorable. Anyone in Cleveland, Democrat or Republican, who knows George Humphrey knows something of his character and something of his service. He is serving in the position of Secretary of the Treasury at great financial sacrifice to himself. He is doing it as a public service. Senators know that when he appears before committees he is forthright and honest, and just as frank as is the President himself.

I am a member of the Government Operations Committee. The President said to me, "Do not brush anything under the carpet. If there is anything wrong with the Government, I want it out in the open." That attitude is also characteristic of George Humphrey.

So far as being chairman of my campaign committee is concerned, he is not my manager. He is not the chairman of my finance committee. He is not asking anyone for a dollar. That is not necessary, judging from the response I have received in Ohio.

Last night Mr. Harriman was at the home of my opponent. He said, "He is a regular Democrat." Mr. Harriman certainly was talking for votes from the delegation in Ohio.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Is Mr. Harriman a regular Democrat?

Mr. BENDER. I do not know what he is. In my opinion, Mr. Harriman has about as much chance of being nominated by the Democratic Party as I have; and I am not a candidate for President on the Democratic ticket, as is my opponent. My opponent is a candidate for President, Vice President, and United States Senator. Heretofore, when he ran for governor, some of the Republicans laid down and played dead, and many Republicans supported him. For what reason I do not know. But they are not supporting him this year; nor are the Democrats.

I will be back here next January to take my oath of office. I have the support of the substantial citizens of my State, rich or poor.

George Humphrey is not for sale, nor am I for sale. George Humphrey encouraged me to run for the Senate 2 years ago. He is acting as my chairman because he has a deep affection for me, and—I say this very humbly—an appreciation of my public service.

I resent any implication that he is in any way using his office or using the Treasury Department to bludgeon people into contributing to my campaign. That is not George Humphrey. No Senator can point to a case that he has fixed for anyone. They must all take their place in the courts and must present their arguments in the regular way. There has been no fixing in the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury for any taxpayer who has been derelict in any fashion.

Therefore, I deeply resent the implication on the part of anyone that George Humphrey is doing this for any other purpose except that he is fond of GEORGE BENDER and appreciates my public service. Many of my Democratic friends have said to me, "We don't want a part-time Democrat."

At the Atlantic City Governors' Conference my opponent said he did not know how he would vote on organizing the Senate. Democratic Senators, whether they are from the North or from the South, know how they will vote to organize the Senate. I respect them for it. We on this side of the aisle, while some of us may be from the North or the West or the East, certainly know how we will vote to organize the Senate. It is perfectly absurd for someone to say that he does not know how he will vote to organize the Senate.

That has been the record of my opponent. We have the worst highways in Ohio of any State in the Union, even though we are the fifth richest State and the fifth largest State in the Union. Yet we have the worst highways. The Cleveland Press, which supported my opponent for mayor and governor, has said so. It has said that Ohio had the worst highways in the country.

I know that to be a fact, because I have driven over them. I know what a jeopardy they constitute.

Our mental institutions are in a bad way. Our schools lack $283 million for the construction of necessary schoolrooms.

For these reasons, and others, I say that Republicans as well as Democrats are supporting me in my campaign. So far as Mr. Humphrey doing anything for me is concerned, he is doing no more than other Cabinet members have done in the past.

What do people expect of Republican members of the President's Cabinet to do except support Republican candidates? That is doing no more than Democratic members of the Cabinet do when they support Democratic candidates. The Hatch Act provides that a candidate may not ask an employee of the Federal Government for financial help. Certainly there is no violation of the Hatch Act in this instance. No Federal employees are contributing to my campaign. George Humphrey has nothing to do with the financial end of my campaign. That is being handled by Joseph C. Schouvlin, of Springfield, and 165 prominent Republicans and Democrats, some rich and some poor, who are banding together to get rid of a chameleon in Ohio politics. I know the Republican Party and I know the Democratic Party favor my getting rid of him. The people of Ohio want a full-time Senator on the job. Even my severest critics say that I work here. And they know I get my orders from within and not from without. I have supported President Eisenhower to the best of my ability because I believe in him.

AMORTIZATION OF GRAIN-STORAGE FACILITIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9083) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the period of amortization of grain-storage facilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNAMARA in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 6. (a) Section 23 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 (relating to deductions from gross income) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(gg) Loss in value of certain news collection and dissemination service franchises.—

"(1) In general: In the case of a taxpayer who on June 18, 1945, was engaged in the newspaper or a similar business and held on such date a franchise of a news collection and dissemination service described in paragraph (2), the loss in value of such franchise resulting from court decision which had the effect of destroying exclusive rights granted to the holder of such franchise by the terms of such franchise or the bylaws of such service.

"(2) Franchises described: Paragraph (1) shall apply only to a franchise of a news collection and dissemination service which—

"(A) was acquired by the taxpayer prior to June 18, 1945, and

"(B) when acquired by the taxpayer granted to its holder substantially the same exclusive rights as holders of similar franchises were granted by the bylaws of such service in effect on June 17, 1945.

"(3) Year in which allowed: The deduction allowed by paragraph (1) shall be allowed only for the taxpayer's taxable year which includes June 18, 1945."

(b) Notwithstanding any period of limitation or any other provision of law or rule of law, in the case of any taxpayer who had acquired a franchise described in section 23 (gg) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, the time for filing a return under chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 for his taxable year which includes June 18, 1945, shall, at his election, not expire prior to January 1, 1957. Such election shall be made by filing prior to such date a return for such year in which the deduction allowed by section 23 (gg) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 is claimed by the taxpayer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the chairman of the committee accept the amendment?

Mr. BYRD. I am sorry that I cannot accept the amendment. It would overrule the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in the Reporter Publishing Co. case.

This case held that the loss of value of an exclusive right to a news release wire service by reason of a Supreme Court decision did not result in a tax deductible loss since the internal revenue laws do not permit a deductible loss for the reduction in value of property which the taxpayer still owns. On June 18, 1945, the Supreme Court held in the Associated Press case that the granting of an exclusive franchise for a news release service in an area was in violation of antitrust laws.

This amendment will allow taxpayers who owned exclusive franchises to wire services on June 18, 1945, to take a deduction for the loss of value occasioned by the Supreme Court decision in the Associated Press case. Under the amendment, a taxpayer has until January 1, 1957, to file another return for the taxable year which includes June 18, 1945.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Inasmuch as the chairman does not accept the amendment, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the amendment falls.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I understand, but I wish to say something for the RECORD.

Mr. President, in support of my amendment, I should like to say that prior to the Supreme Court decision of June 18, 1945, all news services such as the Associated Press were granted as exclusive franchises. That Supreme Court ruling abolished their exclusiveness and made the services available to anyone who cared to pay for them. Naturally, anyone holding a franchise prior to this Supreme Court decision had a much more valuable property, but due to that ruling, found his franchise had depreciated to a considerable extent.

This amendment is to allow anyone who had such a franchise to legally depreciate same as a business loss.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to rule that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina is not in order.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, which is at the desk, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 5, line 8, to insert the following:

SEC. 6. Depreciation on buildings, roads, and dams.

(a) Section 270 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is hereby amended by adding before the word "casualty" the words "depreciation allowable under section 167 (b) (1) with respect to roads."

(b) This section shall be applicable only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1956.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I wish to explain that this is an amendment for the relief of a particular person. I had hoped to make it more general, because it involves general needs, but the Treasury Department offered objection to making it too broad. It relates to what has come to be called the hobby clause. It allows losses for a period of 4 years of $50,000 a year on a hobby, so called, but if the loss occurs for 5 years, it is concluded that it involves something more than a hobby.

The case which the amendment is intended to reach is this, Mr. President. There is in the State of Vermont a very estimable citizen who has directed his large means to increasing the attractiveness of the State as a tourist resort. He has built a road to the top of one of our mountains, Mount Equinox, at Manchester, Vt., and has placed at the top a hotel and restaurant. Increasingly during the 4 years in which this development has been in existence, more and more thousands of persons have driven up that road and paid the toll which is required for entrance upon it. It is one of the very great attractions of the State, not undertaken for personal profit, but undertaken for the sake of State development.

This man had expected that the loss would be less than $50,000 a year. Unfortunately, the severity of our winters has so affected the maintenace and the upkeep of the road that it has not been possible up to this time, and not possible in the coming year, to keep the loss below $50,000. In consequence of this, this public-spirited citizen will be held up for taxes on the losses of 5 years, because this year he will not succeed in keeping the losses below $50,000.

This is a matter of great interest to all the citizens of my State, not particularly to this man. If we can permit him, which seems a reasonable thing, to charge off depreciation on the highway which has to be rebuilt every year, this year's losses will fall within the $50,000.

It seems to be clear that from now on the chances of keeping within the $50,000 will get better each year, so that this amendment will safeguard the enterprise.

As I originally presented the amendment, Mr. President, it was for building roads and dams. When I first considered it, it covered depreciation in general. The Treasury Department called attention to the fact that race horses depreciate, and that under my suggestion as I first made it, a man with a stable of race horses might claim depreciation.

I have finally whittled the amendment down to the form in which it has been presented today, making it a particular amendment to fit a particular situation. I believe I have covered every objection the Treasury has offered. That being the case, I am asking the chairman of the Finance Committee whether he is willing to accept this amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment was considered by the Finance Committee very fully. It is true, the Senator from Vermont has made certain changes in it, but I think it would establish a very dangerous precedent, and we would be attempting to pass a general law for one specific purpose.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, that was not my intention, in the first place, but the Treasury Department has driven me to it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it opens up the whole question of how far we should go. It is with deep regret, and with great admiration for the Senator from Vermont, that I do not feel justified in accepting his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the Finance Committee does not accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed at the proper place in the bill, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 6. (a) Part I of subchapter Q of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to income attributable to several taxable years) is amended by redesignating section 1305 as section 1306 and by inserting after section 1304 the following new section:

"SEC. 1305. Breach of contract damages.

"(a) General rule: If an amount representing damages is received or accrued by a taxpayer during a taxable year as a result of an award in a civil action for breach of contract or breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship, then the tax attributable to the inclusion in gross income for the taxable year of that part of such amount which would have been received or accrued by the taxpayer in a prior taxable year or years but for the breach of contract, or breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship, shall not be greater than the aggregate of the increases in taxes which would have resulted had such part been included in gross income for such prior taxable year or years.

"(b) Credits and deductions allowed in computation of tax: The taxpayer in computing said tax shall be entitled to deduct all credits and deductions for depletion, depreciation, and other items to which he would have been entitled, had such income been received or accrued by the taxpayer in the year during which he would have received it, except for such breach of contract or for such breach of a fiduciary duty or relationship. The credits, deductions, or other items referred to in the prior sentence, attributable to property, shall be allowed only with respect to that part of the award which represents the taxpayer's share of income from the actual operation of such property.

"(c) Limitation: Subsection (a) shall not apply unless the amount representing damages is $3,000 or more."

(b) The table of sections for such part I is amended by striking out

"SEC. 1305. Rules applicable to this part."

and by inserting in lieu thereof

"SEC. 1305. Breach of contract damages.

"SEC. 1306. Rules applicable to this part."

(c) The amendments made by this act shall apply to taxable years ending after December 31, 1954, but only as to amounts received or accrued after such date as the result of awards made after such date.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, this amendment in the form of a bill, passed the House of Representatives too late to be reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate. The staff has gone into the amendment carefully and thoroughly, and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee is familiar with it. For the benefit of the Senate I should like to say that the amendment adds a new section to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 providing that a taxpayer who receives an award in a civil action for breach of contract, or breach of fiduciary duty or relationship, may spread the amount of the award over the period during which it would have been received if the breach of contract or duty had not occurred. The amount received from the breach of contract is included in gross income in the current year but if the tax would have been less had it been spread over the period in which the income would have been earned in the absence of the breach of contract or duty, the tax imposed in the current year attributable to this income is to be greater than the sum of these taxes which would have been imposed had the income been earned and reported for tax purposes in the prior years.

Mr. President, I understand from the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and the staff that the amendment is acceptable.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the amendment has been unanimously adopted by the House, with the approval of the staff I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas is agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I should like to call up my amendment which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 7. Section 613 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to percentage depletion) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(d) Change in rate: In the case of taxable year ending after December 31, 1953, which includes the effective date of a change in the rate of percentage depletion, the allowance for depletion for the taxable year shall be an amount equal to the sum of:

"(1) that portion of a tentative allowance computed without regard to such change in the rate of percentage depletion which the number of days in the taxable year before the effective date of the change bears to the total number of days in the entire taxable year; plus

"(2) that portion of a tentative allowance computed as if such change in the rate of percentage depletion were applicable for the entire taxable year, which the number of days in the taxable year on or after the effective date of such change bears to the total number of days in the entire taxable year.

"The rules prescribed in this subsection shall also apply for the taxable year for which a rate of percentage depletion first applies. For the purposes of this subsection, effective date of change means 'effective date of change' as defined in section 21 (c)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the chairman of the committee accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BYRD. I should like to hear an explanation of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the amendment was approved by the House. The amendment would prevent discrimination against fiscal year taxpayers with respect to depletion allowance.

When the Revenue Act of 1951 was passed, it extended depletion allowance to additional industries, but applied only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1950.

Taxpayers who filed returns on a calendar year basis got depletion allowance for a full year. Those whose fiscal year began on December 1 would be denied depletion allowance for 11 months. This discrimination was corrected by the passage of Public Law 594, July 21, 1952.

However, when the Revenue Code of 1954 was passed, the original wording of the 1951 act was used without modifying the law in accordance with Public Law 594.

The amendment would again correct this inequity.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Treasury approve the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Yes, the Treasury approves the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. I may say to the Senator that if the amendment were included in the bill and the House objected to it, it might mean the death of the whole bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. The House approved the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. But the House approved it without the authorization of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. It was approved by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, is the amendment the one which was offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania at a meeting of the Committee on Finance, and which was rejected?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. No; this is the first time it has been offered. I did not know anything about it until yesterday afternoon.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania think that the Committee on Ways and Means will accept the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. BYRD. If we include in the bill an amendment which is not agreed to by the House, the whole bill may be in danger.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. I realize that; but I have been talking with members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I am informed that the amendment is acceptable to them.

Mr. BYRD. It is not the same amendment which the Committee on Finance rejected; is it?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Oh, no.

Mr. CAPEHART. It has to do purely with the depletion allowance for fiscal year taxpayers.

Mr. SMATHERS. Would the amendment result in any loss to the Treasury?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. SMATHERS. In other words, all that is sought to be done is to shift to a fiscal year program.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. That is correct. It would not decrease or increase taxes; it would simply protect those whose fiscal year begins after a certain date.

Mr. SMATHERS. But in allowing a shift in fiscal year programs, would any loss be caused to the Treasury?

Mr. CAPEHART. No; the amendment would simply place such persons on the same basis as persons who use the calendar year for their fiscal operations.

Mr. BYRD. Has the Senator from Pennsylvania submitted his amendment to the Treasury; and does the Treasury approve it?

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Yes. The omission of this provision was an oversight when the act of 1954 was passed. The law was corrected in 1952; but when the act of 1954 was written, Congress overlooked the inclusion of this provision.

I have just been informed that the House Committee on Ways and Means waived their right to consider the amendment, that it was then considered by the Committee on Rules, and passed the House unanimously.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia having accepted the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 6. (a) Section 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to rules and regulations) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Unpublished ruling: Where a taxpayer files a return in accord with an unpublished ruling issued to another taxpayer in a similar situation and the ruling had not been revoked prior to the time the return was filed, such taxpayer shall be treated as if the unpublished ruling had been issued to him."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall be effective as if enacted as an original part of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to correct an obvious injustice to some taxpayers.

The Internal Revenue Service has been allowing some taxpayers to deduct the interest paid on money borrowed to purchase annuities prior to 1954 and, for no rhyme or reason, so far as I can see, has not been allowing it to others.

It seems that those who are enjoying the exemption asked for and received favorable rulings from the Internal Revenue Service saying the deduction was proper. Other persons reading in the newspapers of these rulings quite naturally assumed the ruling represented the policy of the Government and governed themselves accordingly. The Internal Revenue Service is holding, however, that unless specific rulings have been received by each and every taxpayer in the same situation, he must pay the tax.

My amendment does not go to the merits or demerits of allowing the deduction. Such deductions have been discontinued. But it does provide that all taxpayers shall be treated alike in the period when the allowances were allowed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BYRD. I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, I call up my amendment to H. R. 9083, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. FREAR'S amendment is as follows:

At the proper place, insert the following:

"SEC. —. That (a) notwithstanding sections 23 (1) and 113 (b) (1) (B) and (C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, and sections 167 and 1016 (a) (2) and (3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, any taxpayer who, with the consent of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, did, during the period January 1, 1941, to January 1, 1956, change from the 'retirement' to the 'straight line' method of computing the annual depreciation allowance with respect to certain kinds and classes of property, may, in computing the adjusted basis of such property, elect (in the manner prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) to determine the adjustments for depreciation sustained prior to March 1, 1913, and depreciation 'allowed or allowable' after February 28, 1913, and prior to January 1, 1956, as hereinafter provided. Such election shall be effective only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1955.

"(b) If the taxpayer elects as provided in subparagraph (a) above, then in determining the adjusted basis of all property of the kinds and classes subject to the change from the 'retirement' to the 'straight line' method of computing the annual depreciation allowance, the following adjustments shall be made, in lieu of the adjustments provided in section 1016 (a) (2) and (3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, in respect of all periods prior to the effective date of the election:

"(1) For depreciation sustained prior to March 1, 1913, on those assets (of the kinds and classes subject to the change from the 'retirement' to 'straight line' method of computing the annual depreciation allowance) owned by the taxpayer (or if a substituted basis is used, by the taxpayer's transferor, donor, or grantor) on March 1, 1913, for which the taxpayer claims (or claimed) as basis cost (or if a substituted basis is used, the transferor's, donor's, or grantor's cost) and which were—

"(i) retired prior to the date the taxpayer changed from the 'retirement' to the 'straight line' method of computing the annual depreciation allowance and, in determining the annual depreciation allowance (A) were included at their full cost without adjustment for depreciation sustained prior (by reason of the deductions so allowed) in deductions in computing the taxpayer's taxable income and, (C) with respect to any year ending after January 1, 1930, resulted (by reason of the deductions so allowed) in a reduction of the taxpayer's taxes under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or any priar income, war profits, or excess-profits tax laws; or

"(ii) on hand when the taxpayer changed from the 'retirement' to the 'straight line' method of computing the annual depreciation allowance, except where subparagraph (b) (2) is applicable.

The depreciation so determined shall be allocated (in the manner prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) among all property of a like kind or class on hand on the first day of the first taxable year for which the election is effective.

"(2) For the amount of the reserve prescribed by the Commissioner under terms and conditions set forth at the time he consented to the taxpayer's change to the 'straight line' method which is applicable to assets disposed of by sale, casualty, or 'abnormal' retirement (for which the taxpayer was permitted, because of special obsolescence, a deduction for Federal income tax purposes) after the date of the taxpayer's change to the 'straight line' method and prior to the effective date of the election under this statute.

"(3) For depreciation properly allowable prior to January 1, 1956, under terms and conditions prescribed by the Commissioner at the time he consented to the taxpayer's change in the method of computation of his annual depreciation allowance.

"(c) If the taxpayer elects as provided in subparagraph (a) above, then in determining the adjusted basis of all property of the kinds and classes subject to the change from the 'retirement' to the 'straight line' method of computing the annual depreciation allowance, during the taxable years between the date of such change and the effective date of the election, and during that period only, the following adjustments shall be made (except for determining adjusted basis for the purpose of section 437 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939) in lieu of the adjustments provided in section 113 (b) (1) (B) and (C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 and section 1016 (a) (2) and (3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954:

"(1) For the amount of the reserve prescribed by the Commissioner under terms and conditions set forth at the time he consented to the taxpayer's change to the 'straight-line' method as applicable to such assets at the time of the change to the 'straight-line' method, and,

"(2) For the depreciation properly allowable under the terms and conditions set forth by the Commissioner at the time he consented to the taxpayer's change to the 'straight-line' method.

"(d) If the taxpayer elects as provided in subparagraph (a) above, then, in determining equity invested capital under sections 458 and 714 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, accumulated earnings and profits as of the date of the change to the 'straight-line' method (and for each year thereafter), shall be reduced by the depreciation sustained prior to March 1, 1913, as computed under subsection (b) (1) (ii) above; in the determination of the adjusted basis of assets for the purpose of section 437 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 (and in addition to any other adjustments required by the Internal Revenue Code of 1939), the basis shall be reduced by depreciation sustained prior to March 1, 1913 (as computed under subsection (b) above), together with any depreciation properly allowable under subsection (c) (2) above for any period prior to the year for which the excess profits credit is being computed.

"(e) The election provided in this section may also be made by any corporation which acquired property, in a transaction described in section 373 (a) or in section 112 (b) (9) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, from a corporation which would have been entitled to elect under subsection (a) if its existence had not been terminated; and an election made by such an acquiring corporation shall be given effect as if the acquiring corporation were the same corporation as the corporation whose property was acquired.

"SEC. —. (a) Section 373 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph reading as follows:

"'(3) Adjustment for property acquired from "retirement" method corporations: In a transaction described in subparagraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, if the corporation whose property was acquired used, at the date of transfer, the "retirement" method of computing the annual depreciation allowance with respect to any kinds and classes of property, and if the acquiring corporation adopts or adopted with respect to any of those kinds and classes of property a method of computing the annual depreciation allowance other than the retirement method, then the basis of all property of those kinds and classes which was transferred and with respect to which the acquiring corporation adopts or adopted a method of computing the annual depreciation allowance other than the retirement method shall (in lieu of the adjustment required by subsection 1016 (a) (3) (A) of this subtitle) be reduced by depreciation sustained prior to March 1, 1913, with respect to all property of those kinds and classes which was either—

"'(A) retired prior to the date of transfer and which, in determining the annual depreciation allowance under this subtitle or prior income tax laws, (i) was included at full cost without any reduction for depreciation sustained prior to March 1, 1913, and (ii) was allowed as a deduction in computing taxable income, and, (iii) with respect to any year ending after January 1, 1930, resulted (by reason of the deductions so allowed) in a reduction for any taxable year of the taxes of the corporation whose property was acquired, under this subtitle, or prior income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax laws, or,

"'(B) on hand at the date of transfer to the acquiring corporation.

"'The depreciation so determined shall be allocated (in the manner prescribed by the Secretary or his Delegate) among all property of a like kind and class received from the corporation whose property was acquired.'

"(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1955."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, my amendment is just and equitable to all concerned. The Treasury, I understand, has agreed with the taxpayers who would be affected and with the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. In fact, it is my understanding that the Treasury actually drew up the phraseology of the proposed amendment. The bill is designed to alleviate the situation in the case of taxpayers who, during the period between 1941 and 1955, changed from the "retirement" to the "straight-line" method of accounting for depreciation. The affected taxpayers will be allowed substantially the same amount of deductions in the aggregate which would be allowed taxpayers who had at all times used the "straight-line" method.

For a great many years prior to 1941 almost all railroads employed the so-called retirement method of accounting for depreciation on certain roadway property in accordance with the accounting regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The same method of accounting was followed for tax purposes.

In 1942 the Interstate Commission ordered class I railroads—that is, those having a gross revenue of more than $1 million per year—to change, not later than January 1, 1943, from the "retirement" to the "straight-line" method of accounting for depreciation on certain roadway property. This change occurred during World War II, when property was required for wartime transportation needs and when it was not in the national interest to permit the retirement of any part of the property.

For these and other compelling reasons, the railroads applied to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for permission to make the change ordered by the ICC for tax purposes as well. The Commissioner decreed that only 70 percent of the cost of the property involved could be taken as depreciation, since some of the property had been owned prior to 1913, and any depreciation that would have been taken, if the property was subject to "straight-line" depreciation from the time of its acquisition, would not be available as a tax deductible item, because there was no Federal income tax up to that time.

Subsequent litigation brought by the taxpaying railroads, while not entirely settling the matter, tends to give the railroads involved in the litigation substantially more than would the amendment here proposed. In some cases it would allow the railroads to go back to 1943, open up their returns for those excess profit tax years, and receive refunds which would then be subject to the payment of 6 percent interest by the Treasury until the present.

This amendment would solve the difficulty, by giving the taxpaying railroads an opportunity to charge off a total of about 90 percent of the cost of the property for years beginning after December 31, 1955. This 90 percent would, of course, be spread over a proper future period of depreciation.

I am advised by the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation that the adoption of this amendment would prevent the possibility of a very substantial refund for past years and would grant the relief, which the courts have indicated is proper, over a period of years in the future.

I may also say that the Finance Committee has not held hearings on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia accept the amendment?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is a very important amendment. It may involve as much as $500 million. It was considered by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. No decision was reached. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that the proper procedure would be to offer the amendment at the next session and have hearings held on it. I regret to say, inasmuch as I regard the Senator from Delaware as one of the most able members of the committee, that I cannot accept an amendment of such importance without full committee consideration.

Mr. FREAR. I understand it would be asking a great deal of the chairman of the committee to accept the amendment, since no hearings have been held on it; but the Senator from Virginia, like the junior Senator from Delaware, is very conservative when it comes to matters of Government expenditures. I wanted to try to save the Government the 6-percent cost on any litigation in the future. If the chairman insists on not accepting the amendment——

Mr. BYRD. I would not want to take the responsibility of accepting it.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. FREAR. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. I am very much in sympathy with the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Delaware; in fact, I should be glad to be a cosponsor of it. What I am about to say to the chairman of the committee will not be said as a member of the committee, but as a Senator. I feel there is so much involved that it ought to have further consideration, although I am very much in favor of the amendment he has suggested.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am unable to accept the amendment.

Mr. FREAR. If the chairman of the committee is unable to accept the amendment, I withdraw it, without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware withdraws his amendment.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be received and printed in the RECORD, without being stated by the clerk, and that I may explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the amendment not be read, but be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment offered by Mr. CARLSON is as follows:

Add a new section as follows:

"That (a) part III of subchapter B of chapter I of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to items specifically excluded from gross income) is amended by renumbering section 121 and 122, and by inserting after section 120 a new section as follows:

"'Sec. 121. Gain from condemnation by United States of real property held by an individual who has attained the age of 60.

"'(a) General rule: In the case of an individual, gross income does not include gain from the condemnation by the United States, or from the sale to the United States under threat or imminence of condemnation, of real property held by the taxpayer for more than 6 months, if—

"'(1) such real property is taken by the United States, or such sale occurs, after December 31, 1955, and

"'(2) the taxpayer has attained the age of 60 years before the close of the taxable year in which such property is taken or such sale occurs.

"'(b) Exception. This section shall not apply to an individual who is engaged in the trade or business of buying or selling real property.

"'(c) Age test in case of real property held jointly by husband and wife: In the case of real property held by a husband and wife as joint tenants, or as tenants by the entirety, the age requirement contained in subsection (a) (2) shall be treated as having been met by both the husband and wife, if it is met by the spouse who, during their married life, has received the larger aggregate earned income. For purposes of this subsection, the term "earned income" has the meaning assigned to such term in section 911 (b), except that such term does not include any amount received as a pension or annuity.

"'(d) Cross reference:

"'For special treatment of gain from condemnation by the United States, or sale under threat or imminence thereof, of real property, see section 1203.'

"(b) The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter I of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out

"'SEC. 121. Cross reference to other acts.' and inserting in lieu thereof

"'Sec. 121. Gain from condemnation by United States of real property held by an individual who has attained the age of 60.

"'SEC. 122. Cross references to other acts.'

"SEC. 2 (a) Part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to treatment of capital gains) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section as follows:

"'SEC. 1203. Real property acquired by United States through condemnation.

"'(a) General rule: If for any taxable year the taxpayer has a section 1203 gain, then with respect only to an amount equal to the amount of the section 1203 gain, the rate of tax under section 1201 (b) (2) shall be 10 percent (in lieu of 25 percent).

"'(b) Definition of section 1203 gain: For purposes of this section the term "section 1203 gain" means any gain from the condemnation by the United States, or from the sale to the United States under threat or imminence of condemnation, of real property held by the taxpayer for more than 6 months.

"'(c) Rules for application of section:

"'(1) In general: This section shall apply only if—

"'(A) the taxpayer has gain from the condemnation by the United States, or from the sale to the United States under threat or imminence of condemnation, of real property held by him for more than 6 months, which is required to be taken into account in computing his taxable income for the taxable year;

"'(B) such property is taken by the United States, or such sale occurs, after December 31, 1955;

"'(C) for such taxable year the net long-term capital gain of the taxpayer exceeds his net short-term capital loss;

"'(D) the taxpayer is not engaged in the trade or business of buying or selling real property; and

"'(E) the taxpayer elects (at such time and in such manner as the Secretary or his delegate shall by regulations prescribe) to have the special treatment provided by this section apply to such gain.

"'(2) Amount of gain: The amount of section 1203 gain for any taxable year shall be whichever of the following is the lesser:

"'(A) the amount of the gain recognized for the taxable year from the condemnation or sale of real property to which this section applies; or

"'(B) the excess of the net long-term capital gain over the net short-term capital loss.

"'(3) Adjustments in computations with respect to alternate tax: For purposes of the computation under section 1201 (b) (2), proper adjustment in the amount taken into account shall be made for any amount for which special treatment is provided by this section.

"'(b) Cross reference—

"'For exclusion from gross income of gain from condemnation by the United States, or sale under threat or imminence thereof, of real property of a taxpayer who has attained 60 years of age, see section 121.'

"(b) The table of sections for part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof:

"'SEC. 1203. Real property acquired by United States through condemnation.'

"SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (f) of section 1033 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to involuntary conversions) is amended by renumbering paragraphs (1) and (2) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively, and by inserting before paragraph (3) the following:

"'(1) For exclusion from gross income of gain from condemnation by the United States, or sale under threat or imminence thereof, of real property of a taxpayer who has attained 60 years of age, see section 121.

"'(2) For special treatment of gain from condemnation by the United States, or sale under threat or imminence thereof, of real property, see section 1203.'

"(b) Section 1034 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to sale or exchange of residence) is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"'(k) Cross references:

"'(1) For exclusion from gross income of gain from condemnation by the United States, or sale under threat or imminence thereof, of real property of a taxpayer who has attained 60 years of age, see section 121.

"'(2) For special treatment of gain from condemnation by the United States, or sale under threat or imminence thereof, of real property, see section 1203.'

"SEC. 4. The amendments made by this act shall apply only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1955."

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, the amendment I have proposed would amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 so as to exempt from taxation the amount gained as a result of condemnation by the United States of real property held by persons 60 years of age or over, and providing special treatment for such gains in cases where real property is held by persons under 60 years of age.

The amendment has been discussed with the chairman of the Finance Committee. It has been considered by the committee. I also offered the amendment in March of this year. I did so for a very definite reason. There is a provision of law respecting involuntary conversion of real property. That is, if a citizen is forced to sell his property because of the construction of a Federal project, he is given 12 months to invest the proceeds of the sale in a similar farm or business. Nevertheless, great anguish and hardship are caused for persons who are forced to leave their property because of construction of a reservoir, for example. Many such persons have lived on their farms for a lifetime, and have reached the age of 60, 70, or 75. They have a large equity in the land, but it was purchased at a time when the cost of the land was very low. The capital gains tax on such property is very high. In order to protect themselves from the 25 percent capital gains tax, they must buy another farm in another locality. I think it is most unfair.

I have discussed the amendment with the chairman of the committee. The amendment would eliminate the capital gains tax in the case of persons who are forced to sell their property as the result of the construction of a Federal project, and who are 60 years of age or over. In my opinion, there is no justification for requiring such people to take advantage of our involuntary transfer tax statute in order to protect their holdings, or requiring them to buy homes or farms or businesses in order to save the 25 percent capital gains tax. It simply is not normal for persons of that age to start farming operations in another community.

My proposal would also reduce the capital gains tax for such persons from 25 percent to 10 percent where the property owner has not attained the age of 60.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia accept the amendment?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendment was considered by the Finance Committee. While it was not rejected, it was not approved. I have a good deal of sympathy for certain features of the amendment. I feel it would be unwise at this stage to accept it and have it go to conference, because the House might object to it. If the House objected to it, it might imperil the passage of the entire bill.

Mr. CARLSON. I wonder if the Senator will give us some assurance that we may take up the matter next January?

Mr. BYRD. I certainly give the Senator from Kansas, who is one of the most able members of the committee, full assurance that we shall take the matter up when we convene next January, and go into it very fully, and I hope arrive at a satisfactory solution.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, under the circumstances, I withdraw my amendment.

AMORTIZATION OF GRAIN-STORAGE FACILITIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9083) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the period for amortization of grain-storage facilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Are there further amendments to be proposed to the committee amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended. The committee amendment is a substitute for the text of the bill.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H. R. 9083) was passed.

The title was amended, so as to read: "An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the period within which grain-storage facilities may be constructed in order to qualify for rapid amortization, and for other purposes."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, request a conference thereon with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. I may say that it is understood that they will be the regular conferees on behalf of the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BYRD, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. KERR, Mr. MILLIKIN, and Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the 84th Congress is drawing to a close, and once more, regrettably, we have failed to act on civil-rights legislation.

In my judgment, the bill approved by the House of Representatives, by a vote of 279 to 126 is a reasonable bill. It is a good start toward assuring justice for all Americans, regardless of race, creed, or color.

I am prepared to vote on this bill now, in the Senate Judiciary Committee and on the Senate floor, and indeed, have been prepared and eager to vote for a long time.

It is a source of regret to me that the present majority on both the committee and on the floor has not brought it up.

We are all aware, of course, of the fact that the hour is so late in this session as to make almost impossible the chance to bring this bill up.

I had hoped that the issue could come up early in the Congress, so as to avoid precisely the sort of last-minute logjam which we are now encountering.

We all know that it would probably take nothing short of a miracle to revive the Civil Rights bill, but I am still hoping that such a miracle can come to pass.

Like my colleagues, I have received a telegram from a number of leading trade unions and other national organizations, urging action on this subject. I have been pleased to hear from my own State, as well—from many Wisconsinites deeply interested in the problem.

I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point a supplementary statement which I have prepared on the civil-rights subject. I ask that it be preceded by the text of a wire from the leading groups to which I have referred. Their spokesmen have urged that the Senate meet head-on this problem, by voting procedurally to take it up, rather than to allow the rules to snarl us in redtape and prevent action on this subject.

There being no objection, the telegram and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 25, 1956.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of our organizations we urge that the Senate take up the House-passed civil-rights bill in this session. Under circumstances prevailing in the Senate, votes on procedural motions to bring up the bill are votes on civil rights.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

I have long been deeply interested in the promotion of civil liberties.

Back in the 80th Congress in 1947 and 1948, when I was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, we succeeded in reporting out an antilynching bill to the floor of the Senate. I was proud of this effort which overcame a good deal of opposition inside the committee.

Unfortunately, we could not thereafter achieve passage of the bill in the full Senate.

FOUR KEY POINTS IN PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM

Then, from the very start of the present Congress, I have been deeply interested in the President's program on civil rights. In the main, it has been keyed to four points:

1. Creation of a Federal commission to study and evaluate civil rights and to make reports periodically to Congress and to the President. This commission—which could prove extremely helpful—would possess subpena and other powers. This would enable the Members to gather factual information necessary to base a sound program in the future.

2. Creation, in the Department of Justice, of a new and much needed division devoted exclusively to the civil-rights field.

As we are well aware, at present, this very important legal field is relegated, in the Department of Justice, to a mere section. And it has been the feeling of the President, in which I concur, that its extreme importance requires that it have full status in that Department.

3. Necessary creation, in the Department of Justice, of a new Assistant Attorney General to head up this division on civil rights.

4. The amending of the existing civil-rights statutes now on the law books so as to provide civil remedies in a field which has been exclusively confined to criminal sanctions.

I believe that this program of the President has been well thought out. If it is enacted, we will have launched our ship upon the calm seas of study, thought and rational action.

The President's program is a modest program. It is not a cure-all. It will not solve difficult racial relations overnight. But it provides an indispensable first stage.

REASONS FOR THE FOUR PROVISIONS

Certainly it is important that we have the necessary personnel and facilities to enable a proper appraisal in this field—a subject in which there is such strong emotion in both the North and the South.

It has always been my thought that the best legislation is that which is founded upon the best research. The creation of the proposed Commission would, therefore, provide us the background that is necessary for the comprehensive protection of civil liberties in this country.

There is nothing in this Commission in its appraisal of factual material, which should be objected to by any calm thinking person. It would simply be a fact-finding organization. It would have the concurrent duty of making recommendations to the President and the Congress. Along this line, no reasonable person should object to increasing the appropriate facilities in the Department of Justice.

Finally, in this connection, I call attention to the fact that this modest program provides no criminal sanctions. That means no increase in penalties and no reduction of States' rights. It just permits the Department of Justice to do the job that it is charged with doing under existing law.

Perhaps the most important new feature in the civil-rights field which is contained in the President's program, is the setting up of civil remedies as part of the existing civil rights statutes.

This is a change in the philosophy of approach to this field. Heretofore, it has been considered by those who wanted quick action, that a criminal approach was the best approach. This immediately raised the bugaboo of alleged invading of States rights and it has caused a chronic controversy in this field. The Southern States have utterly opposed what they construed as "interfering in their own police power under the Constitution."

By contrast, the proposed new approach is not to carry criminal penalties, not to develop a vast new addition to the Federal Criminal Code—which would be bitterly opposed, but rather to try the approach of legal action under the civil law.

The Attorney General of the United States had testified before our Judiciary Committee that he preferred the civil approach to the criminal approach, and that is why it is in the President's program.

WISCONSIN STATUTE FOR NONDISCRIMINATION

Now, let me point out that in my State of Wisconsin, we have a law prohibiting discrimination against qualified persons by reason of their race, creed, color, national origin or ancestry.

Wisconsin also provides that its schools shall not exclude any person on account of his religion, nationality and color. We provide in section 40.51 that "no separate school or department shall be kept."

In other words, we don't believe in segregation. We welcomed the United States Supreme Court decision for desegregation. That decision is now the law of the land, and it must be carried out expeditiously.

WISCONSIN'S TRADITION OF FAIRNESS

Our State has a long tradition of fairness. We believe in judging each one on his own merit, not on the irrelevant base of the color of his skin or the church or the temple in which he worships.

Recently, the State of Louisiana, unfortunately, passed a law banning all nonsegregated athletic contests.

As a result, the University of Wisconsin, holding fast to the principle of nonsegregation, felt that it had no alternative but to cancel our proposed football contest with Louisiana. We did not and do not intend to leave at home a Wisconsin Negro player simply because the color of his skin is regarded as a bar in Baton Rouge.

A good football player, a good baseball player on the Milwaukee Braves or any other team; a good boxer or track or field man or any other athlete is entitled to be judged as a man, not to be penalized because of his ancestry.

When Negro boys died in battle in the uniform of our land—in the Argonne or at Iwo

Jima or at Tagu, they died as Americans. Why should anyone, now or ever, forget their sacrifice and deny elementary justice to people of this or any other race?

Why should a Negro child grow up under the terrible cloud of being considered as a "second class citizen?"

Why should America be untrue to its own traditions of the pursuit of happiness by one and all?

EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY FOR SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, as I have said on many occasions, among others during an address I delivered before the retail gasoline dealers at their convention at Wausau, Wis., on June 25 of this year, I am heartily in favor of H. R. 1840 (S. 11) to amend the Robinson-Patman Act so as to give greater equality of opportunity to small business. These provisions have just been added to H. R. 9424.

I favor the antimerger provisions of this bill, but I am even more enthusiastic about the antiprice discrimination provisions which have been added to it.

H. R. 1840 was passed by the House by a vote, as I recall it, of 393 to 3. Hearings had been held in the House, but the Senate Antitrust Subcommittee also conducted comprehensive hearings. It is the American way to give all sides a fair opportunity to present their arguments. I believe all had a full and fair opportunity to be heard. Their testimony was fully considered.

The evidence confirmed me in my belief that the equality of opportunity provisions are sound and are needed to save small business.

What the bill would do to help the difficult situation in which small business finds itself is, to put it simply, this:

First. The Robinson-Patman Act was passed to outlaw price discrimination.

Second. We are accustomed to a one-price system when we go into a department store or a grocery store to buy at retail. The store does not offer me one price and my neighbor a different price. The act intended that big corporations in dealing with their wholesalers and retailers should act in a similar way, having in mind differences in costs and transportation rates and service rendered in return by the buyer.

Third. In 1951, the United States Supreme Court in the so-called Detroit Standard case—Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission ((1951) 340 U. S. 231)—decided, in a prosecution for price discrimination, that it was a complete and final defense to prove that defendant had lowered his price to meet the legal price of a competitor, and had done so in good faith. The Supreme Court decided that this was an absolute and final defense, although it had been thought by the Government, on the basis of the legislative history, and the statutory language of the act, that such proof merely shifted back to the Government the burden of going ahead, and the burden of final proof that the defendant's action had also tended substantially to lessen competition. The Court's decision blocked the Government from going ahead to prove that defendant had hurt the competitive system.

Fourth. Up to that time, the Robinson-Patman Act had been pretty effective and the small people had not found it too difficult to do business. Since that decision, more and more small retailers have found themselves in serious trouble as a result of price discrimination by large interstate concerns who are moving into the territory of the small concerns. The pattern of this big-business attack often seems to be that the big concern takes advantage of a lowered price to make a similar price cut, and then extends it broadly so that there is such a price war that the small-business store is badly hurt or driven out of existence. Of course, if the Government could prove that these price wars were started through collusion, the law in its present state, even with the Supreme Court decisions, would permit prosecution. However, such collusion is very hard to prove in a court case.

Fifth. Under these circumstances, the proposed bill, which has been supported by hundreds of small people in Wisconsin and throughout the country, in both telegrams and letters to me, I believe, would restore the status quo ante, as it existed prior to the Supreme Court case. Now, meeting a competitor's price is a complete defense. However, this bill would permit the Government to go ahead and try to prove, if it could, that meeting the competitor's price had set off such a substantial price war as to injure or destroy enough competitive business to satisfy a court that the defendant's action had substantially lessened competition. This is a needed protection for the small fellow. We certainly do not want America to be just a series of assembly lines, with workmen sitting alongside doing routine tasks as the line of machinery or goods passes by. I hope that I shall never see this happen. And I believe this bill will help to delay, if not prevent, any such result. The independent is essential to the strength of the American way of life.

Sixth. It has been made clear, I believe, in the course of the subcommittee hearing, that H. R. 1840 would not outlaw absorption of freight costs unless it was part of a discriminatory pricing practice, which would be illegal anyway. We have added a rider to make this clear. I believe it has also been made clear that a small man meeting a price of his next-door neighbor would not be substantially lessening competition, even though he might take business away from his immediate competitor. As in so many antitrust cases, the question of how many people have to be hurt before a violation occurs, is a question of degree, which it is impossible to specify by statute in advance. American pricing policies and American competitive practices are, by the very nature of our way of life, fluid and complex. Any rigid, overly specific statute dealing with them would freeze their flexibility unwisely. The best antitrust law is fluid and adaptable to a myriad of complex and differing situations.

I believe this bill meets these standards and helps our American way of life, and I hope we shall all promptly consider it on the floor and help to get it passed.

The premerger notification provisions of the bill would give the Government, which is charged with protecting the people's interests, a prior "look-see" before big companies combine to become giants, before growing monopoly stalks the land. We have written in exemptions for innocuous situations. We have done everything to make the notification process simple. But we cannot permit combines to grow by devious devices unknown to the public.

I have worked for this bill. I have fought for this bill. I have insisted it be reported out of committee. I urge its adoption.

FAILURE OF CONGRESS TO PASS BILLS RELATING TO CERTAIN WAR VETERANS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I desire to take this opportunity to say it is too bad that Congress is about to adjourn without taking action on a House bill for the relief of World War I veterans and a House bill providing for a small increase in compensation for disabled veterans.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement regarding the proposed legislation for veterans which passed the House and is now before the Senate Finance Committee. Up to this date the various governmental departments have not responded to the request of the committee for their opinion either for or against this proposed legislation. Very extensive hearings would be required, because we have a number of requests to be heard either for or against these bills. The Finance Committee never acts until first it receives from the Treasury Department and the other departments concerned reports as to whether they approve or disapprove of the proposed legislation.

As chairman of the Finance Committee, I wish to state that there has been no effort to suppress or prevent consideration of the bill; but we cannot proceed to consider it until we have received the proper reports.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I may state that the distinguished chairman of the committee went into that matter very fully on yesterday. However, I wished to make a statement regarding the matter because I think the committee will be taking up the measure next January.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954 TO ENCOURAGE SMALL-BUSINESS CONCERNS TO ENGAGE IN FOREIGN TRADE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in view of the interest shown by small business in Senate bill 3672, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and to encourage small-business concerns to engage in foreign trade—which bill is before the Senate Finance Committee—I wish to state for the RECORD that the departmental reports received by the committee from the Small Business Administration, the Export-Import Bank, and the Treasury Department, indicate that some study should be given to the Western Hemisphere Trade Act, which Senate bill 3672 would amend. I have instructed the staff of the Finance Committee to compile the necessary information and data for a committee study early in the next session of the Congress.

SAFETY DEVICES ON HOUSEHOLD REFRIGERATORS SHIPPED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2747, House bill 11969.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11969) to require certain safety devices on household refrigerators shipped in interstate commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, in lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to strike out "ninety days" and to insert in lieu thereof "one year."

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Indiana will not insist on having action taken on the amendment at this time; there are one or two other matters to be brought up first.

Mr. CAPEHART. I agree; but the amendment will be the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the pending question will be on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

EXTENSION OF A CERTAIN LEASE OF A TRACT OF LAND IN THE RANGE LIVESTOCK EXPERIMENT STATION, MONTANA

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 4058.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4058) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. for the term of 10 years a lease of a tract of land in the United States Department of Agriculture Range Livestock Experiment Station, in the State of Montana, and for a right-of-way to said tract, for the removal of gravel and ballast material, executed under authority of the act of Congress approved June 26, 1946, which was, on page 2, line 11, after the word "of", insert "not less than."

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Let me ask what the amendment is.

Mr. ELLENDER. The House has amended the bill so as to provide that the royalty shall be "not less than" 1 percent, instead of the Senate provision of 1 percent.

I have discussed the matter with the author of the bill, and he is satisfied with the House amendment. The royalty is 1 cent a yard for the material excavated or removed by the railroad. Since the words "not less than" are used in the House amendment, the royalty could be raised to more than 1 percent—for instance, to 2 percent, or even to a larger percentage, if that were desired; under that provision, the percentage could be fixed at whatever amount the Department of Agriculture and the railroad company agreed upon.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Do I correctly understand that the amendment has the unanimous approval of the committee?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. President, I have moved that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to.

INCREASED INDUSTRIAL USES OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS TO REDUCE SURPLUSES

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement I have prepared on Senate bill 3503, a bill to provide for a scientific study and research program for the purpose of developing increased and additional industrial uses of agricultural products so as to reduce surpluses of such products and to increase the income of farmers, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CAPEHART

In the last hours of the 2d session of the 84th Congress it has become apparent that while much progress has been made and great support has been forthcoming for S. 3503, I recognize the fact that there is not now sufficient time for final action on the bill which I consider to be the only solution to the establishment of a permanently sound and prosperous farm economy in America.

I am gratified by the progress which has been made and the tremendous support which has been rallied for this bill in the Senate and for companion bills in the House of Representatives.

I am grateful to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CLEMENTS], for conducting hearings on the bill. I am grateful to a number of my Indiana colleagues in the House of Representatives who have introduced companion bills and who have filed statements with the House of Representatives Committee on Agriculture in support of the plan.

I want to express my gratitude also to the many farmers, farm organizations, scientists, economists, editors, heads of schools of agriculture, and experts on the staff of the Department of Agriculture for the support they have given to this permanent answer to what we commonly call the farm problem.

So tremendous has been their support and so complete is the record on this bill that I am certain the next session of the Congress will write it into law. This just has to be the answer to the farm problem.

The bill to which I refer of course is that seeking the establishment of a $100 million a year crash program of research and development to discover new industrial uses for every day products on the farm. For myself and 33 other Senators who joined as cosponsors I introduced this bill on March 21 and have been working tirelessly for its passage ever since. I have pointed out to the Senate before and I hope to have the opportunity to do so many times again that such a program, even on the basis of the technical knowledge already developed, would insure a market of fair and profitable prices for everything which can be produced from the soil of America's farms. With such a program we would never again know and feel the price depressing effects of the surpluses which have accumulated because our American farmers produced so much more than could be consumed in existing markets.

Now we in this Congress have enacted farm legislation to curtail for the moment the production of our farms to try to strike an even balance between production and consumption. But I believe we all recognize that this is simply a necessary expedient of the moment and that it cannot be the permanent answer to a prosperous farm economy.

No segment of our citizenry has done a finer production job than the American farmer. He was asked to do it and he did it. Likewise, the Federal Government has done an admirable and necessary job in helping the American farmer to produce more by the expenditures of vast sums of money in the development of new production methods over the years. But at the same time, Mr. President, I believe we all recognize that the Government has not kept pace with the situation by providing funds—just as necessary—to develop new uses and new markets for the things the farmer has produced. If we are to solve the surplus problem—get rid of existing surpluses and assure that they never again will accumulate—we must approve the program outlined in S. 3503 and its companion bills in the House of Representatives.

I pledge to you that if I am reelected to the Senate in November, I will continue with the help of all those who support such a plan, to advocate the adoption of the program as soon as possible. This I must do. I recognize that our national economy cannot remain sound and strong unless our farm economy also remains sound and strong.

I like to believe that most of my actions in the Congress are devoted to that legislation which will create jobs. To maintain a sound economy we must keep our people working. We must assure an economic situation in which there will be jobs because jobs make trade and trade makes jobs and the combination of the two will forever assure a healthy and prosperous economy and healthy, happy and prosperous people.

S. 3503 would do just that.

THE WATCH INDUSTRY AND PRECISION SKILLS

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, the Wall Street Journal of July 23 carried an article which I believe to be of broad interest to the Senate. Therefore, I ask permission to have it printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The article reports on the publication on July 18 of Senate Report No. 2629, unanimously adopted by the Subcommittee on Foreign Economic Policy, of the Joint Economic Committee, and entitled "Defense Essentiality and Foreign Economic Policy—Case Study: Watch Industry and Precision Skills."

This is a most timely report. Within the next few weeks, the President will be reviewing the effects of the July 1954 increase of 50 percent in watch tariffs, in accordance with provisions of the Tariff Act which require such a reexamination 2 years after the "escape clause" is invoked. The underlying reason for the 1954 decision to boost tariffs, one will recall, was that the skills of the domestic watch industry were deemed essential to national defense. The Joint Economic Committee's report points out with compelling logic, and after a careful analysis of the facts, that, in general, import restrictions are prejudicial to our security because they impair the strength and security of the free world. After a thorough review of the watch case, the committee concluded that the consideration of defense essentiality did not warrant using an increase in the tariff and other restrictive devices to protect the domestic watch industry, for this would impose a burden on other industries and consumers. The report notes that:

The burden on other industries and on the trade of the free world will detract from national security.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the approach by the executive branch to the problem of examining defense essentiality of any industry must be of the most serious and soul-searching variety. In this connection, I should like to cite one of the important series of conclusions and recommendations of the committee which speaks clearly and logically about this problem.

In the very limited number of cases where the balanced assessment of all factors reveals a few industries need special treatment in the name of defense and if these are industries whose manipulation would have international repercussions, the alternative means to aid these industries should be weighed carefully in each individual case.

(a) Tariff increases, direct and indirect, should be eschewed for the burden they throw on other industries, on consumers, and on foreign trade essential to our system of world alliances, and for the reduced incentive to the domestic industry to increase its efficiency or improve its products.

(b) Quotas have the same disadvantages as tariffs plus the additional difficulties of rigidity in application and favoritism in assigning shares.

(c) Subsidies have many of the same effects as tariffs but are likely to throw a smaller burden on consumers and to require budget controls to provide for an annual review of their costs. This latter feature is a useful one.

(d) Stockpiling of durable items not subject to obsolescence but difficult to manufacture or to import in time of war represents a solution to some situations. But just as the tariff should not be used to hide a military cost, neither should military stockpiling hide a depressed industry relief cost.

(e) Standby facilities have a limited role: Existing facilities which cannot be put to current alernate use might be preserved if there is some prospect of their being needed in an emergency; but in industries which depend mostly on a high level of active skills, standby is not a helpful solution.

(f) Expanded research and development is something which should be undertaken without regard to temporary shifts in a cold war; only a sustained effort over many years can reap the full benefits of such an approach.

Mr. President, I hope that the unanimous findings of this subcommittee will point the way to sound future policies, in the best interests of our national security, not only in connection with the pending watch industry study, but also in connection with appeals from other industries which, on grounds of defense essentiality, seek protection from foreign competition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE-SENATE PANEL ASSAILS TRADE CURBS TO AID WATCH INDUSTRY—REPORT SAYS PROTECTION IN NAME OF DEFENSE IS UNWARRANTED, RESTRICTIONS CAUSE BURDEN

WASHINGTON.—A House-Senate economic subcommittee attacked the use of tariffs and quotas to protect the domestic watch industry against competing imports.

It said protection of the watch industry through trade restrictions in the name of defense is unwarranted. The group's report questioned whether the industry was as essential to defense as domestic watchmakers claimed.

The report stems from hearings the subcommittee conducted earlier this year on the relationship between United States foreign policy and special aid offered domestic industries because they are essential to defense. The hearings were focused on the watch industry.

The economic subcommittee's majority asserted trade restrictions to help the United States industry were unwarranted, first, because "it will not be effective in preserving the domestic industry, and second, it represents an undue burden on other industries as well as consumers. The burden on other industries and on the trade of the free world will detract from national security."

Imports of Swiss-made watches, the subcommittee also declared, "can stimulate the ingenuity and efficiency of the (domestic) watch industry." Spokesmen for Swiss manufacturers, at the hearings, said American watch styling, design, and manufacturing efficiency were outdated.

The report said, too, failure to produce watches in wartime is not likely to cripple the country's defense efforts. In fact, United States watch plants, according to the House-Senate panel, would probably have "higher priority" assignments to fulfill than producing watches.

The greatest contribution to defense of domestic watchmakers, the subcommittee study declared, is the "general pool of managerial, engineering, and production line skills in the manufacture of microprecision military end products." Though this skill is valuable, the subcommittee asserted, "it is not unique."

An increasing number of concerns not connected with watch production "are showing an ability to work to equally close or closer tolerances" than watchmakers, "and to develop complex weapons systems employing such components," the group claimed.

The subcommittee recommended the country's goal ought to be to expand its defense-skilled manpower, not to restrict trade.

Other subcommittee conclusions:

Importance of very high jewel counts has been exaggerated in advertising of some watches. Beyond 15 or 17, in a conventional watch, added jewels have little significance.

Criticism of the Swiss watch cartel by American interests should be in terms of whether it provides our consumers with products at lower prices and of better quality than would home or other foreign producers. "We have no valid reason for dictating the form of internal business organization in a foreign country."

Representative TALLE, Republican, of Iowa, in a dissent, criticized the majority for its flat opposition to trade restrictions in the face of Government decisions that such restrictions were warranted.

UNIFORM RETIREMENT DATE OF FEDERAL PERSONNEL

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 912.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 912) to amend the act of April 23, 1930, relating to a uniform retirement date for authorized retirements of Federal personnel, and the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, which were on page 2, strike out lines 14 through 16, inclusive, and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend the act of April 23, 1930, relating to a uniform retirement date for authorized retirements of Federal personnel."

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the House merely struck from the bill the Senate provision that the mandatory retirement age of Foreign Service officers be increased from 60 to 65 years. Of course the House amendments leave the law the way it reads at the present time. With that one change, the bill was passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

POLLING OF COMMITTEE MEMBERS ON BILLS AND OTHER MEASURES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wish to take this occasion to announce that I have been approached from various angles and various sides to sign bills which committees have not voted to report. These are attempts to resort to the old practice by which committees were polled, and bills and other measures were placed on the calendar for action, although they never had received consideration by the committee concerned. It was an evil which was abolished by law, namely, by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1945.

Mr. President, speaking for myself, I wish to say that I cannot sign any of these polled bills. I cannot pretend to be a legislator making laws for other people to obey, if I myself violate the law under which the Senate acts.

STASSEN VERSUS NIXON

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD three editorials making some very pertinent and timely comments on the recent statement by Harold Stassen.

The first editorial, entitled "Sad Sack," was published today in the Washington Daily News.

The second editorial, entitled "Stassen Versus Nixon," was published in the July 25 issue of the New York Daily Mirror.

The third editorial, entitled "Get Off the Team," was published on July 24 in the New York Journal American.

There being no obection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of July 26, 1956]

SAD SACK

Depending on your idea of humor, the case of Harold Stassen's maneuver to dump Vice President NIXON gets funnier and funnier, or sadder and sadder.

Mr. Stassen's announcement that he would promote Gov. Christian Herter of Massachusetts for second place on the Republican ticket hardly got out of his press conference before his little world started caving in around his ears.

GOP Congressmen got together in groups and jeered him. Republican Senators hooted him. President Eisenhower dealt him a smart jab to the chin. From left and right, he was cuffed and mauled. Democrats howled in glee.

Then came the haymaker, Governor Herter, the man Mr. Stassen was going to use to eliminate Mr. NIXON, let it be known he would put the Vice President's name in renomination at the Cow Palace convention next month.

And while Mr. Stassen was trying to pick himself up off the floor, we were reading a biography which glowingly said of him: "He is a durable politician who can't be counted out."

No wonder. He never hears the bell.

[From the New York Daily Mirror of July 25, 1956]

STASSEN VERSUS NIXON

Since Harold Stassen came out of Minnesota as the "boy wonder" governor, he has been a problem to the Republican Party.

For four Presidential elections now, Harold Stassen has sought the Presidency. There has never been any particular reason why any party should choose Stassen as its candidate, but he has convinced himself of his own perfections and has expected that all others will agree with him.

In 16 States, as the Mirror reported yesterday, Eisenhower and Stassen clubs have come into existence. Such clubs do not arise spontaneously in 16 States. That requires organization and management. It means that someone is organizing them. It means that someone has arranged for finances for them. Certainly, it has not been the Republican National Committee that is doing the job for Stassen, because that body is pledged to the Eisenhower and NIXON ticket.

Harold Stassen is trying to split the Republican Party not because he hates Nixon but because, accepting the law of probabilities, it is apparently Stassen's hope that he may step into the Presidency by accident. Should an accident occur, Stassen hopes that it will not be NIXON but Harold Stassen who moves his valise into the White House.

Harold Stassen's obsessions with the Presidency have cost the United States plenty. He has long posed as an authority on international affairs and as a great liberal. He succeeded Paul Hoffman as the principal giver-away of the American taxpayers' earnings.

At first, President Eisenhower was much impressed by Stassen's liberal generosity and when the Congress voted Stassen out of office, the President appointed him to a position within the White House and indicated that Stassen was his Secretary of Peace. Out of that came a considerable but sub-rosa conflict between Harold Stassen and John Foster Dulles, because Stassen, sitting in the White House, barging in on the President out of turn, was attempting to run the State Department even when Dulles was in Washington. It is no secret that on more than one occasion Herbert Hoover, Jr., had to save an ugly situation that arose from Stassen's meddling. Anyhow, the story goes that Stassen has outworn his welcome.

President Eisenhower's training, before he came to the White House, was that men who work together work as a unit. In the Army, the fellow who under-cuts his associates finds that all the others gang up on him. Eisenhower has organized the President's office on the basis of what he calls his "team." He expects teamwork and he expects his associates and subordinates to go through channels. Within the White House family, the chain of command is quite clear and it functioned admirably while the President was ill. In fact, the operation was so smooth that it can be termed businesslike, which is a description not often heard in connection with anything in Washington.

Stassen is on the team but is playing solo. His proposal of Herter for the Vice Presidency is a transparent one. Christian Herter is now Governor of Massachusetts and has not chosen to succeed himself because of ill-health. His particular malady is arthritis. Also he was born in France and were his candidacy challenged, it could lead to a prolonged action in the courts to determine whether he is constitutionally entitled to the office. Stassen knows all this. He is running Stassen, not Herter. And Stassen is not wanted.

[From the New York Journal-American of July 24, 1956]

GET OFF THE TEAM

The proposal by Harold E. Stassen that Vice President NIXON withdraw as a candidate for renomination on the Republican ticket at the San Francisco convention reflects neither good judgment nor good taste.

President Eisenhower has many times expressed his personal preference for Mr. NIXON as a running mate, and his confidence that their maximum assurances for reelection would be thus achieved.

The American people have shown in all the surveys that have been conducted that they are of the same opinion.

Mr. Stassen's opinion is strictly his own, and almost exclusively his own.

He has never had much influence with the American people, and less right to speak for them.

As a presidential candidate himself, he was never able to get off the ground.

Nominally a member of the Eisenhower team by virtue of an appointment under the present administration, he has served with dubious distinction and has now come to the end of his usefulness.

Being so plainly incapable of teamwork, Mr. Stassen should get off the team.

SAFETY DEVICES ON HOUSEHOLD REFRIGERATORS SHIPPED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11969) to require certain safety devices on household refrigerators shipped in interstate commerce.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I should like to take a few minutes on the bill. I have been informed that the distinguished Senator from Indiana is about to propose an amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. I have already offered it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have suggested to him that, although I am reluctant to do so, yet because of the lateness of the hour, I shall accept the amendment. I have been in touch with the author of the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been stated. It will be stated again.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to strike out "90 days" and insert in lieu thereof "1 year."

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I understand that the author of the bill is willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct, but I wish to make a few remarks on the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am delighted that the author of the bill is accepting the amendment. It is very important. I think I am opposed to the bill, but I wish to see this amendment in it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to speak very briefly on the bill.

First, at the beginning of the 83d Congress, I introduced a bill to provide for this same type of legislation. It so happened that on the same day the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] introduced a similar bill. I think it may be interesting to know the origin of the idea so far as I was concerned.

One day I received a letter from the then Governor of my State, Governor Persons, with which he enclosed a letter which a lady had written him, attaching a newspaper story about the dreadful epidemic of deaths of young children as the result of crawling into deserted iceboxes and refrigerators and having the door close on them, resulting in their suffocation. She asked if something could not be done about it.

The governor sent the message to me. I wrote the lady and told her that I was referring the matter to Representative ROBERTS, of Alabama, on the House side, and asking him to introduce a bill. I told her that I would introduce a similar bill in the Senate. That was done; and on the same day I introduced my bill, the Senator from Montana introduced a similar bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me go one step further, and then I shall be glad to yield.

In that Congress, on July 7, 1954, a subcommittee under the chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PURTELL] conducted hearings. It was decided at that time—and I think we all concurred in the decision—that the industry, the manufacturers, had not moved far enough into their studies and techniques relating to these safety devices to justify our requiring them at that time to install such devices. So instead of reporting a bill, the committee reported a Senate resolution which called attention to the need, and the fact that the industry had not moved far enough, but at the same time suggested to the cities and States throughout the country that they enact ordinances to take care of discarded iceboxes.

In this Congress hearings were not conducted on the Senate side, but were conducted on the House side. A good many of the manufacturers showed that they had perfected devices, and that they are actually now marketing refrigerators with such devices. So the bill passed the House with an amendment suggested by one of the large builders, that the time be extended to a year and 90 days.

The effect of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is to lengthen that period by 9 months, making it 2 years. So the manufacturers will be given 2 years' grace within which to comply with the regulations which may be issued by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield first to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Alabama is being very generous indeed in giving me credit for introducing a bill on the same day he introduced his bill. As a matter of fact, I introduced my bill more than a week later. The man who has done the most in the Senate to push this particular legislation—and the Lord knows, it has been badly needed all these years, because of the large number of deaths of children—is the Senator from Alabama himself. He has displayed a keen and persistent interest in this subject. The determination he has shown is indicative of his interest in the welfare of the children of our country and I give him all the credit for the measure which is now before the Senate.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am certainly grateful to the Senator from Montana.

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. As the Senator knows, I do not think the bill reaches the real trouble, which is in the old refrigerators and iceboxes which are left in the open. I ask the Senator if he has given any thought to the question of the liability of the manufacturer should the apparatus which is approved not work?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I have not. I recognize the problem which the Senator first mentioned, but that is beyond the scope of the jurisdiction of Congress to control. That is the reason why, 2 years ago, the Senate adopted a resolution calling the attention of the cities and the States to the need for regulation.

Mr. BRICKER. But it is a question for consideration in passing a bill of this kind, is it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Is the Senator referring to the old, discarded boxes?

Mr. BRICKER. No. I am talking about the apparatus which might be placed upon a modern refrigerator, and which might not work.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The largest manufacturers are already installing such devices. I display an advertisement from General Electric Co. This is specialty advertising. It reads: Child-safe magnetic door. They are making a specialty of it.

I also have before me an article on the Admiral refrigerator, with pictures.

Here is a letter from the Admiral Corp., telling what it has done, together with a news release.

I exhibit some of the advertising literature of the General Electric Co. It says, "A child can't be trapped inside." The largest manufacturers are already installing such devices.

Mr. BRICKER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think undoubtedly they will see to it that their devices are perfected so that they need not be liable. They are given 2 years before they are required to comply.

Mr. BRICKER. They are given a year, as I understand, under the terms of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, after the device, whatever it may be, is approved.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It was a year and 90 days in the bill as reported from the committee, and the amendment of the Senator from Indiana would extend the time by 9 months, making the period 2 years.

Mr. BRICKER. Two years from the time the bill is passed?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is really 2 years and 90 days from the date the bill is enacted.

Mr. BRICKER. I still believe that the bill does not meet the real problem we face. I am fearful that the law of negligence might be completely changed by Congress passing a bill requiring these devices, especially in the light of the fact, as the Senator says, that many of the companies have been devoting their efforts to the perfecting of such devices. I am in favor of the companies doing everything they can, and I think they are. I think the evidence before the House committee shows that. In the light of that fact, does the Senator feel that a bill of this kind is necessary in the public interest?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Ohio. None of the big manufacturers have objected to the bill, and I think there is ample time for others to develop the techniques necessary to enable them to comply.

Mr. BRICKER. Of course, there will be an opportunity next year for Congress to look into the subject, if there are any bugs in the act which might make the manufacturer liable for any death which might occur.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is true.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a portion of the report which was made on Senate Resolution 272 in 1954, being an excerpt from Report No. 1753, 83d Congress, 2d session.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL BACKGROUND

Your committee's Subcommittee on Business and Consumer Interests held hearings on April 27, 1954, on S. 2876 and S. 2891. These bills, in substance, would have provided imprisonment and fines for any person introducing or delivering for introduction into interstate commerce a refrigerating unit unless it were equipped with a latch which would enable it to be opened from the inside.

Testimony adduced at those hearings indicated that during the 6-year period, 1948–53, there has been a total of nearly 50 cases in which 1 to 5 children have crawled into a discarded icebox or refrigerator and suffocated. At least 79 children, ranging in age from 2 to 12 years, with the average age being 5 years, have died in these incidents.

There are more than 50 million iceboxes, refrigerators, freezers, and other such airtight cabinets in use today and they are being discarded at the rate of approximately 2 million to 3 million a year. Experience has shown that these refrigerators and other airtight containers, when once discarded, constitute attractive nuisances and inviting places for games by small children. In the light of these tragic facts, your committee cannot remain impassive.

Some opponents of S. 2876 and S. 2891 based their opposition to those measures, at least in part, upon the ground that the bulk of new refrigerating units would not become obsolete for 15 or 20 years. Your committee was not impressed with this argument. Our responsibility to the small children of the Nation is a continuing one, and if there existed today an invention that would make such refrigerating units, when discarded, harmless to children, your committee would have recommended passage of legislation of the general nature of either S. 2876 or S. 2891.

However, testimony adduced at the hearings has failed to establish the existence of a device which would provide a proper seal for a modern refrigerator door and which would, also, allow the door to be opened easily by a small child. (See appendix for pressures required for proper sealing.) Obviously, such a device would have to be set in motion by the slightest touch, because a child in the dark becomes frantic. Even the simplest type of a latch might present an insuperable obstacle to small tots who, as experience has demonstrated, lock themselves up in a bathroom and have to be rescued by the police or firemen.

Manufacturers of refrigerating units have assured your committee's Subcommittee on Business and Consumer Interests that their laboratories are exerting continued efforts and will intensify their efforts to invent some adequate type of safety device. Furthermore, they have stated that when such a device is invented, it will be made available upon reasonable terms to the whole industry. The subcommittee will keep abreast of the progress of such inventions, with a view to compelling adoption of such throughout the industry. In fact, if such an invention is not developed within the reasonably near future, it may be necessary for your committee to consider legislation that would authorize funds to be spent by appropriate agencies of the Government to do what the industry would then have shown its incompetency to accomplish.

Some opponents of S. 2876 and S. 2891 have pointed out the fact that a number of States and municipalities have enacted legislation or ordinances making it a crime for anyone to discard a refrigerating unit without removing the door thereof or taking some similar effective precaution. Civic groups have cooperated by bringing to the attention of the public the dangers of discarded refrigerating units. Some groups have conducted campaigns to call to the attention of homeowners that they had a discarded icebox in their yards and to encourage them to make them harmless to children.

State and local laws do have an advantage that Federal legislation would lack. If properly enforced, that can have an immediate effect in reducing the death of children. Furthermore, they can bridge the 15-year gap where Federal legislation would be largely ineffective. The Congress cannot and does not wish to usurp State police powers. It cannot enact legislation making it a crime to discard a refrigerating unit without removing the door thereof. The Congress can reach this problem through its power over interstate commerce. Whenever it is feasible, the Congress can and should enact legislation banning from such commerce a refrigerating unit that can become a menace to children. This would, in 15 to 20 years, remove almost completely this modern hazard to the lives of our children. In the meantime, State safety laws upon this subject are imperative. Even if legislation of the type embodied in S. 2876 and S. 2891 were feasible now, this resolution would still be needed to call to the attention of State governors and legislators that Federal legislation in this matter is inadequate without an exercise of the equally important State police powers.

Under existing conditions, enactment of Federal legislation of the type contained in S. 2876 and S. 2891 would result in banning from interstate commerce a useful and necessary product until discovery or invention of a device which would provide a proper seal while allowing a door of a refrigerating unit to be opened easily from the inside.

Accordingly, the only present solution is to call these varying, effective areas of Federal and State jurisdiction to the attention of the governors and legislators of the States and urge the consideration of appropriate legislation and ordinances by the States and municipalities which may not be aware of the deficiencies of Federal legislation upon the subject. This resolution would provide this solution and your committee recommends unanimously that the resolution be adopted.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 11969) was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE PAY ACT OF 1956—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7619) to adjust the rates of compensation of the heads of the executive departments and of certain other officials of the Federal Government, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. This is an important conference report. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief explanation of the bill.

TITLE I. EXECUTIVE PAY

Title I of the conference substitute establishes salary levels for Cabinet officers, sub-Cabinet officers, and other executives of the Federal Government generally conforming to the salary levels for such officials provided by the bill as passed by the House. The salary levels for Cabinet officers, $25,000, for the Under Secretary of State, the Deputy Secretary of Defense, the Director, Office of Defense Mobilization, the Director, Bureau of the Budget, and the Comptroller General, $22,500, and for the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force, $22,000, are the same as in the House bill.

Principal differences in the conference substitute and the bill as passed by the House are: First, chairmen of major boards and commissions are in salary level $20,500 under the conference substitute, compared to levels of $19,500 and $20,000 in the House bill, and, second, assistant secretaries of executive and military departments, including Assistant Postmasters General, administrators of certain bureaus and agencies, and members of major boards and commissions are placed in the $20,000 salary level under the conference substitute, compared to a salary level of $19,000 in the House bill. The salaries of governors of Territories and possessions are placed at $19,000 under the conference substitute.

The conference substitute establishes a proper alinement between salaries of Cabinet officers, sub-Cabinet officers, and the heads of the various agencies, independent establishments, and bureaus in accordance with the level of the duties and responsibilities of such positions.

The Senate amendment provided for the establishment of specified numbers of administrative assistants and other secretaries or immediate staff assistants in the White House Office. The conferees on the part of the House agreed to the total number of such positions as contained in the Senate amendment, including 3 positions, 2 for the assistants to the deputy assistants to the President and 1 secretary to the Cabinet.

In accordance with the bill as passed by the House, the conference substitute increases the maximum salaries under the Classification Act of 1949, grade GS–18, and under the Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955, salary level 20, from $14,800 to $16,000, with appropriate adjustments in salary steps for the immediate lower grade and levels provided in those acts. Maximum salaries for chief medical officers and assistants in the Veterans' Administration are increased, under the conference substitute and the bill as passed by the House, to maintain the existing relationship between such salaries and the salaries of other Government officials and of classified and postal field service positions.

TITLE II. TERMS OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONERS AND SUCCESSION TO DUTIES OF CHAIRMAN

Title II of the conference substitute establishes 6-year, staggered terms of office for United States Civil Service Commissioners: provides for designation by the President of a vice chairman of the commission: and provides a line of succession to perform the duties and responsibilities of the chairman of the Civil Service Commission by the vice chairman, in the absence of the chairman, and by the other member of the commission in the absence of the chairman and vice chairman.

TITLE III. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Title III of the conference substitute provides for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of general counsels of the Post Office Department, a general counsel of the Department of Agriculture, and a general counsel of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to replace the existing offices of the chief legal officers of such Departments, which will be abolished.

The Senate amendment authorized the director of the administrative office of the United States courts to place a total of 4 positions in grade GS–18 of the general schedule of the Classification Act of 1949, and provided that the positions of 7 directors of commodity offices, Commodity Stabilization Service, Department of Agriculture, shall be in grade GS–16 of such schedule. The conference substitute does not contain such provisions, but increases by 11 positions the total number of supergrade positions which a majority of the Civil Service Commissioners are authorized to place in appropriate grades of the general schedule. It should be clearly understood by the Civil Service Commission that it should give immediate consideration with respect to an immediate adjustment in the classification of these positions.

Three positions allocated by the Senate bill in grade 18 for Deputy Administrators for the Agricultural Research Service are contained in the conference substitute.

TITLE IV. CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT

The conference substitute contains a complete revision of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930. The House bill contained no such provision.

The conference substitute greatly liberalizes retirement benefits of Federal employees. The cost to the Government of the added benefits is estimated at $310 million a year. The major new employee benefits provided by the conference substitute are:

Annuities will be computed at (a) 2 percent of the high average salary multiplied by all years of service in excess of 10 plus 1½ percent of such salary multiplied by the first 5 years of service, plus 1¾ percent of the years of service from 5 to 10, or (b) 1 percent of high average salary, plus $25, multiplied by total years of service, whichever is greater. Under present law annuities are computed on the basis of 1½ percent of high average salary, or 1 percent of such salary plus $25, multiplied by total years of service, whichever is greater.

The annuity of an employee electing a survivor annuity will be reduced by 2½ percent of the first $2,400 and 10 percent of the balance. The present reduction is 5 percent of the first $1,500 and 10 percent of the balance.

Optional retirement is authorized at age 62 after 5 years of service, with the right to elect survivor benefits. Present law provides an annuity after 5 years of service, but requires 15 years of service for election of survivor benefits.

The present right to retire on a reduced annuity at age 55 after 30 years of service is continued.

The reduction factor for retirement before reaching age 60 is changed from 3 percent a year to 1 percent for each year the retiring employee is under age 60 and 2 percent for each year under age 55.

Disability benefits are liberalized by providing a minimum of 40 percent of the average salary, or the annuity which would have been earned at age 60, whichever is the lesser.

Retirement is provided for the first time to members who complete at least 20 years service and are at least 50 years of age in cases where they are separated from their positions by other than resignation or expulsion.

An annuity is granted upon involuntary separation after attaining the age of 50 years with 20 years of service, and the existing provision for annuity upon involuntary separation after 25 years of service, regardless of age, is continued.

Upon death of an employee after 5 years of service, or of a retired employee, the surviving widow or widower will receive an annuity equal to 50 percent of the earned annuity of the decedent, beginning the first month after such death.

Survivor annuities of children of an employee who dies after 5 years of service, or of a retired employee who dies, are increased by an average of 150 percent.

An annuitant who is reemployed and serves at least 1 full-time year on active duty in a position covered by the Retirement Act will receive an annuity based on his reemployed service as well as his annuity based on the original retirement. Any lump-sum leave credit will not be reduced by reason of annuity paid to him during reemployment.

The contribution on the part of employees and agencies will be 6½ percent per annum and 7½ percent per annum for Members of Congress. The bill that passed the Senate required 7 percent from employees and 8 percent for Members. The bill as reported from the House committee required a contribution of 6 percent from employees and 7 percent from Members. The conference agreement, will, in my estimation, place the system on a fully funded basis.

Members of the civilian faculties of the Naval Academy and naval postgraduate school, and United States commissioners who meet certain tests of minimum compensation and service, are brought into the civil service retirement system.

TITLE V. SCIENTIFIC POSITIONS

The conference substitute authorizes the Secretary of Defense to establish not more than 120 scientific and professional positions in lieu of 45 now authorized in the Department of Defense and not more than 25 such positions in the National Security Agency, to carry out research and development functions relating to national defense and military and naval medicine. It authorizes the Chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to establish 30 such positions in his agency. A salary range of $12,500 to $19,000 is established for such positions by title I of the conference substitute.

I should add that the conferees of both the House and the Senate were unanimous in agreeing to the conference report. The House has already adopted the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

GREAT PLAINS CONSERVATION PROGRAM

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2839, H. R. 11833.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11833) to amend the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act and the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, to provide for a Great Plains conservation program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the bill would implement the Great Plains program proposed by the President on January 11, by—

First. Authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into 10-year contracts with farmers and ranchers in the Great Plains area providing for changes in land use and other measures for soil and water conservation; and Second. Permitting wheat acreage to be counted as planted for the purpose of computing future allotments where unfavorable weather conditions prevent planting and the producer gives appropriate notice of that fact.

The authority provided by this bill would be in addition to that provided by the present ACP program, the Soil Conservation Service program, and the soil bank. Unlike the soil bank, it is directed toward changing land use rather than reducing production. Unlike the current ACP program, it provides for 10-year contracts, and would not be subject to the maximum payment limitation and small-farm provision of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. The purpose of the program is to obtain needed changes in land use to meet the climatic conditions of the area and avert serious wind erosion and resultant economic distress. The program provided for by the first section of the bill would continue only through 1971 and the cost of such program exclusive of administrative costs, would be limited to $150 million over the entire period and $25 million in any year.

The provision of the bill permitting wheat acreage to be counted as planted where unfavorable weather conditions prevent planting is similar to section 307 of the Agricultural Act of 1956 which, however, is limited to the period 1956 to 1959.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I am very glad the pending bill has come before the Senate and is apparently on its way to becoming law.

On January 9, President Eisenhower sent a special farm message to Congress. In that message he outlined nine points of a program, the enactment of which he believed was highly essential for the welfare of agriculture.

The pending bill represents the last of the nine points to be acted upon during this year. All the points, with one exception have been authorized, and they have been enacted by Congress in about the form in which they were requested by President Eisenhower.

The one exception was not exactly a request, but a suggestion that Congress might wish to consider placing a dollar limit on the size of price support loans. Nothing has been done about that. Nearly every other item in the President's message has been acted upon, and acted upon almost in the form in which the President requested it.

I do not believe any President has ever had such an almost complete response to requests made to Congress on behalf of an agricultural program that President Eisenhower has had this year.

I am sure we all appreciate the work of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and of all the other members of the committee, who contributed toward bringing all these requests of the President before Congress for action.

Mr. CARLSON. The legislation proposed by the pending bill is important to the Great Plains area, of which Kansas is a part. I commend the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for bringing this measure before the Senate. I hope we will complete action on it promptly, because it is important to a long-range program. We have been operating our program of soil conservation on an annual basis. I believe we must make plans to carry it out on a several-year basis. On that basis this proposed legislation is very important.

Mr. AIKEN. I am sure that when this bill is enacted into law, it, together with the legislation which has already been passed, will give sufficient authority to the Department of Agriculture and provide a great deal of incentive to landowners and operators to restore to grass hundreds of thousands of acres which probably should never have been plowed in the first place, except for the fact that the emergency made it necessary to do so.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I merely wish to say that I too believe that the pending bill is one of the most forward-looking pieces of conservation legislation we could possibly pass. It will surely do a great deal of good in the Great Plains area, of which Kansas is a part, where there has been plowed land which, except for emergency reasons, perhaps should never have been plowed and cultivated.

Being a tie-in with the acreage conservation reserve of the soil bank, I am sure the bill will have a long and enduring effect upon soil fertility and the overall conservation of land resources. I am delighted that the bill has been brought before the Senate, and I wish to commend the chairman of the committee for making it possible for us to vote for it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I am glad that Senators are remarking on the work of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and of the distinguished ranking minority member of that committee. The Chair will recall that at the beginning of this session the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was divided 8 to 7 on one of the most difficult pieces of legislation which ever has been considered in the Senate since I have been a Member of this body. When the first action was taken by the Congress the President was not in accord with it. There was much chance of friction, but under the able leadership of the chairman of the committee and ranking minority member, and of all other members of the committee, a very constructive program of legislation has been accomplished. I am proud to have been a member of that committee, and I am proud to acknowledge the fine and constructive leadership of the distinguished chairman of the committee and the distinguished minority member of the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I merely wish to second, so to speak, the remarks of the Senator from Florida, and I wish to pay a tribute to the Senator from Florida, which I had hoped to do yesterday, with reference to the farm credit legislation which has been reported and acted upon.

As the Senator recalls, we had some differences of opinion, but, finally, when the conference report was presented, many of the details were worked out to our mutual satisfaction. I think the Senate will long remember that the Senator from Florida took care of one of the most important items of farm legislation.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I appreciate these cordial remarks.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I remember when we were asked to break up the prairies and raise wheat. We broke up hundreds and thousands of acres which otherwise we would not have broken up. The bill which is about to be passed, Mr. President, will contribute 80 percent toward the reseeding, and terrific benefit will be derived by all the farmers in the Northwest area.

I wish to compliment the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and especially the chairman of that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the final passage of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 11833) was passed.

REPORT ON ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it has become the practice of the Committee on Foreign Relations, at the end of a Congress, to prepare and have printed as a Senate document a legislative history of the committee's activities during the Congress. This is in the nature of a report to the Senate on all the measures referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that have received its consideration.

The report will be completed after the Congress adjourns and will be approximately 70 pages long. I ask, therefore, unanimous consent that the report entitled "Legislative History of the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate, 84th Congress" be printed as a Senate document after the adjournment of the Congress and that an additional 1,000 copies be printed for the use of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, since the document will not be available for some weeks, I have had prepared a brief summary of the treaties, bills and resolutions acted upon favorably by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR GEORGE

SUMMARY OF ACTIVITIES

This has been a very fruitful 2 years for the Committee on Foreign Relations. The committee reported and the Senate approved 32 treaties, 34 bills and joint resolutions, and 30 Senate and concurrent resolutions. This is a far greater volume of committee business than for any other Congress since the committee first started keeping such records in 1947.

The 2 years behind us saw the security of the United States strengthened through the Mutual Security Act of 1955 and the Mutual Security Act of 1956, through the so-called Formosa Resolution, through ratification of the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty and of the Mutual Defense Treaty with the Republic of China, and through the adherence of Germany to the North Atlantic Treaty and the termination of the occupation regime.

Our friendly relations with other countries were strengthened by the approval of such measures as the Austrian State Treaty, the new convention with Panama, double taxation conventions with a number of countries, and several treaties of friendship, commerce and navigation.

A great deal of legislation was enacted improving the operations in various ways of the Foreign Service, the Department of State and the United States Information Agency. Bills and resolutions relating to our participation in certain international organizations were also approved.

I am particularly proud of the fact that in all its deliberations and activities, the Committee on Foreign Relations displayed no partisanship. Measures were weighed on their merits and decisions were based on whether or not the matter under consideration would advance the security and well-being of this Nation.

I want to thank my colleagues on the committee for making this record possible. Both the Democratic and Republican members of the committee have worked diligently and hard to accomplish the heavy work before the committee. In particular the ranking members, Senator GREEN and Senator WILEY, deserve great credit because I have relied on them heavily in guiding the committee through the past 2 busy years.

In order that there may be readily available a summary of work of the Committee on Foreign Relations and of the Senate during this Congress, I should like to insert a brief review of the foreign policy matters considered since we began our work in January of 1955.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS, 1956, AND THE TOWNSEND MOVEMENT

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, early this June it was my privilege to address the 16th National Convention of the Townsend Clubs of America. The meeting, attended by senior citizens from throughout the Nation, was staged in St. Paul, the capital of the State I have the honor to represent in the United States Senate.

My mind went back to that occasion a few days ago when the Senate debated, and then passed, legislation calling for drastic revision of our social-security program. I could not help but reflect, as I listened to the arguments set forth by my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, that this event would not have been possible had it not been for the pioneer work performed by Dr. Francis E. Townsend and his followers.

The doctor is now 89 years of age. I feel certain that there must be pride and joy in his heart as he sees, though ever so gradually, realization of the objectives he originally espoused.

I believe in giving credit where credit is due. Therefore, I say that in all conscience we must confess our debt to the Townsend organization.

The measure we passed would permit benefits to women at age 62. The Townsend people have long argued that benefits for all—men and women—should be available at age 60 rather than at age 65. Thus, for the first time, we broke the age barrier and, by so doing, we recognized, I believe, that the Townsendites have been right all along.

We approved a program for disability insurance at age 50; and when we did we endorsed another principle held dear by the organized senior citizens of our land. Dr. Townsend, I am told, has always insisted that pension payments should be made available, not only to the aged, but also to those unable to work because of disability.

We extended coverage under the social-security system and thus moved another step closer to the principle of universality which Dr. Townsend and his followers have advocated over the long years.

These advances did not come easily; indeed, they have been won only in the face of formidable opposition; but, they have been won. They have been won just as other advances are going to be won toward a full answer to the social-security problem—a national social-security system under which our aged and disabled in America will enjoy a full and up-to-date share in our ever-expanding standard of living.

I submit that it is only proper that we pause for a moment to consider that the really important improvements recently voted in our social-security program represent acknowledgment that the Townsend organization and its membership are performing a valiant and effective service by keeping ever before the minds of the American people the importance of fair treatment of our senior American citizens.

THE GOLDEN RULE AND THE DIGNITY OF MAN

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, there was just handed to me a note from my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], who had to be away for a few moments. He asked, if I could be on the floor, to place in the RECORD a letter which Representative ELLSWORTH wrote to Charles W. Lowry.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the letter to which I have just referred, and a letter from T. O. Toon, written to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS].

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 23, 1956.

Dr. CHARLES WESLEY LOWRY,
Chairman and Executive Director,
Foundation for Religious Action,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. LOWRY: It was good of you to write me and I am glad to have the copy of the address by George C. McGhee. Mr. Ted Toon also gave me some printed material regarding the foundation. I am glad to know of the splendid work you are doing.

Your comments regarding the speech I gave in Portland in 1952 are gratifying. Incidentally, I was quite thrilled to hear President Eisenhower in a speech he made on the television networks within the last several months recite the same general premise regarding the universality of the Golden Rule. I was also glad to learn of the other times when the same thought with similar quotations from the other religions have been used. I think a great fundamental is involved there which, other than the few instances mentioned, has been almost entirely overlooked.

For years, since the end of World War II, and during the tedious years of the "cold war" I have been sorely disturbed by what I am sure is a general lack of understanding of the true nature of the conflict in which we are engaged.

It seems to me that the leadership in the United States and in the free world have never really grasped nor grappled with the fact that the Communist drive for world domination and complete world control is unlike all other conflicts between countries, races or governments in that the Communist ambition is total. They seek to control not only the whole world from a territorial standpoint but their conception of domination is total—economic, political, and spiritual. Their effort has cunningly merged all three into the one all-inclusive term "communism."

Apparently we have been so preoccupied with combating the traditional elements of international conflict, namely, the economic and the political, that we have either ignored or overlooked the third corner of the Soviet triangle, the spiritual, which holds the whole thing together—the fanaticism of the materialistic idea of communism itself.

I do not have any particular quarrel with what is being done in the economic and political aspects of this conflict which, of course, are supported by military force. I simply feel that we in the Western World are not going to make any real progress toward destroying the roots of the Communist evil until we too have completed our triangle by tying our other efforts together with a genuine, honest and dynamic effort to unite people everywhere on the one common ground which all can understand and in which all believe regardless of their country, race, color or religion.

We might or might not be able to meet and defeat the Communist movement on strictly material grounds as we are now trying to do. We might or might not be able to outsmart them politically. But one thing we know for certain and that is that whereas they have to engage in an operation known as brainwashing to develop the equivalent of the spiritual side of their conquest, there already exists in the minds and hearts of all people the desire to treat and be treated with respect, kindness, and decency. However beaten down may be the flame of human dignity as the result of circumstances I am sure nevertheless that there exists in every human being that spark of desire for individual dignity and respect which might be fanned into a flame which of itself could completely destroy the diabolical Communist movement.

Our approach toward accomplishing anything in this direction is made the more difficult because we have ignored it too long. I have an idea that we have frightened people by our talk of force, our talk of strength and, perhaps, our showing of tangible evidence of these things by the very efforts we are making and the great expenditures we are making in the well intentioned effort to help people. I think it is likely also that in the political operations of the Western World we have here and there supported governments and individuals more interested in their own successes than in the welfare of the people. The point is that while I feel certain that our motives are of the purest and our intentions of the best, the hundreds of millions of human beings whom we are sincerely trying to help do not perhaps have any basis on which to have individual confidence in what we are attempting to do.

Obviously, the task of gaining their confidence is a monumental one. It surely cannot be done on the basis of organizations, crusades or drives—as we know those terms. Furthermore, I think it is certain that what I am talking about cannot be done by "us talking to them." Fortunately, if we have sense enough to know it, the Communists have already blueprinted the procedure for us. They made their plans some 30 years ago and have followed them right down the line. Their operation, as you know, is simple. They have taken peoples from all lands and indoctrinated, trained them and sent them back to their own people again to spread the word. You might be inclined to say that we have done and are doing the same thing, but that is not quite right. The nearest approach to it is our exchange student program, but that, I am afraid, is materialistic to the extent that it is mostly cultural and intellectual and has, so far as I know, very little of the down-to-earth spiritual element in it. The carrying the word of Christianity and the worldwide effort for conversions to Christianity is not the sort of thing I am talking about.

What I have in mind is, I expect, just too simple to be realistic. I think we should carefully work out a plan to reach articulate people from other lands of all races, creeds and color and sell them on the very simple truth to be carried back to their own peoples that we of the Western Christian World have the same basic belief in the Golden Rule and the dignity of man that they do and that this thing called communism is the exact opposite of their own beliefs and if accepted would destroy them spiritually as well as their material freedom.

When I began to answer your most welcome letter I had no intention of writing at such length. However, it has been some time since I have given expression to any of these thoughts so I have enjoyed dictating this. Nevertheless, I hope you will pardon my infringement upon your time to such length.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

HARRIS ELLSWORTH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 26, 1956.

Hon. RALPH E. FLANDERS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLANDERS: The attached letter from Congressman HARRIS ELLSWORTH to Dr. Charles W. Lowry, Ph. D., chairman of the Foundation for Religious Action, reveals many of the all-important basic areas (which you ably bring out in your book, "Letter to a Generation"), wherein most of the peoples of the world can unite, using the Golden Rule outlined in their respective faiths and beliefs, in their fight and ours to retain the dignity of the individuals of all races, colors, and creeds. This basic area is open to the Western World. It is not possible for the rulers or those who are ruled by the Soviet hierarchy.

It would be appreciated if you will insert Congressman ELLSWORTH's letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as I feel that many of our people should have the opportunity of knowing the deep convictions of one of our many able Members of Congress.

Sincerely,

T. O. TOON.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY TO THE CITY OF VERO BEACH, FLA.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2828, H. R. 10383.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10383) to provide for the conveyance of certain real property of the United States to the city of Vero Beach, Fla.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, the bill authorizes the General Services Administration to reconvey to the city of Vero Beach, Fla., two parcels of land, one of which was given by the city of Vero Beach to the Federal Government; the second of which was purchased from the city of Vero Beach for $15,000. Both parcels were to be used for the erection of a post office.

Since the time of the conveyances, the plans have been changed, and the Government will not erect a post office there.

The purpose of the bill is to return to the city, first, the parcel which it had given to the Federal Government; and second, to allow the Federal Government to sell the second parcel, which the Federal Government undoubtedly will sell at a profit, and thereby restore both pieces of land to the city of Vero Beach.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK R. WILSON, OF IOWA

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. President, in the Palimpsest magazine, June 1956 issue, published by the Iowa State Historical Society, there appears an article setting out the outstanding record of service to community, State and Nation made by one of Iowa's distinguished sons—Frank R. Wilson.

Frank Wilson is of pioneer Iowa stock, his forebears having settled in Louisa County, Iowa, February 1838, the year Iowa was first made a separate Territory, and 8 years before statehood. He served long and with great credit with the Census Bureau, and although he officially retired in October 1951, he continued on in important assignments until 1953.

All Iowans are proud of the outstanding record and invaluable contribution made by Frank Wilson to our Nation.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the tribute paid to him by Dr. William J. Petersen, editor of the Palimpsest.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRANK R. WILSON

The story of Frank R. Wilson is typical of many men who were born, nurtured, and educated in the Hawkeye State and then went out to attain fame, and sometimes fortune, in their chosen fields. Distinguished Iowans by the hundreds who achieved renown far from their native hearth can be numbered in the ministry, in education, and journalism, in banking, insurance and industry, in medicine, law, and other professions, and as executives and administrators in our own Federal Government and throughout the world.

Although Frank Wilson accomplished Herculean tasks during the course of his lifetime, his name rarely appeared in the headlines. His work was that of a promoter for others—an "idea" man, a "leg" man, a supersalesman. It was largely his task to push notables into the limelight in order to achieve some objective that would redound to the common good. This was particularly true whenever he was called upon to serve the Federal Government. Mindful of Wilson's contributions to the war bond sales during World War I, Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass wrote him as follows on September 16, 1919:

"I cannot permit you to leave the Department which you have served so well without committing to writing an expression of my genuine appreciation of your loyalty and devotion to the interests of the Government. You entered the Treasury in the service of the Federal Farm Loan Board where your intelligent work attracted the attention of my distinguished predecessor who gave you the opportunity for the greater employment of the admirable talents with which you are endowed by your appointment as Director of Publicity of the War Loan Organization. In that work you displayed the finest qualities of direction in campaigns that required imagination of the highest degree and a full understanding of all the elements of popular appeal. I am happy to have the privilege of saying that you were equal to a task that was of very great importance in the program of war finance and that I know of few men who could have done so well and none who could have excelled. In the years to come it will be a comfort to you to realize that you served your Government with the enthusiasm and loyalty of a patriot in your country's period of greatest peril. You leave the Treasury with the deepest regret of those who have been associated with you, and I know I speak the mind of all when I say that you will carry with you into private life their every good wish for your health and happiness."

During much of his active life Frank Wilson served the Federal Government in various capacities for little compensation. Indeed, most of Wilson's personal estate was built up during the fabulous 1920's when his keen imagination, his driving energy and courage in the face of insuperable odds allowed him and his associates to reap rich rewards in the newborn motion picture industry. It took a man of rare insight and organizing ability to achieve the success he did before the financial debacle of 1929. Even then, Wilson had foresight enough to convert much of his paper stock into real estate, thereby saving some of the fruits of his labor.

Iowans will always be indebted to Frank Wilson for the deep interest he took in his native State. According to the Council Bluffs Nonpareil:

"He never lost his interest in Iowa. Today he probably knows more about each Iowa city than most of the local residents.

"As chief of publicity he always works on Iowa statistics first. He just can't wait to see what has happened to corn production, hog production and other activities in the greatest agricultural State in the Union.

"The Nonpareil hears from him frequently, with information about Iowa crop production."

Frank Wilson played such an important role in the United States Census Bureau that a special act was required to prevent his mandatory retirement until the Government could benefit from his ability to interpret the census of 1950. Little wonder that, upon his retirement from the Census Bureau, Frank Wilson received a gold medal for outstanding service, the highest award which the Government offers its civilian workers. Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer made the award to Wilson for his unique service as Director of Information of the Bureau of the Census. Wilson was the first Government information man to receive the award.

Hugh H. MacMillan, of the Detroit Free Press, praised Wilson for his unselfish devotion and his constant courtesy and kindness to newspapermen. Douglas Taylor, president of the American Association of Newspaper Representatives, lauded his thoughtfulness, helpfulness, and intelligent understanding of our interests. Roy V. Peel, former Director of the Census Bureau and now of the University of Utah, described Wilson as "indefatigable, ingenious, industrious—and incomparably the best information man in Washington." Letters in a similar vein came from such men as W. W. Waymack, editor of the Des Moines Register; Robert W. Burgess, Director of the Census; and Sinclair Weeks, Secretary of Commerce.

Perhaps the outstanding tribute was the following resolution adopted by the board of directors of the National Newspaper Promotion Association:

"Whereas Mr. Frank Wilson is retiring from his position as Director of Information for the United States Census Bureau thus terminating many years of valuable public service; and

"Whereas Mr. Wilson has contributed extensively to the promotion of newspaper advertising and circulation by his unexcelled cooperation in making available the services and statistics of the United States Census Bureau to newspapers, advertisers, and advertising agencies; and

"Whereas Mr. Wilson has on innumerable occasions personally participated in newspaper programs and meetings designed to enlighten newspaper promotion management concerning the availability and utilization of the valuable and factual data released by the United States Census Bureau: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the National Newspaper Promotion Association extend to Mr. Frank Wilson its highest expressions of gratitude and appreciation and in token of its esteem extend to him an honorary life membership that he may ever know of the high regard and affection in which he is held by all."

WILLIAM J. PETERSEN.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I have had inquiries from time to time about the manpower of the armed forces of the nations of the world. That sections 1 and 2 of Public Law 258, 83d Congress, approved August 13, 1953 (all 67 Stat. 566), be amended to read as follows:

"That any entryman on an unpatented farm unit on a Federal irrigation project which shall be found by the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to a land classification, to be insufficient to support a family shall be entitled, upon timely application to the Secretary to exchange his farm unit for another farm unit of unentered public land within the same or any other such project in the same State, or, upon terms and conditions satisfactory to the Secretary, for any other available farm unit on the same or any other such project in the same State. He shall be given credit under the homestead laws for residence, improvement, and cultivation made or performed upon the original entry, and if satisfactory final proof of residence, improvement, and cultivation has been made on the original entry it shall not be necessary to submit such proof upon the lieu entry. Rights under this act shall not be assignable.

"SEC. 2. The benefits of section 1 of this act shall, and those of the following sections may, be extended by the Secretary to (a) any lawful assignee of an unpatented farm unit on a Federal irrigation project who took the assignment in good faith not knowing and not having reason to believe the farm unit to be insufficient to support a family; and (b) any resident owner of private lands on any such project whose lands shall be found to be insufficient to support a family and (i) who, apart from his ownership of the lands to be conveyed pursuant to clause (iii) hereof and apart from his having previously exhausted his homestead right, if such be the case, is eligible to enter unappropriated public lands under Revised Statutes, section 2289, as amended (43 U. S. C. 161), (ii) who lawfully acquired his lands as an entire farm unit, and can show to the satisfaction of the Secretary that he has made reasonable and diligent efforts to bring those lands into a state of economically sufficient productivity, and (iii) who conveys, free from all encumbrances, to the United States all of his lands served by the project or such portion thereof as the Secretary may designate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 13, it is proposed to strike out

He shall be given credit under the homestead laws for residence, improvement, and cultivation made or performed upon the original entry,

And insert in lieu thereof

He shall establish residence on the exchange farm unit thus selected and perform thereon improvement and cultivation as may be required under Federal reclamation and homestead laws notwithstanding the fact that such requirements may have been performed in whole or in part on the insufficient unit relinquished to the United States.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill, as amended, is to alleviate, so far as practicable, the speculative abuses which have arisen in the settlement of public lands on reclamation projects and which have been brought to the attention of the committee. Previous legislation with respect to settlement has failed to authorize controls which are provided for in the amendment.

The amendment will provide curbs which are intended to prevent abuses which arise when an entryman transfers from a homestead which is submarginal to a more desirable homestead on a reclamation project. Heretofore many abuses have resulted because it has been possible for an entryman to claim a new homestead without the requirements of residence which applies to all homestead entries. It has been possible for an entryman to dispose of his new unit. This abuse should be curbed, and I am sure the amendment will accomplish that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2848, H. R. 8157.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8157) to provide for the burial in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., of the remains of an unknown American who lost his life while serving during the Korean conflict.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to provide legislative authority for the interment of an unknown American serviceman who lost his life while serving overseas during the Korean conflict.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of Defense, first, to return to the United States the remains of an American who lost his life while serving overseas in the Armed Forces of the United States during the Korean conflict and whose identity has not been established; and, second, to provide for the burial with appropriate ceremonies on Memorial Day, May 30, 1958, of this unknown American in the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., near or beside the remains of the Unknown Soldier of the First World War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSTALLATION OF RADIOTELEPHONE ON CERTAIN VESSELS

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 2846, H. R. 7536.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 15, after the word "Company", it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a comma and the word "and", and insert a new section as follows:

(3) vessels navigating on the Great Lakes.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, the amendment provides an exception for the Great Lakes fishing vessels. The operators of such vessels are very desirous of having the amendment included as an exception to the bill requiring ship-to-shore telephones.

The chairman of the committee has agreed to the amendment. He is not on the floor at the present time, but he has advised me that the amendment is satisfactory to him. The ships are never out of sight of land, and never out of hailing distance of another ship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Armed Services with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the President is authorized to advance Darrell C. Williams, now a lieutenant, United States Navy, retired, to the rank of lieutenant commander, United States Navy, on the retired list of the United States Navy, with the retired pay and allowances of that grade; but no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act, prior to its enactment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, pursuant to notice previously given, I move that the Senate stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

At 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m., the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. KENNEDY in the chair].

RECENT NOMINATION AND CONFIRMATION OF PAUL HOFFMAN

Mr. CLEMENTS obtained the floor.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLEMENTS. For what purpose does the Senator from Wisconsin desire me to yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I should like to make an insertion in the RECORD, and make a comment with respect to the insertion.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin for that purpose.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, one of the many reasons I advanced for opposing the appointment of Paul Hoffman as a delegate to the United Nations was that Hoffman, as the head of ECA, had been extremely derelict in his handling of a security case in his department involving one Theodore Geiger. Nothing has happened since the Senate debate on the Hoffman appointment that causes me to revise my judgment that Hoffman's handling of the Geiger case was irresponsible and that it indicates a contemptuous disregard on Hoffman's part, for our security program and for laws that are designed to protect this country against Communist subversion.

Information has come to my attention, however, that prompts me to reopen the subject of Theodore Geiger.

Mr. Geiger's attorney has brought to my attention what appears to be a sincere and candid account of Mr. Geiger's Communist past and of his subsequent rejection of communism. Since I have always believed that an avowed ex-Communist should have the fullest opportunity to make the record clear with respect to his conversion from communism, I have invited Mr. Geiger's attorney to set forth in a letter to me Mr. Geiger's version of this matter, on the understanding that I would insert the letter verbatim in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That letter has now been furnished to me, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 26, 1956.

Hon. JOSEPH R. McCARTHY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR McCARTHY: I am writing you on behalf of my client, Mr. Theodore Geiger. On July 11, you addressed the Senate on the question of the then impending nomination of Mr. Paul Hoffman as a delegate to the U. N. General Assembly. A part of your criticism of Mr. Hoffman related to his handling of the Geiger case when he was head of the Economic Cooperation Administration. Your remarks concerning Mr. Geiger give the impression that you have some serious doubt about his loyalty and integrity while he was employed by ECA, as well as about his present loyalty and integrity. I am sure you recognize that such doubts suggested by your remarks can adversely affect Mr. Geiger's reputation and his livelihood.

I have no doubt that you were completely sincere and forthright in your evaluation of Mr. Geiger's record based upon the information then in your possession. I also have no doubt that you were not aware of Mr. Geiger's words and deeds of the past 15 years which clearly and conclusively rebut any presumption, arising from his youthful mistake, that he may have been disloyal to the United States during the period of his Government service or that he is presently in any way sympathetic to alien philosophies or otherwise unreliable. I am confident that you will be interested to learn certain facts about Mr. Geiger which evidently were not before you at the time of your Senate address.

There is no question that Mr. Geiger was intellectually committed to communism in the late 1930's, but although he wanted to join the Communist Party and joined an organization thinking it was the party, he never actually became a member. The Hitler-Stalin Pact of 1939 shocked Mr. Geiger into the realization of the cynical, undemocratic nature of communism and Soviet imperialism. The result has been that since 1940 Mr. Geiger has had no sympathy whatever with any Communist or Communist-dominated organization or with any Communist, Marxist, or Socialist philosophy or movement.

Mr. Geiger's experience with the Communist movement in the 1930's led him to a strong anti-Communist position in the immediately succeeding years. Although he supported assistance to the Soviet Union during World War II in order to hasten defeat of the Axis Nations, he was even then seriously concerned about the growth of Russian military potential, and he was never under any illusions that the Soviet policy following the war would be one of friendship and peace. Unfortunately, Mr. Geiger's literary activities did not commence until 1947, so there is no published material on the basis of which you could verify Mr. Geiger's position during World War II. His friends and associates during the World War II period were, however, very much aware of his unequivocal anti-Communist and anti-Russian views. If you want to check this, I suggest you contact William Y. Elliot, of Harvard University, who knew Mr. Geiger during this period.

At the conclusion of his military service, Mr. Geiger was hired as an economist for the Foreign Economic Administration and was assigned to its London mission which became a part of the State Department when the FEA was abolished. In this position, Mr. Geiger played an exceptionally vigorous role in the development of policies designed to prevent Russian sabotage of the Western European recovery effort. The various memoranda and reports which he wrote during this period reflect that he was thoroughly aware of the Communist threat and of the necessity for vigorous affirmative action to combat it.

Mr. Geiger returned to the United States in June 1947 in order to obtain necessary medical care for his wife. In August 1947 he became staff consultant to the Select Committee on Foreign Aid of the House of Representatives. In this position, he took the lead in urging that Western European nations be required to provide for adequate self-help as a condition of American economic assistance under the then developing Marshall plan. In addition, he strongly urged adoption of three important policies:

1. Creation of a Western European military defense alliance (2 years before NATO);

2. Inclusion of West Germany in the Marshall plan;

3. Creation of a separate agency to administer the Marshall plan, rather than having the State Department do so as proposed by the Truman administration, with this new agency to be run by businessmen so that it would have the imagination, initiative, and business judgment necessary for an effective program of American aid.

Mr. Geiger was employed by the Economic Cooperation Administration from April 1948 until October 1950. In 1951 he joined the staff of the National Planning Association, and has been employed by that association since. As you know, the NPA is a private organization financed by contributions from business firms and private individuals. It is dedicated to encouraging effective private planning by American private enterprise so as to avoid a Government-imposed planned economy. Mr. Geiger wholeheartedly and enthusiastically shares the objective and orientation of the NPA.

In 1951, Mr. Geiger was coauthor of Making Western Europe Defensible. This book dealt with the nature and magnitude of the Soviet threat and included some enlightening discussion of Communist tactics. It pointed out that the major Communist objective has been and is to "demoralize, confuse, divide, and enfeeble the will to resist aggression," and that the Communists may be expected to switch their tactics from one extreme to the other in furtherance of this objective.

In 1952 Mr. Geiger was coeditor of the Manual of Corporate Giving. This book included a chapter written by Mr. Geiger entitled "Public Policy and the Five Percent." In this Mr. Geiger took sharp issue with the view that "government is alone capable of socially responsible conduct and hence must assume the role of deliberate regulator and organizer of all private actions affecting the community." He advocated, as an alternative to government paternalism, that governmental functions be limited to providing a balanced structure of order within which individual actions remain free and decentralized, and that private business institutions be encouraged to contribute funds to educational, scientific, and welfare projects in order to keep the government out of these fields.

In 1953 Mr. Geiger wrote a book entitled "Communism Versus Progress in Guatemala." In this report Mr. Geiger alerted the Western Hemisphere to the grave threat posed by Communist penetration in Guatemala long before the American public generally was aware of this situation. He pointed out that the Guatemalan Communist Party was "only a local agent of Soviet imperialism," and discussed in considerable detail the manner in which they were able to infiltrate positions of power and influence in Guatemala through a well-managed conspiracy.

In 1955 Mr. Geiger participated in an NPA study group which wrote a book entitled "The Political Economy of American Foreign Policy." (This book, incidentally, has been reviewed favorably in conservative publications such as National Review, and has been reviewed unfavorably in such liberal publications as the Reporter.) One chapter of this book, written by Mr. Geiger, illustrates clearly that Mr. Geiger is strongly opposed to communism for fundamental moral reasons, as well as on political and economic grounds. Mr. Geiger wrote:

"Soviet communism is more dangerous than nazism or fascism because it is less irrational in its appeal than the others and because its intrinsic immorality is artfully concealed in a utopian vision of perfect community and universal plenty. * * * But, at bottom, it, too, is only a myth, and those who seek to realize it in human history are also victims of a double corruption. The irrationality of their goal of anarchic freedom and perfect plenty—that is, its unattainability—makes it powerless to prevent the diversion of their energizing will to power into the pursuit of narrower and merely self-interested purposes. Their failure of moral judgment, which permits them to choose an irrational goal, is also responsible for their fanatical error of believing that any means may be justified in attempting to achieve their end—even those morally inconsistent with it."

Mr. Geiger deeply regrets one aspect of his record since his break with communism in 1940. He regrets that he did not come forward forthrightly at any early date to inform the FBI and other interested agencies that, although he had not actually been a member of the Communist Party, he was involved in the Communist movement in the late 1930's. Thus, when Mr. Hoffman defended him in 1949 and 1950, he did so without benefit of full disclosure of the pertinent facts by Mr. Geiger. Mr. Geiger rectified this deficiency by telling his entire story fully, cooperatively, and candidly to the FBI in 1954. He realized then and realizes now that it would have been in the national interest had he spoken at a much earlier date and that he would thereby have spared himself and others much heartache and embarrassment.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD P. GREEN.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, let me hasten to add that I am in no position to vouch for the accuracy of most of the points made in this letter. I have no way of checking them, save through a laborious investigation. I have no way of knowing, for example, whether Geiger actually belonged to the Communist Party in the 1930's as was stated under oath by Professor William Canning, or whether, as is now claimed by Geiger, he was a dedicated adherent of communism who joined a subsidiary Communist oragnization thinking it was the Communist Party itself. Nor do I think this apparent conflict is an important one: In any event, Geiger was a Communist at heart, and had belonged to an organization which disqualified him for employment by the ECA.

Likewise, I am unable to vouch for Geiger's statement that he did not disclose his Communist background to Hoffman. Assuming, however, that he did not do so, we are still left with the fact that Hoffman refused to investigate the Geiger case after sworn testimony had been brought to his personal attention which described the Communist background of one of his chief assistants. Therefore, my judgment of Hoffman's handling of the Geiger case stands as previously stated.

Nor, finally, do I have sufficient information to give a personal opinion as to when Geiger made a definite break with communism.

I am able to say, however, from the limited inquiry I have been able to make, that Geiger appears to have been a firm anti-Communist in recent years. I am personally satisfied that when Geiger was interviewed by the FBI in 1954, he cooperated fully with that organization in naming his past Communist associates. I have also been favorably impressed with several of Geiger's writings on the subject of communism in recent years. His statement, in a booklet entitled "Communism Versus Progress in Guatemala," written in 1953, that "It is important to scotch at the outset any notion that the Guatemalan Communists are merely agrarian reformers—as the Chinese Communists were once mistakenly thought to be—or that they are not connected with and dominated by the worldwide apparatus of Soviet communism" is one example that indicates a genuine conversion on his part. Moreover, in his 1951 book, "Making Western Europe Defensible," Mr. Geiger indicates a keen awareness of the danger to the West posed by Soviet imperialism. While I do not agree with many of Mr. Geiger's suggestions as to how to meet that threat, such disagreement has to do with tactics rather than with objectives.

I congratulate Mr. Geiger on what appears to be a sincere repentence for his Communist past.

CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF LAND AND WATER RESOURCES

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2732, Senate Resolution 281.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 281) relative to the conservation and development of land and water resources.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported jointly by the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs and Public Works with amendments, on page 2, line 5, after the word "the", to strike out "Federal Government" and insert "Congress"; on page 3, at the beginning of line 2, to strike out "not only"; in the same line, after the word "encourage", to strike out "but to participate in"; in line 3, after the word "resources", to strike out "for all purposes" and insert "to establish national policy pertaining thereto"; in line 4, after the word "that", to strike out "the continued" and insert "any"; in line 5, after the word "this", to strike out "fundamental and"; in line 6, after the word "long-established", to strike out "national policy" and insert "principle"; in line 25, after the word "the", where it occurs for the first time, to strike out "congressional committees having jurisdiction of the subject matter" and insert "Congress"; on page 4, line 9, after the word "the", to strike out "traditional"; in line 10, after the word "the", to strike out "settled administration of the large body of organic"; in line 13, after the word "after", to strike out "full examination and consideration" and insert "approval" and after line 14, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Committee on Public Works be, and they hereby are, directed jointly to study, in consultation with other appropriate committees and executive agencies, and to design and to formalize a comprehensive and particularized set of standards and overall criteria for the evaluation of all proposed projects for the conservation and development of land and water resources, including attention to the several specific factors recognized in section 4 of this resolution, all to the end that the Congress shall fully exercise its constitutional powers, as reflected throughout the text of this resolution. The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Committee on Public Works are hereby directed to submit to the Senate, as nearly as practicable during the first session of the 85th Congress, a detailed report with respect to their implementation of this section.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the stabilization of the national economy and the effectuation of the wisest, most orderly, and most economic utilization of the land and water resources of the Nation for the widest possible public benefit require that the Congress continue to exercise all of its constitutional powers to encourage the conservation and development of such resources, to establish national policy pertaining thereto, and that any nullification by the executive agencies of this long-established principle would constitute a usurpation of the legislative power.

SEC. 2. That land and water resources development should be planned in comprehensive bases and with a view to such an ultimately integrated operation of component segments as will insure the realization of an optimum degree of physical and economic efficiency.

SEC. 3. That the number of Federal agencies, offices, and organizations having to do with the planning and review of projects for the conservation and development of land and water resources should be reduced, rather than increased, and that technical and administrative routing and review procedures should be simplified and shortened in order to facilitate and to accelerate the submittal of reports to the Congress in support of requests for the authorization of projects.

SEC. 4. That reports to the Congress in support of requests for the authorization of projects for the conservation and development of land and water resources should include evaluations made in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Congress, and that they should fully disclose the details and results of all studies and analyses of all potential utilizations, costs, allocations, payout, and benefits, both direct and indirect, made by all interested operating agencies.

SEC. 5. That the preservation of the constitutional principle of separation of powers requires that any departure by the executive agencies from the observance and employment of the policies, standards, procedures, and techniques reflected in and growing out of the law governing the conservation and development of the land and water resources of the Nation be effected only after approval by the Congress.

SEC. 6. That the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Committee on Public Works be, and they hereby are, directed jointly to study, in consultation with other appropriate committees and executive agencies, and to design and to formalize a comprehensive and particularized set of standards and overall criteria for the evaluation of all proposed projects for the conservation and development of land and water resources, including attention to the several specific factors recognized in section 4 of this resolution, all to the end that the Congress shall fully exercise its constitutional powers, as reflected throughout the text of this resolution. The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Committee on Public Works are hereby directed to submit to the Senate, as nearly as practicable during the 1st session of the 85th Congress, a detailed report with respect to their implementation of this section.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs is present, and I am sure he will want to explain the resolution.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, Senate Resolution No. 281 is a first step toward securing for the Congress the type of information we require for adequate consideration of water-resource projects. The resolution in this respect speaks for itself in connection with the direction for the development on behalf of the Senate of a definitive plan to advise the executive agencies of the character of information that is to be presented with or without recommendation for authorizing legislation.

The study will be made jointly by the Committee on Public Works and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs during the coming recess, and the results will be presented as early as practicable during the 1st session of the 85th Congress. This study will be made in consultation with other committees of the Senate and House of Representatives concerned, as well as executive agencies that have responsibility for the development of water resources. It is the intention of the sponsors of the resolution that the study and the report shall be objective and constructive, with the sole view of getting essential data before the Congress in concrete, understandable form.

The second phase of the resolution is the caution to the executive agencies against attempting to infringe on legislative prerogatives by putting into effect policies and programs, without even giving the Congress opportunity to consider them. In reporting this phase of Senate Resolution 281, we had currently in mind the failure to send to the Congress recommendations for legislative action to implement the recommendations of the President's Water Policy Committee.

In our hearings on Senate Resolution 281 we had no adequate explanation of the failure to send up recommendations, as the President had stated would be done. Hints that the Executive proposed to proceed to implement the recommendations by administrative fiat led to an alert to the Congress and a caution to the executive agencies to watch, look, and listen.

We have been particularly concerned about the additional layering process in the executive agencies in handling water resource projects. Our two committees are agreed, I believe, that there is now sufficient overhauling, review, and rereview of project reports before these documents get to Congress. To add other layers between the working agencies and the Congress smacks of pyramiding blockades against a constructive program of water development that is so vital to the Nation's progress and permanent prosperity.

The resolution, as amended, together with a comprehensive analysis, is printed in full in report No. 2686. Therefore, I shall avoid a further detailed discussion of the preamble and purpose.

Mr. President, I desire to express my appreciation of the cooperation of Members on both sides of the aisle, of both the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Committee on Public Works. The unanimity of support for the proposals set forth requires that we approach the task we have recommended in a constructive manner, which we can assure the Senate we will do.

I now yield to the distinguished chairman of the Public Works Committee, whose cooperation with that of his colleagues has been most helpful in bringing to the Senate floor this constructive proposal.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I am glad to agree with my friend, the Senator from Montana; and I do so on the basis of the hearings and the information obtained there. I also wish to concur in the committee's recommendations regarding this resolution. I do so with the greatest confidence in the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the distinguished minority leader has a statement by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HRUSKA] to be placed in the RECORD?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HRUSKA], I ask unanimous nonsent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement by him on this resolution.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HRUSKA

The principal objectives of this resolution are found stated in essence in section 6, which declares that the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs and on Public Works jointly study with other appropriate committees, standards and overall criteria for the evaluation of all proposed projects for the conservation and development of land and water resources, and to design a comprehensive and authorized set of standards and overall criteria therefor.

Exception has been taken by some to some of the criteria which have been applied to projects submitted to operating agencies and to the Bureau of the Budget for their evaluation and report.

In order to fully understand the procedures whereby such reports are required and recommendations made thereon, it is well to consider the following:

Since 1943, under Executive Order 9384, the Bureau of the Budget has conducted a review of project reports on behalf of the President. This is in the interest of orderly operation of the executive branch. Such review is in recognition of the fact that such projects are a part of the Presidential program. It gives the President a chance to tell Congress whether a given project is consistent with the overall President's program, including fiscal policies. It informs Congress of any views or objections or modifications which the President may have regarding the subject project.

This review is made after the operating agency has worked out studies, plans, estimates, and details on the project.

There is a need for standards and criteria by which executive departments and agencies can be guided in preparing recommendations and reports.

This need arises because Congress often requires of an operating agency certain determinations and recommendations without setting out any criteria or even guideposts for its use. One of the latest examples of this is found in H. R. 8750, amending the Watershed and Flood Prevention Act (Public Law 566—83d Cong.) as acted upon by the Senate on July 20, 1956. In that bill, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized "to prepare plans and estimates required for adequate engineering evaluations; to make allocations of costs to the various purposes to show the basis of such allocations, and to determine whether benefits exceed costs."

Yet the procedures, standards, and methods by which these things can be accomplished are not specified in the law. Obviously someone must prepare them for use by the Secretary of Agriculture and his appropriate agencies.

If Congress fails to act in this regard as it did in this particular instance, and many, many other instances, the need can be filled by the operating agency itself, or by the Bureau of the Budget, which is the agency for presenting overall views and approaches of the executive department.

To meet just such needs the Bureau of the Budget under President Truman issued on December 31, 1952, Budget Circular A–47, setting forth standards and procedures for the review of proposed Federal water and related land resources programs and projects.

As I understand it, the use of such general standards by the executive branch in the review of project reports does not determine the recommendations of operating agencies to the Congress regarding authorization of projects. That circular does not in any way change any of the requirements of existing law. In fact, there is express provision bearing on this very point, as stated in paragraph 4 of Circular A–47, in this language:

"The standards and procedures set forth in this circular shall not be regarded as authorizing any deviation from general or specific requirements of law."

Actions taken by the Bureau of the Budget under Circular A–47, therefore, are presentations of information and recommendations to the Congress by that agency on behalf of the President. The Congress, of course, in its action on legislation makes the final decisions on authorizations of projects.

That Congress has not been inhibited in the slightest by such recommendations, and even by its own policy with reference to some requirements for procedures is found in the omnibus bill for rivers and harbors and flood prevention projects which is currently pending in the Senate. In the bill H. R. 12080 as approved by the House, about one-fourth of the projects included therein had not even been processed through the Bureau of the Budget, and in fact the Bureau of the Budget had not received any reports thereon from the operating agencies. In those projects in the Senate Committee on Public Works projects for which no report had been received by the Bureau of the Budget as of the date of consideration thereof by the committee numbered about 18 or 20. In fact, in several instances there were not even any reports by the Corps of Engineers or any district or division thereof, and the projects were approved.

This is commented on to demonstrate that the Congress is the final and ultimate authority and that it exercises that authority in its own discretion and within its legitimate powers.

It is submitted that if the Congress is dissatisfied with the standards used by operating agencies or by the Bureau of the Budget, the remedy lies in prescribing such standards as the Congress itself may consider desirable. It is submitted that dissatisfaction with those standards should not serve as a basis for criticism of the agencies which use them so long as there is no congressional directive forbidding their use or required use of other standards. In short, the remedy lies with Congress.

To the extent that the attending resolution calls for the preparation of such standards with a direction that they be used in applicable cases, I can find no fault with it.

On the other hand, if there is displeasure by any Member of Congress with the use of such standards by the operating agencies or by the Bureau of the Budget, that displeasure should not be visited upon those agencies by way of criticism.

It should be remembered that when projects are referred to agencies for study and analysis it does not necessarily follow that a favorable report must be rendered thereon. Such a view would be prejudging the application, and would make totally unnecessary reference for recommendation. The purpose of referring such applications is to have the agencies furnish the Congress with sufficient data and information upon which Congress may then base decision to approve the application and authorize the project.

In short, if there is any fault to be found in the present situation, Congress in all fairness, should look to itself for its part in creating it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENNEDY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 281), as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas on January 17, 1956, the President of the United States transmitted to the Congress the report (H. Doc. No. 315, 84th Cong., 2d sess.) of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Water Resources Policy, consisting of the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, designated by the President May 26, 1954, with a recommendation that "* * * the Congress give prompt attention to its proposals"; and

Whereas it is stated, at page 84 of the Economic Report of the President, transmitted to the Congress January 24, 1956, that "in due course, legislative proposals will be submitted to implement the recommendations" of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Water Resources Policy, but no such proposals have yet been submitted to the Congress and instead it is indirected that the recommendations may be implemented by direct action of the executive agencies; and

Whereas notwithstanding that the conditions recited in this resolution result by reason of policies or actions under more than one national administration and by more than one branch and department of the Federal Government, it is desirable that this Congress initiate proper corrective action: Now, therefore, be it.

AUTHORIZATION TO PRINT REVIEW OF THE COPYRIGHT LAW AND JUKEBOXES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, by authority of the Judiciary Committee, and after consultation with the leadership on both sides, I ask unanimous consent that a document constituting a review of the evidence relating to the copyright law, as it applies to jukeboxes, in connection with Senate bill 590, relating to the rendition of musical compositions on coin-operated machines, which document is now in preparation, may be printed following the adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION TO PRINT STAFF REPORTS ON ANTITRUST AND MONOPOLY

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the staff reports of the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly, of the Committee on the Judiciary, on the hearings which were held during the year, and which now are in course of preparation, may be printed following the adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE ADMIRALS OF FORT BENTON

Mr. MURRAY obtained the floor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I am delighted that my distinguished senior colleague has yielded to me at this time, because I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Montana can proudly claim its fair share of prominent contemporary military leaders, but

I sincerely doubt that few communities can meet the record of Fort Benton, Mont.

No less than four admirals, now serving or having served in the United States Navy during World War II, have spent a part of their earlier years in Fort Benton. I refer to Adm. John Hoover, retired; Rear Adm. Ulysses S. Grant Sharp; Rear Adm. G. C. Towner; and Rear Adm. L. D. Sharp, retired. All four have lived in this small town on the Missouri River. In addition, Fort Benton boasts about its brigadier general, R. W. Curtis, who is serving in the United States Army; and Col. Karl Louther, of the United States Marine Corps.

The reason that I make note of this record on the Senate floor is that Fort Benton is a small inland town of only 1,200 to 1,500 population.

Fort Benton's naval record dates back to the late 1800's when it was the head of the navigation on the Missouri River, in the fur-trading days.

The people of Fort Benton have made a fine contribution to the armed services of the Nation, as have all the other towns and cities in the State of Montana.

I ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the Montana Farmer Stockman, reprinted in the July 20, 1956, issue of the Miles City Star, of Miles City, Mont., be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Miles City Star of July 20, 1956]

THE ADMIRALS OF FORT BENTON

Many Montanans know that Adm. John Hoover (retired) of the United States Navy who was in charge of important naval forces in numerous engagements of World War II, grew up in Fort Benton, Mont. But not many know that three other admirals of the Navy with exceptionally fine service records also came from this little town on the Missouri.

On a recent naval tour in the Pacific the writer, while chatting with Rear Adm. Ulysses S. Grant Sharp one day, remarked that Admiral Hoover came from Fort Benton. "Yes, that's right," replied Admiral Sharp, adding that he too used to live in Fort Benton.

Admiral Sharp then went on to say that Rear Adm. G. C. Towner and Rear Adm. L. D. Sharp (retired) also came from Fort Benton. And he reminded us that Brig. Gen. R. W. Curtis of the United States Army and Col. Karl Louther of the United States Marine Corps came from Fort Benton.

Since its early pioneering days, many other young men from Fort Benton and its surrounding rural territory have served in the various branches of the armed services, as have men from all other Montana communities.

But we doubt whether any other town of 1,200 to 1,500 population in the United States has produced 4 admirals. Perhaps that is not so surprising a record for an inland town as it might seem. After all, Fort Benton used to be the head of navigation on the Missouri in the old fur-trading days and for a good many years thereafter.—MONTANA FARMER STOCKMAN.

THE CONFERENCE REPORT ON THE CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT BILL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, good news has come to the Nation's postal workers and to our other Federal employees. It had been feared that in Congress' rush to adjourn, this crucial retirement bill might have been lost.

But now it is a source of gratification to us of the Congress who have been interested in employees' welfare, yes, a source of gratification to vast numbers of civil-service retirees, their loved ones and dependents, that the Senate-House Conference Committee has at last reached agreement on the bill to liberalize civil-service annuities.

I have previously spoken on the floor on the importance of this issue.

I believe that those who have served this Nation faithfully are entitled to justice in their later years. That goes for the elderly letter carrier, whose problems I recently discussed with Bill Doherty, able president of the National Association of Letter Carriers. It goes, as well, for the retired employee of the Veterans' Administration, or the Defense Department, or the Department of Agriculture or any other individual who has served with honor in the civil service of our country.

INFLATION HAS DEPRECIATED THE DOLLAR

Too often, however, we have found that those who have served 25, 30, or more years, find in their later years that their meager civil-service retirement pension has been almost wiped out by the rise in the cost of living. Thus, too often, inflation has made a mockery of the benefits to which the civil service worker, himself, has patiently and hopefully contributed for years and years.

Of course, today, July 26, in the final hours of negotiation on this and other bills, inevitably a certain number of features of this bill have, unfortunately, been dropped, although we might have preferred to have them included.

The final version of the retirement plan is by no means as liberal, in several respects, as we might have hoped. Some good features of S. 2875 have, regrettably, been lost, as the House of Representatives conferees fought for their version. Rather than see the entire bill die, however, I urge enactment of the compromise.

REASONS FOR THIS BILL

Let the compromise, however, not be regarded as a so-called "last word" or as a conclusive meeting of this problem. Additional changes will, no doubt, prove necessary. Such changes should be made next year, when more time for study and agreement will be available.

Recently, a group of civil-service workers in La Crosse wrote to me outlining some meritorious reasons for enactment of S. 2875, the bill which originally had been advanced by our good friend from South Carolina, Senator JOHNSTON. I am taking the liberty of enumerating some of their reasons:

First. Congress and Federal employees have long recognized the need for a complete revamping of the retirement system, and this has been reflected in the numerous bills introduced during the recent sessions to amend the Retirement Act.

Second. To correct inequities existing that have developed as a result of piecemeal legislation.

Third. To provide greater incentive for career employees, particularly in scientific fields and engineering. The turnover of Government employees in the professional services is largely due to more rapid advancement and opportunities in private industry.

Fourth. To provide many long-justified and highly desirable liberalized features to meet the ever-increasing cost of living.

As an indication of the sentiment of the other civil-service organizations of my State, I send to the desk excerpts from many messages which I have received from these groups.

Down through the years, on many occasions, I have met with these organizations with our faithful postal workers, with our mail carriers on city routes and rural routes, with members of the National Federations of Federal Employees, the National Association of Retired Civil Service Employees, the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, and others. They represent a grand group of Americans.

I ask unanimous consent that these excerpts be printed at this point in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS,
Green Bay, Wis., July 24, 1956.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: I received your telegram today and wish to thank you for the help you have given the postal clerks on S. 2875. We hope you will support S. 2875 for it is far superior to the House version. We also feel that 6 percent employee deduction is great plenty even with the increased benefits. In the years 1921 to 1928 (fiscal) the Government did not contribute 1 cent toward our fund, the employees contributed $425 million by 1954 (fiscal) the Government only $33 million. We feel if the Government made its full share of the contributions in the fund there would be no need for a 7 percent employee deduction.

Thank you again for your cooperation.

Respectfully,
HERBERT VAN HOUT,
Legislative Representative, Local No. 2247.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYES' COUNCIL,
Washington, D. C., April 27, 1956.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WILEY: Representing the more than 600,000 members who are affiliated with the Government Employes' Council, I wish to advise you that we are vigorously supporting S. 2875, the Johnston civil service retirement bill, and I urge that you give this most important bill your wholehearted support.

Private industry has made great strides in improving their pension plans. The improved standard of living makes it imperative that the Government do likewise.

The Government employees have paid more into the Civil Service retirement fund to date than the fund has paid out. Despite that fact, we are willing to go along with the one percent increase in the contribution rate provided for in S. 2875. The estimated cost to the Government of S. 2875, as figured by Chairman Philip Young of the Civil Service Commission, is $259 million.

The officers, delegates, and member unions of the Government Employes' Council, representing approximately 600,000 Federal employees, respectfully ask that you wholeheartedly and most actively support S. 2875, and we urge you to contact the leaders of the Senate to secure early consideration of S. 2875.

Most sincerely,
THOMAS G. WALTERS,
Operations Director, GEC/AFL-CIO.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS,
Green Bay, Wis., May 2, 1956.

Hon. Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: Bill S. 2875 has now been reported by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. As of now our retirement program has many defects which this bill will correct.

We urge you to support this bill in any way you can, this bill has long been overdue and is badly needed now.

Thank you for past consideration on our problems.

Respectfully,
HERBERT VAN HOUT,
Legislative Representative, Local No. 2247.

RACINE, WIS., April 23, 1956.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the Racine, Kenosha County rural mail carriers, I wish to ask you to vote in favor of S. 2875, a bill to improve the civil-service retirement system.

We believe it is necessary because of the increased economy of the country. Our present system does not provide an adequate living. If it were bettered and the age reduced, the Government would receive a better performance of duty due to the feeling of security it would give to the employee. We all know that if we feel free and secure we can do more with greater ease.

It is doubtful if many carriers would retire under age 60, but it would be nice to know that you would be free to do so should it become necessary. Illness in one's family sometimes necessitates a change in climate and works a definite hardship upon a man who has spent many years in his work; but who because of inadequacies in our present pension law, cannot retire.

We believe that the Johnston bill, if passed, would eliminate many of our difficulties.

Thank you for any assistance you can give.

Very truly yours,
L. G. POWELL,
President, Racine Kenosha Rural Letter Carriers Association.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: I received information today that the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee by a unanimous vote on Thursday, April 12, 1956, reported out S. 2875, the Johnson retirement bill for postal employees.

You, no doubt, know the provisions of this bill, which liberalize the retirement benefits for letter carriers.

I am sure you will agree that this is a good bill, and I will appreciate your favorable support when it comes up for action on the floor of the Senate.

Thanking you in advance for your support of this bill, I am,

EXEMPTION OF NAVY DEPARTMENT FROM CERTAIN REIMBURSEMENT PAYMENT

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2826, House bill 7728.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7728 to provide that the Department of the Navy shall not be required to reimburse the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the transfer of certain real property at Columbus, Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, this measure would ratify and approve the transfer of certain real property, without reimbursement, from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Department of the Navy, which transfer was effected by quitclaim deed on March 29, 1951. The measure also affirmatively provides that the Department of the Navy is relieved from any obligation to compensate RFC for the property transferred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am delighted, as always, to yield to my friend, the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Was the bill before the committee?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Yes, the bill was before the Committee on Government Operations.

Mr. LANGER. Was it unanimously approved by the committee?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I see the chairman of the committee is present. I will ask him whether or not the bill was unanimously approved by the committee.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It was.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am informed by the chairman that the report was unanimous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 7728) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLACING OF MINOR CHILDREN FOR PERMANENT FREE CARE OR FOR ADOPTION

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 2840, Senate bill 3021.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3021) to amend title 18, United States Code, to make unlawful certain practices in connection with the placing of minor children for permanent free care or for adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That title 18 of the United States Code is amended by inserting at the end of chapter 53 a new chapter as follows:

"CHAPTER 54—INTERSTATE PLACEMENT OF CHILDREN FOR PERMANENT FREE CARE OR FOR ADOPTION

"Sec.
"1180. Placing child for permanent care or for adoption.
"1181. Placing child for permanent free care or for adoption for compensation.
"1182. Coercion or enticement of parent.
"1183. Definitions.

"§ 1180. Placing child for permanent free care or for adoption

"(a) No person, firm, corporation, association, or agency, either alone or through any agent or employee or other person, in any manner whatsoever, shall place, arrange for, or assist in arranging for the placement of any child for permanent free care or adoption in any home other than the home of a relative within the third degree of such child, under circumstances requiring or resulting in such child being transported in interstate commerce, unless such placement—

"(1) (A) has received the prior approval in writing of the public department responsible for child-welfare activities in the State in which the prospective foster or adopting parents resided at the time of placement, and (B) such approval is certified as having been given after an investigation has been made by the said public department or any licensed or authorized child-care agency in the State, selected by the said public department. The investigation shall be made of the circumstances surrounding said proposed placement (including the home environment of the prospective foster or adopting parents, the suitability of the prospective foster or adoptive parents for the particular child and whether such placement is in the best interests of the child). Such investigation shall include a study conducted by the public department of the State from which the child is placed. This study shall cover the background of the child and a determination that the child is legally free for adoption; or

"(2) is made by a child-care or adoption agency, licensed or authorized to place children for adoption;

"(3) is made after receipt by the foster or adoptive parents of a statement in writing from a public or private agency licensed or authorized to place children, asserting that the placement is in the best interests of the child, and that that investigating agency has taken into consideration the home environment of the foster or adoptive couple, and the suitability of the prospective foster or adoptive parents for the particular child. This provision shall only apply when the public department responsible for child-welfare activities in the State in which the prospective foster or adopting parents are domiciled or reside immediately at the time placement is made, has no statutory obligation to supervise, control, or regulate the importation of children.

"(b) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to supersede the act entitled 'An act to regulate the placing of children in family homes and for other purposes,' approved April 22, 1944 (58 Stat. 193; D. C. Code, title 32, ch. 7b). In the event there is a conflict between this section and the act entitled 'An act to regulate the placing of children in family homes and for other purposes, approved April 22, 1944 (58 Stat. 193; D. C. Code, title 32, ch. 7b), the provisions of the later shall prevail.

"(c) Whoever violates the provisions of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 3 years or both.

"§ 1118. Placing child for permanent free care or for adoption for compensation

"(a) Whoever, either by himself or through any agent or employee, or other person, directly or indirectly, solicits, collects, or receives any money or any other thing of value, or the promise thereof, in any manner whatsoever, for placing, or arranging for, or assisting in arranging for, the placement of any child in any home for permanent free care or adoption, under circumstances requiring or resulting in such child being transported in interstate commerce, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply in the case of money received or paid to a child-care or adoption agency in any State, either public or private, which is authorized or licensed by said State to provide permanent care for children or to place for adoption, as reimbursement for the reasonable and proper expenses of providing services by said agency. This shall not in any way interfere with the rights of an attorney to obtain a fee for services rendered directly in connection with the obtaining of an adoption decree.

"§ 1182. Coercion or enticement of parent

"Whoever, by himself or through any agent or employee or other person, whether in return for the payment or receipt of money or anything of value, or without any such payment or receipt, in any manner whatsoever persuades, induces, coerces, or arranges for a parent of a child (including a child en ventre so mere) to travel from or to another place in interstate commerce to place said child for permanent free care or adoption when the placement is made or will be made in return for the payment of money or anything of value, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"This provision shall not interfere in any manner with arrangements made by licensed or authorized maternity homes or shelters to arrange for the transportation of a natural mother from one State to another.

"§ 1183. Definitions

"As used in this chapter—

"(a) The term 'child' means any individual who has not attained the age of 16 years.

"(b) The term 'interstate commerce' means transportation of persons or property between one State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, and another State, Territory, possession, the District of Columbia, or with a foreign country.

"(c) The term 'permanent free care' means the care given to any child on a permanent basis by any person who is not receiving compensation therefor, and is not related to the child, but such term does not include the free care provided to any child by any licensed or authorized child-care agency or juvenile court."

SEC. 2. (a) The analysis of part I of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by inserting after—

"53. Indians ..... 1151"

the following:

"54. Interstate placement of children for permanent free care or for adoption ..... 1180".

(b) That part of the index to title 18 of the United States Code which describes the contents of part I of such title, is amended by inserting after—

"53. Indians ..... 1151"

the following:

"54. Interstate placement of children for permanent free care or for adoption ..... 1180".

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] wishes to make a statement on Senate bill 3021.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement concerning the background of S. 3021, a bill to make criminal the commercialized interstate placement of children, which was reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary and filed by me yesterday. This bill is the result of an intensive national 15-month investigation conducted by the Senate Subcommittee To Investigate Juvenile Delinquency, of which I am chairman, into the interstate "baby-selling" business.

The subcommittee held hearings in Miami, Chicago, and Washington, D. C., at which 89 witnesses testified, many of whom were engaged in the interstate baby racket. In addition, over 2,000 persons, half of whom were adoptive couples or natural parents who had had direct dealings with black market baby operators, were interviewed by the staff of the subcommittee in all sections of the United States.

The result of the overall investigation was to establish the existence of a large-scale interstate commercial traffic in children being placed for adoption, in which it is estimated that more than $15 million passes hands each year. A shocking development was the uncovering of positive evidence that the underworld has started to invade this field and that known racketeers are soliciting unmarried mothers in an effort to secure their children for the baby black market. A typical example of this type of activity involved William Manella, a Chicago racketeer with a long criminal record, who was found to be traveling throughout the United States inducing mothers to go to Chicago where their children were sold by professional baby brokers for fees ranging from $3,000 to $3,200.

Approximately 90,000 adoptions occur each year in the United States, of which about 25,000 are arranged by unauthorized persons without the benefit of proper safeguards. Many of these 25,000 children are placed across State lines for sums of money varying from $1,000 to $10,000. Because of the lack of a Federal law against interstate "baby-selling", no effective criminal action can be taken by the Federal Government. Thirty-three States, as well, do not prohibit the sale of children.

These situations are not isolated or localized in any one part of the country. Testimony was heard concerning a group engaged in shuttling babies in assembly-belt fashion between Miami, Fla., and New York for $1,500 to $2,500 per child. Professional couriers were utilized to transport the children by air into New York.

Testimony was also given with respect to a north Texas woman with a record of 27 arrests and 7 felony convictions, who was operating a large-scale interstate baby-selling business. Soliciting the unmarried mothers and adoptive parents by means of advertisements in Oklahoma City newspapers, her activities were curtailed only when two automatic guns were found in her maternity home. The sheriff from this community in north Texas testified that the only action that could be taken with respect to the interstate baby-selling activities of this woman was to charge her with operating an unlicensed commercial maternity home, for which she received a small fine.

At the same hearing, testimony was heard concerning a Duluth, Minn., abortionist, who had a working arrangement with a Chicago attorney, by which children were placed throughout the United States. The mothers of these children were contacted by the abortionist in Duluth and referred to the attorney, who received from $2,000 to $3,000 per child placed. The grand jury in St. Paul, Minn., heard witnesses with respect to this case and found that although there was positive proof of children being sold across State lines, they were unable to take any affirmative action because there was no Federal law to meet this problem. As a result of this situation, Senator THYE, who has played a very active role in this investigation, introduced S. 1123, which has the same objectives as the bill under discussion. S. 3021 is an enlargement of Senator THYE's bill, and he, Senator WILEY, and Senator LANGER are cosponsors of this measure.

At the hearings conducted in Miami, Fla., it was established that a juvenile court judge in Augusta, Ga., and his probation officer, both of whom have since resigned, had been engaged in exploiting their official positions and placing children in an unconscionable manner for over 18 years. Many of the children were sent by airplane to New York, Chicago, and Hollywood in exchange for a fee which was personally retained by the judge. A steady supply of children was made available as a result of the judge's bringing a large number of unwarranted charges of unfitness against natural parents.

The existence of a substantial baby traffic was uncovered by the subcommittee in Phenix City, Ala., which flourished at the time that the National Guard was required to take control of the city. The physician and his wife who operated this traffic had on one occasion placed a child with Clarence O. Revel, reputedly the boss of the Phenix City underworld.

The first problem the subcommittee explored was to determine whether the States could control commercialized baby placement. Law enforcement officials reported from all sections of the country that due to the interstate nature of the activity that they were unable to cope with the problem on a State level. The State's Attorney of Cook County, Ill., Judge John Gutknecht, testified that although Illinois had passed a law against baby selling in July of 1955, he had found that when children went across State lines the prosecuting office of Cook County was unable to take effective action. The proposed statute does not in any way interfere with the rights of the States to grant adoption decrees, nor is it in conflict with any of the State laws regarding the placement of children. It simply makes criminal, actions which are at present, for all practical purposes, beyond the effective control of the States.

The proposed statute specifically exempts from its operation the activities of licensed or authorized adoption agencies making both intrastate and interstate placements of children. Nor does the statute interfere with the rights of doctors and lawyers to receive legitimate medical and legal fees.

Section 1181 makes criminal interstate baby selling and provides a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 1182 makes criminal the interstate solicitation of unmarried mothers when the solicitation is for the purpose of placing their children for profit.

Section 1180 requires that when a child is to be placed for adoption across State lines by a private individual a study must be made by the Department of Public Welfare before the placement can be made in the adoptive home. Under present conditions, the first study made of the adoptive home frequently occurs 6 months to a year after the placement, at a time when it is impossible to take any effective action if it is found that the adoptive home is not suitable. This section merely provides a safeguard against careless placement practices and procedures. The mechanics of this section have been carefully worked out with the cooperation of the departments of public welfare of the various States who are in uniform approval and have stated that they are prepared to implement the procedure if the statute is passed.

This bill has widespread support among public and private adoption agencies throughout the United States. The Children's Bureau of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is affirmatively supporting sections of the bill relating to the placement of children for compensation.

In the past 10 years, the demand for children in the United States has increased so that at present there are 10 adoptive couples waiting for every available child. This is a healthy and happy development. Unfortunately, the inequality between the supply and demand has resulted in the development of the interstate "baby-selling" racket. It is my opinion that the present statute will go a long way toward eliminating those unscrupulous individuals who are exploiting this situation. In turn, many more children will be made available for placement through authorized adoption agencies.

The transfer of illicitly obtained property across State lines is subject to Federal penal action. It is only elementary justice that we afford the same measure of protection to children being placed across State lines.

Over 500,000 children will be placed for adoption in the United States in the next 5 years. It is our duty to give these children every opportunity to be placed in suitable homes. I, therefore, strongly urge the passage of Senate bill 3021 as a means of eliminating the professional baby racketeer from the American scene.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] has worked hard on this matter, as have the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY,] who have been very much interested in it.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. In reference to the bill which the distinguished Senator from Tennessee is now discussing, I became interested in this subject when I learned, through our own district attorneys in Minnesota, something about the traffic in babies sent into other States for the purpose of adoption. If some young unmarried woman were so unfortunate as to be expecting a child, often those who were interested in trying to obtain the child for adoption would advise the girl where to go, and the hospital bill would be paid. The child would be taken from her. The child would be placed for adoption. The mother would not know where the child was, or to whom it was given.

Many weeks would pass after the birth of the child. The mother, realizing what she had done, found herself the most unhappy, heartbroken person one could imagine. She would have given almost her own body to have recovered the child; but the child was lost to her.

Because of what I learned concerning this traffic I introduced a bill, and later the distinguished Senator from Tennessee and the distinguished Senator from North Dakota introduced bills. We finally combined the ideas of all three bills into one general bill.

If there ever was need for the enactment of a legislative measure, it is needed in this instance to wipe out this hideous traffic.

Can Senators imagine anything more deplorable or heartrending than the situation of a young unmarried girl in her teens who finds herself expecting a child, and does not know what to do? Someone comes to her and says, "If you will place yourself in my care, I will see that your hospital bill is paid and that you are taken care of. You will not have to disclose your misfortune to your friends."

Naturally, in her bewilderment, she would surrender to such promises. But when everything was over the child would be gone, and she would come to the full realization of what she had done. It would then be too late.

Those are some of the things which I learned as I investigated the question and became familiar with the problem through consultations with those in our own district attorney's office. That led me to attend the hearings which the Senator from Tennessee was conducting in Chicago, where he was obtaining information as to the illegal traffic in illegitimate children, and the illegal practice of inducing an expectant mother to go to some distant city to have her child and then surrender the child to someone who had no purpose except to sell that flesh and blood for a few measly dollars. We should enact legislation in order to put a stop to this racket.

I commend the Senator for the hearings he conducted so ably across the country to develop the information concerning this type of operation.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I shall be glad to yield in a moment. First I wish to thank the Senator from Minnesota for his contribution. It was he who first developed what was going on in this racket that we found all over the country. I now yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I merely wish to say I hope the bill will pass. I am sure it will put an end to one of the most despicable rackets we have ever witnessed in this country. Our staff has estimated that each year approximately 25,000 babies are sold on the black market. In Chicago, for example, we found that women who had been in the penitentiary, not once, but several times, were operating houses, some of them very close to Chicago, where they were taking orders from shyster lawyers in the city of Chicago, for example. These women would get a certain amount of money, and the lawyers would charge anywhere from $2,500 to $5,000 for a baby. We had such lawyers before our committee. Some of them pleaded immunity under the Constitution. However, we did succeed in getting evidence which pretty well established the racket.

We first heard of the racket when Judge Donohou in St. Paul, Minn., made a scathing denouncement of a man he sentenced to the penitentiary for having violated a State law which prohibits this practice. I am sure that the bill, if enacted into law, will prevent the taking of black-market babies across State lines and will prevent conspiracies for that purpose. I cannot recommend too highly the passage of this bill.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, on page 9, line 16, of the committee amendment there is a typographical error. I ask that the figure "1118" be stricken and the figure "1181" be substituted therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF SAFETY FUNCTIONS

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2842, S. 3517.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3517) to provide for the reorganization of the safety functions of the Federal Government, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Government Operations with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

The Department of Labor shall include in its annual budget estimates a request for an appropriation in an amount equal to such premium cost and shall, as soon as practicable after the beginning of each fiscal year, deposit in the Federal Employees' Compensation Fund of the Bureau of Employees' Compensation such sums as may have been appropriated pursuant to such request, for the payment of benefits from such fund on account of the employees of the Federal agencies. Any sums so deposited shall remain available in such fund until expended.

(2) The term "incurred loss" means the amount of loss, paid and outstanding, for which the Federal Employees' Compensation Fund of the Bureau of Employees' Compensation has become liable during the preceding fiscal year.

BUDGET ESTIMATES FOR SAFETY PROGRAMS

SEC. 9. The head of each Federal agency, after receipt of the recommendations by the Department of Labor of the amount determined to be necessary to enable such agency to carry out its safety educational programs to minimize hazardous work practices and conditions, shall include in the annual budget estimates of such agency an amount equal to at least the amount so recommended, unless the head of such agency determines that the inclusion of such amount is inadvisable and forwards to the Secretary of Labor and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget a written report stating the reasons why such inclusion has been deemed inadvisable.

SEC. 11. Section 33 (c) of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act is hereby repealed.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 12. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, S. 3517, as amended by the committee, is designed to reduce the Federal employee-accident rate and the cost of accidents in Federal employment, both financially and in terms of human suffering, by providing for the promotion and establishment of improved safety educational programs and new safety inspection procedures.

The bill seeks to accomplish this objective by creating within the Department of Labor a Federal Safety Division, which would be responsible, under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Labor, for the direction and coordination of all safety educational programs and related loss-prevention procedures conducted by the various Federal agencies in furtherance of existing legislation to encourage safety and accident prevention, and for all of the functions now vested in the Federal Safety Council.

The bill was considered very carefully in committee, and the committee amendment is the result of hearings, and it embodies the suggestions which were made by both the majority and minority members. I believe that is an adequate explanation of the bill and of its purposes and objectives, and I ask for its approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENNEDY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASED FREIGHT RATES, 1956

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, as Senators know, all of the railroads operating in interstate commerce in the United States filed on December 20, 1955, certain tariffs to become effective February 25, 1956, providing for a general increase of 7 percent in interstate freight rates and charges. This filing was under a special permission granted by that Commission and the case was presented by the carriers upon affidavits and the only public hearing held in connection with the application was one conducted before Division 2 of the Commission for the sole purpose of cross-examining the witnesses who had filed verified statements.

A cooperating Committee of State Commissioners, composed of Wendell Tennis, of the Indiana Public Service Commission; Fred W. Clayton, of the Nevada Public Service Commission; and Hammond Fowler, of the Tennessee Public Service Commission, sat with Division 2 of the Interstate Commerce Commission during the cross-examination, and with the full commission during the presentation of oral arguments of counsel, which was held on last February 20, 21, and 22.

On March 2, 1956, the Interstate Commerce Commission issued an order in the case, known as Ex Parte 196, which in substance granted a general increase of 6 percent with certain exceptions. The Cooperating Committee of State Commissioners disagreed. The committee decided unanimously that a further and fuller statement of their views in disagreement should be prepared and requested that this fuller presentation be printed in the report to be issued by the ICC containing its findings and conclusions on which the March 2 order had been based. Despite repeated efforts by Mr. Fowler, who was named by the Cooperating Committee of State Commissioners, to accomplish this, only a very abbreviated version of the State Commissioners objections was published, in a report otherwise some 120 pages long.

Mr. President, I think in their report the State commissioners presented some serious and valid arguments, worthy of publication and of knowledge not only of Congress but of the public. I ask unanimous consent that their dissenting remarks be printed at this point in my remarks.

I particularly recommend their report for study by the appropriate Senate and House committees. The State commissioners make, among other things, a very compelling argument that the ICC is relinquishing its control over rates by granting blanket increases when other blanket increases previously granted have not themselves been completely utilized by the railroads. I think both viewpoints should be open for public understanding and study and for congressional study, and therefore I am taking this means of making the State commissioners' views available for this purpose.

There being no objection, the document was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BEFORE THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION EX PARTE 196, INCREASED FREIGHT RATES, 1956—SEPARATE VIEWS OF THE COOPERATING COMMITTEE OF STATE COMMISSIONERS, CONSISTING OF WENDELL TENNIS, CHAIRMAN OF THE INDIANA PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION; FRED W. CLAYTON, OF THE NEVADA PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION; AND HAMMOND FOWLER, OF THE TENNESSEE PUBLIC COMMISSION

On March 2, 1956, the Interstate Commerce Commission entered its order in this case authorizing a general increase in freight rates of 6 percent, subject to certain exceptions therein specified. The order stated that a report would be issued later containing the Commission's findings and conclusions upon which the order was based. The cooperating committee of State commissioners sat with division 2 during the cross-examination of witnesses and with the full Commission during the argument of this case. The cooperating committee of State commissioners disagreed with the conclusions reached by the Commission and filed separate recommendations, as follows:

1. Suspend for 6 months from date.

2. Make cost of service study.

3. Review and cooperate with State commissions to avoid as many section 13 cases as possible to accomplish proper cooperation rather than long and expensive litigation.

4. Interstate Commerce Commission needs further evidence and study prior to application of rates.

So that the reasons for those recommendations will be understood, we are submitting this statement of our views to be filed with the Commission's report.

The procedure following in this case was adopted following a conference between representatives of the railroads and three members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which took place in the office of the Chairman of the Commission on December 21, 1955, as set out in his letter of December 22, 1955, to Mr. Fred Carpi, vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., a copy of which is filed herewith as appendix 1. Neither the State commissioners nor the members of the shipping public were represented at that conference. On December 27 the railroads filed an application for authority to depart from the tariff rules of the Commission to the extent necessary to permit them to publish a general increase of 7 percent by means of a master tariff and for the modification of outstanding orders of the Commission to the extent necessary to permit publication of the 7 percent increase in this way. The authority requested was granted by order of the Commission on the following day—December 28. On December 30 the master tariff was filed providing for a 7 percent increase in all rates to become effective February 25. At the same time the railroads filed a printed document entitled "Statement of Railroads in Justification of the Proposed Increases and Application for Fourth Section Relief and Modification of Outstanding Orders," together with supporting verified statements. On January 4 the Commission entered a further order establishing special rules of procedure. The special rules provided that all direct testimony should be presented by verified statements. Those opposing the increase were given until February 3 in which to file verified statements and the railroads were given until February 10 to file replies to these statements. A hearing for the purpose of cross-examining witnesses was scheduled for February 13, and oral argument was scheduled for February 20. No provision was made for regional hearings as had been done in prior general increase cases.

This procedure was reviewed by the Executive Committee of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, and also by the members of the Southeastern Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners and the members of the Midwest Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners. These associations felt that the procedure was wholly inadequate and accordingly they joined in objections to the abbreviated hearing and a motion for adequate investigation which were filed by special appearance.

It was the view of the State commissions, as set out in their objections and motion, that the financial condition of the railroads, as shown in the verified statements filed in support of the application, did not make out a case requiring adoption of the extraordinary procedure outlined above, that such a procedure would work an injustice upon the shippers who are the beneficiaries of the hundreds of rate orders obtained from the Commission in lengthy and costly proceedings in which they had carried a heavy burden of proof, and that the record so made could not form an adequate basis for the carrying out by the Commission of the obligations imposed on it by statute. They pointed out that the railroads were asking the Commission to engage in a process of purely mechanical and mathematical ratemaking, whereby rates would be automatically increased by the amount of increases in unit prices of labor and materials without regard to whether there had been a corresponding increase in the overall cost of handling the traffic, and without regard to the lawfulness of the level of rates so arrived at. They pointed out that the railroads had not been able to retain the increases granted them in the recent past on important segments of traffic, that there were strong indications that on much important freight traffic the revenue-vanishing point of rate increases had already been reached or passed, and that the effect of granting the relief requested by the railroads would be to turn over to railroad management the duty imposed by statute on the Commission of adjusting the rate structure so as to prevent unlawful discriminations. These views of the State commissions were given short shrift. Their objections were overruled and their motion was denied by summary order without hearing or argument.

Despite our misgivings as to the procedure adopted by the Commission in this case, we accepted appointment as cooperating State commissioners. The record made by the railroads in this case and the action taken by the Commission on that record have amply justified our fears. We have reviewed the record carefully and we think that its inadequacy may be clearly and convincingly demonstrated.

THE EVIDENCE AS TO INCREASES IN COSTS

The major contention advanced by the railroads is that an increase in rates is essential to offset increases in costs. The only evidence submitted by the railroads in support of the contention that the costs have increased is the verified statement of Graham E. Getty which purports to show a total increase in cost of $591 million since September 30, 1955. This figure is only an arithmetical computation. The increase in the cost of labor was computed by adding to such cost in 1954 an amount obtained by applying the increases in hourly rates of pay to the number of hours paid for, together with the increases in payroll taxes applicable to the higher level of wages. Increases in material costs were computed by applying an index maintained by the Association of American Railroads. These figures, added together, amount to $591 million and the railroads contended that their total costs would be increased by that amount during the ensuing year. The Commission accepted this evidence as proof of such an assertion, finding that there would be "an increase in operating expenses of the railroads amounting to more than $500 million annually, consisting principally of increased wages, taxes, and increased costs of materials and supplies."

We can discover no support in the record for this finding. The record would support a finding that if the same quantities and qualities of materials and the same hours of labor were used in 1956 as in 1954 and there were no offsetting economies in operation, there would be an increase in operating expenses of this magnitude, but the missing ingredient in this record is evidence that the railroads will not operate more efficiently in 1956 than they did in 1954. This is recognized by Commissioner Freas in his separate opinion in which he points out that—

"It is not the price of given quantities of labor or material that is significant; it is the cost per unit of service rendered that affects the reasonableness of rates. In this respect the record leaves much to be desired."

That the record leaves much to be desired in this respect is an understatement. There is literally no evidence that the cost per unit of service will increase in the same ratio as do the prices of given quantities of labor and materials.

The assumption that 100 cents of every dollar of increase in the unit prices of labor and materials are automatically reflected in the total operating costs of the railroads flies in the face of the history of our American economy in general and of the railroad industry in particular. Our expanding economy testifies eloquently of the improved methods of production and operation which increase the productivity of labor and the life of materials almost from day to day. But it is not necessary to resort to general principles or historical trends to demonstrate the fallacy of this assumption. The past experience of the railroads makes it clear that the cost per unit of service does not increase in the same ratio as do the prices of given quantities of labor and materials. This is shown persuasively in the verified statement of the witness, George B. Tully, relating to the annual costs per thousand revenue net ton-miles to be borne by freight traffic. Mr. Tully has taken the total operating costs in each year and subtracted the revenue contributions of other services. He has thus included in freight costs not only the cost of handling the freight traffic but also the burden of the ever-increasing passenger deficit. In 1951 the cost per thousand revenue ton-miles for the railroads of the United States as a whole, after Federal income tax, was $11.90. For the 9 months ended September 30, 1955, the cost was only $11.91. During this same period the combined index of wage rates and material prices increased from 129.1 to 143.3, or approximately 11 percent. This entire increase in labor and material prices was absorbed without any increase in the unit cost of doing business.

That increases in the prices of labor and materials are not necessarily reflected in increased overall costs was demonstrated by Mr. Getty on cross-examination. His testimony as to how his theories would work out if applied to the 1953 costs was particularly dramatic in its complete contradiction of the conclusions he testified to in his verified statement. In 1953 the railroads carried 605.8 billion revenue ton-miles. In the 12 months ended September 30, 1955, they carried 603.5 billion revenue ton-miles, almost the same volume of business. In the 12 months ended September 30, 1955, the railroads incurred increases in the prices of labor and materials of $239.5 million over 1953, computed in the manner in which Mr. Getty computed the 1956 increases in costs. Yet their actual costs for those 12 months were $674 million less than in 1953. His method of computation, therefore, would have resulted in an overstatement of costs of $913.5 million. This figure should be compared with the net railway operating income of $1,130 million for the 12 months ended September 30, 1955. Had Mr. Getty appeared before the Commission a year ago, he presumably would have testified that the railroads were going to have a disastrous year in 1955. He would have been completely in error then, and there is no reason to assume that he is not equally in error now.

The explanation of why rising prices do not bring corresponding increases in unit costs is very simple. Reduction in operating expenses in the face of rising prices for labor and materials reflects the enormous strides taken by the railroads in modernizing their plants and improving their operations. This trend is continuing and the railroads are constantly increasing their efficiency. The most telling testimony on this point was that of Mr. J. E. Tilford, the President of the L. & N. Railroad, who demonstrated on cross-examination how his railroad had been able to overcome increases in labor and material prices by dieselization, the installation of modern freight yards, the mechanization of maintenance work, and other economies. With reference to further improvements in efficiency in the immediate future he testified: "I am on the firing line. I know we have to do it."

No one can be certain at this date whether the railroads can absorb completely the increases in labor and material prices to which Mr. Getty testified, and only time will tell. The decreases in the cost of doing business resulting from increased efficiency is a relatively steady, gradual decrease, whereas increases in costs resulting from increases in wage rates are sporadic. The cost per thousand revenue net ton-miles in the months immediately following a major increase in wage rates will naturally show a sharp increase but this cost will gradually decline, assuming that there are no further increases in the meantime. We believe that a suspension of the proposed increase for 6 months, together with a study by the Commission's cost section, would enable the Commission to form an intelligent judgment as to the extent to which the railroads are able to absorb the increases in the prices of materials and labor.

Mr. Getty would have us believe that the decrease in operating costs between the year 1953 and the year 1955, referred to above, resulted from under-maintenance. The net income of the railroads for the 12 months ended September 30, 1955, was $925 million. This is the highest net income in their history. No explanation is offered as to why the railroads would permit their physical plant to deteriorate during this period of unprecedented prosperity and the only proof offered in support of the assertion that they did so is the cold statistics showing a reduction in their expenditures for maintenance. Mr. Getty conceded on cross-examination that he had made no study of the cause of this reduction but was simply expressing his conclusion derived from the figures themselves. There is nothing in the record to show that he was qualified to express such a conclusion. The testimony of the operating witnesses indicates that the reduction in maintenance expenditures was due to mechanization of track work, realization of economies resulting from capital improvements in way and equipment and other economies and not to a policy of under-maintenance. In this connection it should be noted that there were substantial reductions in costs in 1955 as against 1953 for all categories of expenses—transportation and traffic, general and all other, as well as maintenance of way and structures and maintenance of equipment. Surely the reduction in transportation expense was not due to under-maintenance. Nor could the reduction in maintenance of equipment have been due to this cause since Getty's exhibit shows that the percentage of bad order cars on October 1, 1955 (5.1) was practically identical with the percentage on December 31, 1952 (5.0). Before accepting this facile explanation, therefore, the Commission should have looked longer and further to the ascertainable facts.

In short, the railroads had the burden of proof in this proceeding, and it was their obligation to establish the extent, if any, by which their costs in 1956 will exceed their 1955 costs. They not only have failed to carry that burden, they have failed to present any testimony on this issue that rises to the dignity of competent evidence.

THE ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF FUNDS NEEDED FOR CAPITAL IMPROVEMENTS

A second contention advanced by the railroads is that increased revenues are essential to enable them to make necessary capital improvements, including, particularly, additional investments in locomotives and freight cars, but we are unable to find any substantial evidence to support this contention. In the 9 years from 1946 to 1954 the average net income of the railroads of the United States was $643 million. For the 12 months ended September 30, 1955, the net income was $925 million, and for the calendar year 1955, the last 3 months of which included the increases in prices of wages and materials testified to by Mr. Getty, the net income was $917 million. In the period since the war the railroads of the United States have carried on a capital-improvement program which has increased their gross investment in transportation property by about $7 billion. At the same time, they have reduced their funded debt by $1½ billion and have increased their total long-term debt (including equipment obligations) by only one-half billion dollars. If the railroads were able to accomplish this with an average net income of $643 million, it is difficult to see why their capital-improvement program should have suffered in a year during which the net income exceeded $900 million, even making allowance for the reduced purchasing power of the dollar. No explanation is offered as to why the railroads should have skimped on capital expenditures in the year of their greatest prosperity, and we find it difficult to believe that they actually did so. Much was said about the need for additional freight cars, but there is nothing to indicate that there is any connection between the alleged shortage of freight cars and the asserted need for additional revenues. During 1954 there was an average surplus of 90,000 cars per day, according to William T. Faricy, president of the AAR. It is easy to understand why more freight cars were not ordered during that year. The railroads had a surplus and were unwilling to add to it. When business picked up in 1955 additional freight cars were ordered promptly, and this was done before the railroads knews whether they were going to obtain the increase requested.

The shortage of freight cars is an old story. It is doubtful if the railroads have ever had as many freight cars as they needed during periods of peak demands, but their present situation is as favorable as it has been in any year of high traffic volume. The total freight-carrying capacity of freight cars in the United States on December 31, 1954, was 93,196,281 tons, the highest figure in any year in history, except 1952 and 1953, which were only slightly higher. In 1947, the peak volume postwar year, the railroads moved 655 billion ton-miles of freight with a freight-car fleet having a total capacity of only 89,224,538 tons. In addition, the freight-car fleet is being used much more efficiently today than it was even 5 years ago. Between 1950 and 1955 freight ton-miles per train-hour increased from 20,343 to 25,300, an increase of almost 25 percent. Since orders for 70,000 new cars were placed in the 2 months of November and December, 1955, it seems clear that the car supply situation of the railroads lends no support to the contention that they have failed to keep up their freight-car fleet because of insufficient funds.

THE RIGHTS OF THE SHIPPERS AND OF THE GENERAL PUBLIC

Section 15a (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act provides:

"In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates the Commission shall give due consideration, among other factors, to the effect of rates on the movement of traffic by the carrier or carriers for which the rates are prescribed; to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient railway transportation service at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable the carriers, under honest, economical, and efficient management to provide such service."

It will be noted that there are three factors specified—the effect of rates on the movement of traffic, the public interest in adequate and efficient railway transportation service at lowest cost, and the need of the carriers for revenues. The Commission seems to have focused its attention on the needs of the carriers and to have disregarded the other factors specified in section 15a. It is, in our opinion, clearly apparent, that the railroads have not established that they need additional revenues and certainly they have not carried the burden of proof as to the contention that they face such a dire emergency as to require their needs to be met by the extraordinary and well-nigh summary procedures adopted by the Commission in this case. We now turn to the other factors which the Commission apparently did not consider but which certainly are worthy of consideration.

In a general-rate increase case the railroads consolidate their efforts. They have the necessary personnel and other resources which enable them to plan and present their case with the maximum of efficiency. Shippers, on the other hand, are disorganized. Each one is interested in the rates on his own commodity, and there is no one in a position to meet the railroads on even terms. The general public is not represented at all. If its rights are to be protected they must be protected by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, as we view it, it is the responsibility of the Commission to make sure that the pattern of rates resulting from the application of a general increase will protect the rights of the general public to the maximum possible extent. The procedure adopted by the Commission in this case is, it seems to us, one which disabled the Commission from performing this responsibility. Such a situation would be unfortunate at any time, but is particularly so in the present instance.

This is the fifth general increase case since World War II. In previous cases the Commission has authorized increases aggregating approximately 79 percent. If said increases were applied, therefore, to the extent that the Commission authorized them, it would be logical to expect an increase in railroad revenue per ton-mile approaching the aforesaid percentage. However, from 1946 to November 1955 the average revenue per ton-mile increased only about 40 percent. Even more striking is what happened to the 15-percent increase authorized in Ex Parte 175. The revenue per ton-mile for the United States was 1.336 cents in 1951; by 1953, the first year which reflected the full 15-percent increase, revenue had increased to 1.478 cents per ton-mile, or by approximately 10.6 percent, but by 1955 the revenue was down to 1.374 cents, or less than 3 percent above 1951. No explanation has been offered for this phenomenon, and the Commission can only speculate as to why the 15-percent increase in railroad rates has resulted in an increase of only 3 percent in revenue per net ton-mile. We do not see how the Commission can be satisfied that it is protecting the rights of the public unless it knows the answer to this question.

It is clear that, on the average, the railroads have availed themselves of only a small percentage of the Ex Parte 175 increases. They should be required to explain why they need an additional increase if they were unable or unwilling to take the increase already authorized. Assuming that the 6-percent increase in rates, with the exceptions and holddowns, means a net increase of 5 percent, the level of rates will be raised to approximately 88 percent above the 1946 level. There is real danger that the level of rates has already gone so high that the prescription of maximum reasonable rates has become meaningless. With such a level from which to work, the railroads are in a position to maintain a level of rates on noncompetitive traffic which is wholly beyond the bounds of reasonableness and can use excess revenues to cut rates on a selective basis where they meet the competition of other forms of carriers. Under such a pattern of rates shippers are no longer afforded any protection by section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act and they are certainly not obtaining service at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service.

It must be emphasized that the relief granted to the railroads in this proceeding is n't merely to permit increased tariffs to become effective. It also includes the amending of all outstanding rate orders. Shippers have lost the benefits of those orders, many of which were obtained only after long and costly litigation, without any opportunity to present their case effectively and on the basis of a record which furnishes no justification for the action taken by the Commission. It may be suggested that if any particular rate has gone too high, the shipper can institute a proceeding before the Commission but this is a remedy which is far more apparent than real. In such a proceeding the reasonableness of the rate under attack will be measured against the increased level of rates authorized in this proceeding and the result is a foregone conclusion.

THE EFFECT ON THE MOVEMENT OF TRAFFIC

The evidence is persuasive that the level of rates maintained by the railroads is already so high as to have a serious effect on the volume of traffic. In a rapidly expanding economy the volume of traffic handled by the railroads should be increasing from year to year if they are holding their relative share of the transportation business, but this is not the case. In only 4 years since 1941 (1946, 1949, 1950, and 1954) have the railroads handled a smaller volume of traffic than they handled in the year ended September 30, 1955, the most prosperous year in our history. There are other factors contributing to this situation but the high level of freight rates is certainly a major contributing factor. The railroads have recognized this fact themselves by the rate cutting which they have done on selected commodities in order to meet the competition of other forms of transportation. To what extent this rate cutting has been justified we are in no position to say—and neither is the Commission. One thing that does seem clear is that selective rate cutting combined with substantial increases in rates on other segments of the traffic has had a tendency to shift and distort the general rate burden and must inevitably result in injustices to many shippers. This is the impelling story which the coal industry told the Commission because the coal traffic is one of the segments that has felt more than its share of the impact of the increases. Even if the general freight rate structure is not too high, it may work great harm if it is not fairly distributed over all segments of traffic. There is no one in a position to probe this problem except the Commission. It has the facilities and it seems to us that it had a clear duty to investigate this subject thoroughly and to determine that the general rate burden would be distributed fairly and justly among the different commodities and types of traffic before it permitted the increases to go into effect.

Underlying this latest increase is a basic question of policy, i. e., whether the Commission is going to protect the rights of the public or leave those rights to the unrestricted and unregulated discretion of the railroads. While the railroads are privately owned, they have been vested with some of the powers of Government, including the power of eminent domain, without which they could not operate. Their property is devoted to a public use and is subject to governmental control. The Interstate Commerce Commission was created in order to protect shippers from arbitrary action by the railroads. It grew out of the abuses of railroad management. The act has been amended from time to time and the Commission has been given responsibilities to protect the carriers as well as the public, but the basic underlying purpose of the act has never been changed. If the Commission is going to authorize a level of rates so high as to give the railroads unlimited power to manipulate individual rates to serve their own purposes, it will have abdicated the responsibilities entrusted to it by Congress and the reasons for its continuance as a regulatory body will have ceased to exist.

COOPERATION WITH STATE COMMISSIONERS

The national transportation policy, as declared by Congress, is "to cooperate with the several States and the duly authorized officials thereof." Section 13 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act directs the Commission to investigate any complaint forwarded to it by the railroad commission of any State and section 13 (3) authorizes it to hold joint hearings with any State regulatory body on any matters where the ratemaking authority of a State may be affected by the action taken by the Commission.

The Committee of Cooperating State Commissioners which sat with division 2 of the Commission in the instant case was designated by the President of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners upon invitation of the Commission, in the manner prescribed by what is known as the cooperative agreement between that organization and the Commission. Said association, a voluntary association composed of the several State regulatory commissions having jurisdiction, inter alia, over intrastate rates charged by rail carriers, originally entered into said agreement on May 3, 1922, and same was subsequently revised on October 14, 1925, and further amended by a supplement thereto adopted by said association at its annual convention on August 31, 1937.

Said supplement provides, at section 8 thereof, that:

"(a) Whenever a cooperating committee shall have concluded its work, or shall deem such course advisable, the committee shall consider whether it is necessary and desirable to make a report to the interested State commissions, and, if it shall determine to make a report it shall cause the same to be distributed through the secretary of the association, or through the general solicitor, to all interested commissions.

"(b) If a report of the Federal Commission will accompany any order to be made in said proceeding, the Federal Commission shall state therein the concurrence or nonconcurrence of said cooperating committee in the decision or order of said Federal Commission." (Proceedings, 49th annual convention, NARUC, p. 66.)

The Interstate Commerce Commission has a large technical staff. It collects and interprets a great deal of information relating to the financial conditions of the railroads, and it has access to much data not readily available to State commissions. The State commissions, on the other hand, have an intimate familiarity with the problems of transportation within their individual States which is not readily available to the Interstate Commerce Commission. For this reason it seems to us to be important that the Interstate Commerce Commission and the State commissions work more closely together as contemplated by the national transportation policy and the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act quoted above. With all deference to the Interstate Commerce Commission, we feel that it could profit by obtaining the views and assistance of State commissions. It does not obtain the assistance from the State commissions which is available by designating three representatives from State commissions to sit with the Interstate Commerce Commission in hearing evidence and argument and then dismissing them with courteous thanks.

In prior general increase cases the State commissions have generally deferred to the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the question of whether an increase in rates was necessary. In the proceedings before State commissions seeking the Ex Parte 175 increase, only three State commissions declined to permit the increase to go into effect. However, the State commissions felt, and we think properly, that they had a duty to consider the special problems arising in connection with particular commodities and particular movements which the Interstate Commerce Commission did not have before it in authorizing an increase in the general level of rates. While only 3 States declined to permit the increase at all, 31 of the States permitted the increase, subject to the exceptions and limitations which they considered necessary to preserve a lawful and symmetrical intrastate rate structure. In the section 13 cases, which followed the action of the various State commissions in allowing the increase subject to exceptions and limitations, a record was made in which the circumstances which led to the action of the State commission were fully explained. One would have thought that the Interstate Commerce Commission would consider the evidence as to special local problems and would show at least some deference to the special competency of the State commission to find the solution to those problems, but it has not done so.

The position of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been consistent. It has been that the State Commissions must allow each of the numerous general increases authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission in exactly the form in which that Commission has authorized them, not failing to cross a single "t" or to dot a single "i." Although the Interstate Commerce Commission has never itself considered the particular problems involved in the State proceedings, it has overruled, apparently as a matter of routine, the exceptions to the general increases ordered by the State commissions while permitting the railroads to make whatever exceptions they pleased. It thus has demonstrated its willingness to entrust the solution of local problems to the railroads but not to the State commissions.

We recognize the practical necessity for vesting in the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority over intrastate rates conferred on it by section 13 of the Interstate Commerce Act, but we feel that such authority should be exercised with restraint and not used as an instrumentality to preempt the authority properly conferred upon the State commissions. If, however, the Interstate Commerce Commission is going to require State commissions to permit exactly the same increases on intrastate rates as are authorized on interstate rates without reference to local conditions, it seems to us that, at the very least, the Commission should have before it a record affording some basis for action before it authorizes an increase. In the light of the procedure which has been followed in this case and the wholly inadequate record, it is difficult for us to see how the commissions of the various States can grant the precise relief granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission unless the railroads present a far more persuasive case in the State proceedings than was presented in this case. It would therefore seem that the decision of the Commission in the instant case must inevitably lead to a multitude of section 13 cases with resulting confusion, disruption and uncertainty, unless the several State commissions should see fit subserviently to follow the lead of this Commission and to delegate their quasi-judicial ratemaking functions to the very carriers which these State commissions have a statutory duty and responsibility to regulate in the public interest.

NEED FOR NEW ENERGY SOURCES

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, a few moments ago it was my privilege to hear an unusually able and esteemed Senator speak perhaps his closing public words to his colleagues, at a reception held in his honor. I refer to the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. The words were these:

> May God lead you aright—and He will if you give Him half a chance.

Mr. President, with the retirement of the senior Senator from Colorado and the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the closing hours of this session approaching, the temptation to reminisce over the 84th Congress is great; but the temptation will be resisted by me except for a very brief reference.

I am proud of the many things accomplished by this Congress. I am pleased and proud to have had a part in some of its accomplishments. I take particular pride in enactment of a great highway program.

One of the keenest disappointments, on the other hand, that has come in my 18 years of service in the Congress was the defeat in the House of Representatives on the day before yesterday of the atomic-reactor bill. My own disappointment is unimportant. The meaning of this defeat to our country, however, is one of great importance.

I have just received from the vice president and general manager, Atomic Products Division, General Electric Co., a telegram the first sentence of which I wish to read:

> I think the sense of all recent testimony and debate is that the program for atomic electricity should be accelerated in every reasonable maner as a matter of national prestige.

I fully agree with this statement.

Mr. President, it is my view that the Senate looked upon the atomic reactor bill in terms of the next generation, the next decade, perhaps even the next century. I am proud that the Senate so viewed it. We need to give thought to the future as well as to the present.

The present and future energy needs of this Nation are tremendous. Whether we continue to advance and increase our standard of living or whether we commence to retrogress will be determined by our basic decision as to the course of action followed in the development of energy resources.

The energy resources consisting of oil, gas, and coal are consumed by the industrial development necessary to provide for the increasing population of the United States and of the world, and the expanding economy of our Nation and of other nations of the world.

Because of increasing mechanization, increasing travel, production, and increasing military demands, we shall require more natural gas, more petroleum, more coal, in the future, both for energy and for chemical processes. The limited amount of energy available from falling water is rapidly being developed in hydroelectric projects. Energy from the sun, from the tides, and from the wind has so far shown but little possibilities for industrial use.

The world population today, Mr. President, is approximately 2½ billion. Have we given thought to what the world population will be 100 years from now, if the present rate of increase shall continue? Statistics indicate a world population then of 8 billion.

I invite attention to the fact that the rate of population increase within the United States is twice that of the world; and I am proud of that. I am proud to see America growing, expanding, in population and in economy. But, Mr. President, that growth, that multiplication of population both here and abroad, will require great quantities of energy. The energy requirements of the future pose a tremendous problem; and I believe the Senate had the problems of the future in mind when it voted 49 to 40 in support of the atomic reactor bill.

In the years from 1850 to 1950 the estimated total world consumption of energy was, to use a scientific term, "4Q." What is the meaning of the term "Q"? It is a scientific unit of measurement, a quantity equal to the heat value of 38 billion tons of coal. In the next 50 years it is estimated that there will be a consumption of 16Q. That is 4 times the consumption in the previous 100 years, and almost twice as much as was used during the time from the birth of Christ to 1850.

But what of the next 100 years? In the next 100 years, scientists tell us, energy will be required to the extent of 187Q. That is 47 times the amount that was used from 1850 to 1950.

From what sources will this almost incomprehensible quantity of energy come? There are about 32Q, we are told by scientists, in the world's coal supplies. Oil and gas would provide for the world another 5Q; oil shale, 1Q.

In other words, Mr. President, all the fossil fuel now known in the world and economically recoverable would provide less than 40Q.

Fuels from solar heat, tides, and wind might possibly add another 8Q, according to scientific estimates.

Compare this total with the energy needs for the next 100 years of 187Q. Where, Mr. President, must we turn for resources to make up that balance? To what sources shall our children turn?

One of the rewards, one of the satisfying compensations, for service in the United States Senate, enjoyed, I dare say, by every Member of the Senate, is the thought, the dream, the hope that by exercising wisdom and courage in our brief hour we may make the pathway of tomorrow easier and make life more abundant.

Other processes and other sources not now developed, such as atomic energy, must provide the quantitative difference between the needs of the next hundred years and the conventional sources of energy as we now know them.

This problem must not be considered only from a narrow national viewpoint.

I find it ironic that the defeat of the atomic reactor bill in the House of Representatives was brought about by the administration which has prime responsibility in this respect, together with the influence and lobbying efforts of two industrial groups. One of these industrial groups, coal, has already benefited vastly from the atomic energy program which uses approximately one-tenth of all the Nation's electricity, most of which is generated from coal. The other industrial group would, I sincerely believe, realize the greatest and most peculiar benefits from the proposed program. I speak of the private electric power industry. Their lobbyists, their lawyers, the minions of their influence, exercised their talents to the fullest.

Yet it is the private electric utility industry which would benefit the most, as I have said, from governmental demonstration of the feasibility, governmental demonstration of the practical utilization of nuclear energy in the generation of electricity.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I am happy to yield to the distinguished, able, and courageous chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am always very much interested in what my colleague says. If he does not mind, as we go along I should like to insert in the RECORD a number of matters which will illuminate the future history of this subject.

When the Senator says that the group which had a great possibility to profit was the private electric power industry, I must say that I agree with him.

Let us consider, for example, the situation with respect to the reactor at Monroe, Mich. The safeguard committee has had some question about the safety of that reactor. I am willing to assume that it will be the safest reactor which will ever be built; but, after all, it is a fast-breeder reactor, one which is supposed, eventually, to generate current faster than fuel is fed into it. Therefore, it is an extremely important experiment.

But the safeguard committee said a prototype ought to be constructed to test several of the theories.

Was it not the expectation of the great junior Senator from Tennessee, who introduced the bill, that under the terms of the bill, as he originally conceived it, it would have been possible to have built that prototype and to have had the Government test it, so that a safe prototype could have been built, safe for all the people of the United States and safe for the industry, as well?

Mr. GORE. Yes, indeed.

Mr. ANDERSON. People say that is socialistic. Does not the Senator from Tennessee believe that it is the wisest safeguard which could be thrown around private industry?

Mr. GORE. I believe it is not only the wisest safeguard, but also the greatest benefit which could be now conferred upon private enterprise in the further development of this program.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would it not have been nice to protect at the same time, the welfare of the people who work in the plant and the people who live next to it?

Mr. GORE. Yes. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question. Did his committee, or did any member of his committee, have in mind the desire, the intent, or the purpose, to harm in any degree the private electric utility industry by supporting the reactor bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can say to the Senator from Tennessee that not one member of the committee had such a feeling; otherwise, the bill would never have been reported by a vote of 14 to 0. Second, member after member of the utility industry was consulted about it, and it was made abundantly clear that what we were trying to do was to speed up the program, so that the United States could keep abreast of other countries.

If the Senator from Tennessee will indulge me, may I ask him if he saw a newspaper article which was published in the New York Herald Tribune, among other newspapers, on Wednesday, July 18, 1956, and which stated that an atomic plant of 100,000 kilowatts capacity was to be built by Russia in the Red Zone of Germany—East Germany?

Mr. GORE. I did; and I was surprised by it. I realized that, again, the Soviet Union had scored another first by this announcement. We have not announced such a program.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does not the Senator from Tennessee realize that the announcement of this intention on the part of Russia preceded the actual construction of a 100,000 kilowatt plant in the United States?

Mr. GORE. There is no 100,000 kilowatt plant in the United States; none is under construction; and there is none for which a license has been granted.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the Senator from Tennessee will indulge me for another minute, I am trying to select publications which are not regarded as flaming New Deal publications. I believe the New York Herald Tribune would not be regarded as an extremely left wing or radical, New Deal newspaper.

I now turn to Business Week, which I think is a very fine magazine, and which I read because I regard it as an excellent, conservative publication. In a copy which I had at home, the issue of July 21, 1956, I find an article on page 36, the headline of which is:

Britain Gets Edge Over United States in Atom Power Race in Japan.

The article says:

Unless the United States pulls up its sales socks, Japan will turn to Britain for most of its atomic help.

The article goes on to say that the Japanese Minister of State for nuclear affairs gave two reasons for turning to the British.

They offer to sell—immediately—a reactor that can produce power in commercially useful quantities. The Japanese are expected to order a 150,000-kilowatt reactor costing $41.7 million, for delivery in 4 years or less. The United States has been talking in terms of much smaller reactors.

I only ask the junior Senator from Tennessee, Does this check with his knowledge of the picture?

Mr. GORE. Yes, indeed.

Mr. ANDERSON. That the British can offer a 150,000-kilowatt reactor?

Is there any American company which the Senator from Tennessee knows of that can offer to build a 150,000-kilowatt reactor and deliver it in 4 years or less to the Japanese?

Mr. GORE. I know of no American concern which has built such a reactor or which has a contract to build such a reactor. I believe there are several concerns that are fully capable, given adequate cooperation by the Government of constructing such reactors.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am glad to have the Senator from Tennessee confirm, as I do, the accuracy of this observation in Business Week. I read the last paragraph of the article:

Unlike the United States, they—do not demand that technical information about atomic equipment be kept from the public. This has political implications in Japan, where the Socialist opposition is clamoring for publication of atomic data.

The British—

I think it is fine that Great Britain has decided to make this information available to the public. Does the junior Senator from Tennessee know of any good reason why we should protect the people of America from the truth?

Mr. GORE. No, I do not. I think the people of the United States are entitled to the truth.

I should like to say further that the defeat of the reactor bill in the House of Representatives, which was brought about by a combination of the power trust—I will strike out "power trust" and say, brought about by a combination of the private power industry, the coal industry, and the administration will cause the United States to fall further behind in the development of nuclear power.

I take some consolation in my confidence that events will bring about the initiation of such a program within the next few months. But the delay will be costly—costly in terms of American prestige, costly in terms of American economic supremacy in this technical, competitive field.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. GORE. I am very happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to place some other material into his fine speech. If he would like me to wait until later, I shall do so.

Mr. GORE. I shall be very happy to yield to the Senator from New Mexico for that purpose.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is the Senator from Tennessee familiar with, or has he seen, the article which was published in the New York Times of Sunday, July 22, 1956, the headline of which is:

Briton Sees Atom Power Gain from Revisions in Plant Design.

I believe I showed it to the able Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks the article to which the junior Senator from New Mexico has just referred.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRITON SEES ATOM POWER GAIN FROM REVISIONS IN PLANT DESIGN

LONDON, July 19.—Recent advances in the design of Britain's experimental atomic power reactors are expected to raise the electrical generating capacity of British nuclear powerplants in 1965 to about 3 million or 4 million kilowatts.

If achieved, this would double the nuclear capacity figure for 1965 of 1,750,000 to 2 million kilowatts originally forecast in a Government White Paper. Four million kilowatts is about one-fifth of the country's present capacity using conventional fuels.

A competent designer engaged on the nuclear power program declared today:

"We have achieved nothing that we were unable to predict, but we have advanced in big jumps instead of in small steps."

Among new developments in the design of reactor furnaces and their heat transfer systems he listed:

The ability to build larger pressure vessels and therefore larger reactors with a bigger capacity. This means, the designer said, that the larger power stations envisaged by the Central Electricity Authority will be markedly more economical to operate than the smaller-sized atomic power stations with the 100,000 to 200,000 kilowatt capacity originally planned.

The fact that a reactor designer has learned how to arrange the lattices of fuel rods so that the uranium takes longer to burn up. Greater efficiency has also been achieved by reduction in the size of reactor control rods, it was said.

The fact that improvements in steam technology and in the design and engineering of structural materials also have proved "of enormous value."

Some of the technical advances are expected to be mentioned in the second annual report of the Atomic Energy Authority to be published next week.

But it is unlikely that the improvements will increase the capacity of four new stations in the northwestern region of Westmorland and Dumfriesshire beyond about 100,000 or at most 150,000 kilowatts.

Two other stations, one on the southeast coast near Bradwell in Essex, and the other on the Severn estuary near Bristol, will have a capacity of from 150,000 to 200,000 kilowatts, it is believed. They are to be completed by 1961.

Thereafter, it is said, eight stations that are to be built in the second stage of Britain's atomic power program will have an individual capacity of about 350,000 or 400,000 kilowatts. These are to be completed by 1965.

A brief mention of British efforts to harness the hydrogen fusion reaction for the production of industrial power will be made in the Atomic Energy Authority's report. It is understood that little progress has been made on what a spokesman called the "much publicized and probably completely impractical lines."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I am happy to have the article printed; I think it is an extremely worthwhile article, because it points out that British nuclear powerplants in 1965 are expected to have a capacity of from 3 million to 4 million kilowatts, and they will supply a large percentage of British power.

Mr. GORE. By what year did the Senator say?

Mr. ANDERSON. By 1965.

Mr. GORE. Under the present program, how many kilowatts of capacity does the Senator from New Mexico think the United States will have in operation by 1965?

Mr. ANDERSON. We ought to have close to 1 million kilowatts at that time, about one-fourth of what the British will have. We might get it up to 1,500,000 kilowatts.

Mr. GORE. And less than one-half what the Russians expect to have 5 years ahead of that, in 1960.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. At the same time Mr. Philip Sporn, who is president of the American Gas & Electric Co., also made a statement in that regard. I may say that he is a very able man. He has been president of the group that built one of the fine plants supplying current at the Portsmouth, Ohio, plant, and did it in a very capable fashion. I have no criticism of him, but this is also from the newspapers. It is strange that we have to get our information from newspapers. We do not get it from the Atomic Energy Commission. In a luncheon meeting of the New York Society of Security Analysts, Mr. Philip Sporn estimated the annual output would be 2 trillion kilowatt-hours in 1975 in the United States. Inasmuch as we are going to have 2 trillion kilowatts, does he think it would completely destroy the American system if we have 1 million kilowatts of atomic energy?

Mr. GORE. I doubt that Mr. Sporn would think so. I was very much impressed with the testimony which Mr. Sporn gave before our committee. As the Senator will recall, for many hours he and I were almost alone in the conduct of the hearings, which ran more than 500 pages of printed testimony.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; we were almost alone. I look across the aisle and I see present the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. One of the things I enjoyed in the discussion we had on the atomic power situation a few days ago was that the Senator from Wisconsin remained on the floor and listened to all of it. When he listened to all of the discussion, he voted with us in trying to develop atomic power in the United States. I pay tribute to him, because knowledge is a wonderful thing when one comes to vote.

Mr. GORE. So is courage.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Philip Sporn predicted that out of the two trillion kilowatts in 1975, only 100 million kilowatts would come from atomic energy. Apparently he does not feel it is going to destroy the whole structure of the electric power industry in the United States.

I am anxious to know whether the Senator from Tennessee agrees with that fine estimate.

Mr. GORE. I certainly do.

Mr. ANDERSON. As the Senator from Tennessee knows, we are drawing close to the end of the session. This material has not been available heretofore. I wonder if the Senator from Tennessee would mind if I introduced into the RECORD, during the delivery of his speech, three, what I regard as somewhat important, documents which will help in understanding what this program is, so that Senators may study the question when they get home.

The first deals with the reactor types which we think can be constructed. Senators go home and are asked, "What is this Duquesne Power Co. plant?" We say, "Well, it is a pressurized water reactor." The next question is, "Are there any more of them in the United States?" This statement attempts to answer the questions.

The Senator from Tennessee, who has been diligent in this work, recognizes that a pressurized water reactor will never become economically competitive with ordinary sources of generation of electric current. Yet the Shippingport plant, the Westinghouse-Duquesne powerplant, which many people talk about, is that kind. The Yankee Atomic Electric Group plant is that kind. And the Consolidated of New York is that kind of reactor.

I do not criticize that. I merely point out that these great plants which are going to be built are going to be of a type that can never become economically competitive with falling water, coal, or other fossil fuels.

Mr. GORE. Before the Senator goes further, I should like to suggest that what he has just said illustrates the difficulty and the futility of depending solely upon private enterprise for all further development of large-scale nuclear reactors. It may be, as scientists have testified before the committee, the second generation of reactor, or the third, or the fourth that will break the economic bottleneck and achieve economical generation of electricity from atomic energy. When I use the term "generation of reactor," I do not mean a generation in terms of years, such as we think of when we speak of generations of people. I mean by that term, and the scientists mean by that term, to refer to a reactor as initially designed and constructed. Then, benefiting from the experience of construction and operation of that reactor, another reactor of improved design is constructed. And then a third, and perhaps a fourth may be built before the economic goal is reached.

Let us suppose that each reactor will cost $50 million. Fifty million dollars is a very large sum of money for one business corporation to sink into an experimental reactor.

Mr. ANDERSON. That might not work.

Mr. GORE. That might not work. The fourth reactor might work, but meantime the company will have sunk $50 million into a first "generation" reactor which, at best, would not be profitable, and which, at worst, might be a total loss.

Mr. ANDERSON. It might be hazardous and might be the type that might run away.

Mr. GORE. I go one step further: If, however, one company cannot afford such vast investments in "generations" of reactors, the whole people of the United States cannot afford the failure to do so, because the necessity of maintaining American leadership in the vital field of nuclear energy is so great, and the stakes are so high, that the American people, represented by their Government, must, in the opinion of the junior Senator from Tennessee, forge ahead and demonstrate the feasibility of nuclear energy to meet the challenge of tomorrow.

I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am happy the Senator yields. I wonder if he will permit me to submit certain material for the RECORD?

Mr. GORE. I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that three brief statements may be incorporated in the RECORD at this point. One deals with reactor types as we now know them. The second deals with additional types of reactors. I will say to the able Senator from Tennessee that in his own State of Tennessee there is being constructed an aqueous homogeneous reactor. There are two, as a matter of fact. One has been completely built, and the second is under construction. When that is completed, there will be a third, and probably a fourth—I do not know—but after those have been completed, as the Senator from Tennessee well knows, then the Pennsylvania Power & Light will take the finished, proved product and use it in its plant if it feels it has a chance of commercial success.

Does not the Senator from Tennessee think that is a contribution to the private utility companies that should be made?

Mr. GORE. It is one that should be made, and one that is being made.

But the necessities of the situation require not only governmental development of the research phase, but also governmental construction and operation of large-scale reactors, because—as all the experts in this field have testified—there is no substitute for experience in the actual construction and operation of nuclear powerplants.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator from Tennessee is eminently correct, and this will prove the very thing he has been discussing. Therefore, I should like to submit this statement as to the additional types of reactors, and also a 1-page statement on the English reactor program and a 1-page statement on the Soviet Union program.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REACTOR TYPES

INTRODUCTION

A nuclear reactor, in its simplest form is an assembly of properly shaped and protected metallic uranium fuel rods, spaced geometrically in a vessel or structure with a "moderator" in between.

When the uranium fuel rods are so arranged the isotope 235 contained in normal uranium (1 part 235 to 140 parts 238) undergoes splitting or "fissioning." This in effect means the nucleus—the tiny center of the uranium atom—splits in roughly two parts, and emits neutrons and other radiation, and releases energy in the form of heat. The neutrons from the fissioning of the uranium atom's nucleus, are ejected with great speed, and as they pass between the fuel rods they are slowed down by the moderator to a speed where they are captured by more uranium atom nuclei, causing increasing numbers of them to fission.

Once started, this chain reaction increases at a tremendous rate until the control mechanism comes into effect. Essentially, the typical control system consists of metallic rods made of a material which readily absorbs neutrons and thus slows down the growth of the reaction. These rods are moved in and out of the assembly to expose more or less of their surface to the flying neutrons. The more rod injected into the assembly the more neutrons are absorbed and the slower the reaction.

Fuel rods can be many shapes and sizes, with normal uranium metal, or with varying degrees of enrichment with the isotope 235.

Moderators can be either plain water, heavy water, graphite, or some material which slows down neutrons but does not stop them.

The above general description is of a so-called heterogenous reactor, where fuel and moderator are distinctly separated.

Another system is where both fuel and moderator are ultimately intermixed and circulated within a confined area or vessels where the nuclear reaction takes place. Such a system is known as a homogeneous reactor.

A brief description of the present AEC prototype power reactor program types follows (the attached provides more detail on the technical characteristics of the reactors):

1. Westinghouse-Duquesne Power Co. Pressurized Water Type Reactor—60,000 kilowatt. Estimated total plant cost of $37,700,000, reactor cost $27,700,000.

The enriched uranium metal used as fuel is in the form of pellets embedded in zirconium metal to form long rectangular fuel rod assemblies. A group of these assemblies are suspended in a heavy walled pressure vessel or tank through which regular water is pumped under relatively high volume and pressure. The water acts both as a moderator and heat removal and transfer medium. The heat generated by the nuclear reaction is picked up by the water, circulated out of the pressure vessel through a heat exchanger or steam generator and back into the reactor. The heat exchanger produces steam in a separate system which drives a turbine and electric generator which in turn produces electricity for distribution in a regular utility system.

2. Yankee Atomic Electric Group—pressurized water type—134,000 kilowatts. Estimated total plant cost of $33,400,000, reactor cost $17,600,000.

This is the same as No. 1 above with added design refinements.

3. Detroit Edison Group—breeder reactor—100,000 kilowatts. Estimated total plant cost $45 million, reactor cost $36 million.

This type is designed to create by nuclear transformation more fuel of a different type than it burns up.

Here fuel rods, containing uranium highly enriched in the isotope U–235 are placed in a cluster in the reactor core. A liquid metal such as sodium is used as the cooling and heat-removal medium. Surrounding this reactor core is a blanket of thorium metal. The fast neutrons produced by fissioning of the U–235, in this reactor, are not slowed down by a moderator and strike the thorium atoms. The nuclei of thorium, upon absorbing the fast neutrons, become unstable and undergo a transformation into uranium–233 which is usable as a fuel. When enough of these transformed atoms have been created, the thorium blanket is removed and the U–233 is chemically recovered.

This system has not only the advantage of making its own fuel, but of operating at very high temperatures at low pressure. The liquid metal is pumped from the reactor, through a heat exchanger where steam is formed, and returned to the reactor. The steam from the heat exchanged is piped in a separate system to a turbogenerator for the production of electricity.

4. Consumers Public Power District—sodium graphite reactor—75,000 kilowatts. Estimated total plant cost $24,300,000, reactor cost $13,500,000.

This design uses slightly enriched uranium fuel elements in a matrix of graphite. Here the graphite serves as a moderator.

The coolant and heat transfer medium is the liquid metal sodium. The sodium is pumped through piping imbedded in the reactor core, removes the heat and continues on to the heat exchanger where the heat generates steam and returns to the reactor.

This reactor system, too, operates at very high temperatures and moderate pressures.

5. Wolverine Electric Cooperative—Aqueous homogeneous—10,000 kilowatts. Estimated total plant cost $3,574,000, reactor cost $2,486,000.

This type of reactor utilizes a liquid soluton of fuel and moderating material. Fully enriched uranium in the form of uranyl sulfate, is mixed with heavy water and circulated continuously through a small spherical pressure vessel in the center of the core. This vessel is large enough and of the proper shape so that when full of the fuel-moderator solution the critical chain reaction can take place. The rapidly circulating solution moves continuously from the core out to the heat exchanger, through a continuous chemical recovery unit, and back to the reactor. In this manner, the unneeded and deleterious byproducts generated in the fuel solution by the nuclear reaction are continuously removed. Unlike the heterogeneous systems, whose fuel elements have to be elaborately fabricated, removed periodically, dissolved in acid, and rebuilt, the homogeneous reactor cleans itself up on a continuous basis.

This system operates at moderately high temperatures and extremely high pressures.

6. Consolidated Edison Co.—pressurized water reactor—250,000 kilowatts. Estimated total plant cost $55 million.

This is similar to the Yankee and Duquesne system of using light water as the moderator and heat transfer agent. It differs, however, in the use of highly enriched uranium fuel, and will have a thorium blanket around the reactor core, for the production of U–233. All of the core assembly will be contained within a heavy pressure vessel.

This system operates at moderate temperatures and pressures, and in this instance, a fuel oil fired super heater will increase the temperature of the steam generated to 1,500 degrees.

7. Commonwealth Edison Co.—Boiling water reactor—180,000 kilowatts. Estimated total plant cost $45 million, reactor cost $34,200,000.

This design is somewhat similar to the pressurized water reactor designed, except in this case the light water moderator will be permited to boil and produce steam directly in the reactor vessel which will be piped directly to the turbine. This eliminates the cost of a separate heat exchanger system.

Slightly enriched uranium fuel elements will be used with normal water as the moderator by operating at a temperature of around 480 degrees, and at a low enough pressure, the water moderator will be permited to boil and produce steam within the pressure vessel containing the reactor core.

8. Rural Cooperative Power Association—Boiling water reactor—22,000 kilowatts. Estimated total plant cost $5,300,000, reactor cost $3,340,000.

This reactor is similar in design to the Commonwealth Edison reactor in that the light water moderator will be permitted to boil and produce steam within the reactor pressure vessel.

It differs from the Commonwealth Edison reactor in that it uses several "spikes" or fuel elements containing fully enriched uranium interspersed between the many normal uranium fuel elements.

ADDITIONAL TYPES OF REACTORS PROPOSED BY JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, in connection with its consideration of legislation to accelerate the civilian atomic-power program, recommended five types of reactors for prototype development. This was on the basis of advice given by its consultant, Dr. W. H. Zinn, former director of the Argonne National Laboratory. These types, which are listed on page 9 of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy report on S. 4146 and described by Dr. Zinn at page 13 of the report, may be summarized as follows:

1. GAS-COOLED REACTOR

This type of reactor was conceived as one of the earliest proposals for construction at the Hanford production plant.

In essence, this design calls for normal or slightly enriched fuel elements interspersed through a graphite moderator. As the coolant, instead of using normal water flowing through the fuel element channels in the graphite moderator, a gaseous coolant would be used. Helium gas would be ideal for this purpose since it has a very low neutron capture cross-section hence would not absorb significant quantities of them.

It would be more difficult and expensive to design a gas-tight cooling system for a large reactor of this type, but several benefits would accrue.

1. A gas-cooled reactor can be operated at a much higher temperature than a water-cooled one could be.

2. The neutron economy would be higher and hence the reactor would be more efficient.

3. As a power reactor, both of the above benefits should be compounded, to give this concept a chance of being a more nearly competitive producer of economic power than several other systems. It avoids many of the inherent difficulties of other high-pressure and high-temperature systems, and theoretically will out-perform the existing low-temperature system now operating.

2. MODIFIED HANFORD TYPE (GRAPHITE MODERATED, LIGHT WATER-COOLED) REACTOR

Suggested here is a significant modification to the present design of the Hanford production reactor. Using the basic concept of normal or slightly enriched uranium fuel rods in a graphite moderator material, cooled by normal water, certain refinements suggest themselves.

For example, why not individually pressurize the fuel element tubes running through the graphite, which also serves as the coolant tube. By so doing, operating temperatures could be raised significantly and hence the reactor's efficiency. At the same time one eliminates the tremendously difficult problem of fabricating huge pressure vessels. Fabrication facilities as techniques do not exist to make such vessels for truly big reactors of say 300,000 kilowatts or larger.

3. HEAVY-WATER MODERATED REACTORS

The Savannah River production reactors are the biggest and most recent examples of this concept. Inherently this type has many advantages, particularly for the United States, in that plentiful supplies of heavy water and normal uranium are available.

The Savannah reactors were very conservatively designed to assure certain and continuous operation for national defense.

With much operating and design experience behind us, it is felt that improvements can be made.

For example, why can't this type of reactor be pressurized, and thus operated at higher temperatures and pressures? If mechanically it is uneconomic to pressurize the whole reactor core why not design pressurized fuel element and coolant tubes?

4. AQUEOUS HOMOGENEOUS REACTORS

Inasmuch as the Westinghouse-Pennsylvania Power and Light proposal under the power demonstration program is contingent upon the need for further experimentation with this system, particularly in a semi-full-scale model, it seems proper to build one forthwith.

This is basically a system wherein the uranium fuel, in the form of a soluble salt, is dissolved in water, and circulated continuously through the reactor vessel, the heat exchanger and the chemical recovery unit. The coolant serves also as a moderator.

The advantages are many: low-cost fuel preparation, and low-cost continuous fuel reprocessing, small reactor pressure vessel, reatively high temperatures and very high pressures can be obtained.

Disadvantages are several and serious: The fuel-moderator-coolant solution is highly corrosive, tends to form sludge, and to decompose under the heat and radiation; great difficulties can be expected in preventing leaks in parts of the system such as control valves and pumps.

5. LIQUID METAL-COOLED THERMAL REACTORS

Liquid metal, such as sodium or potassium, or combinations of both, have excellent possibilities as coolants for reactors. Some advantages are excellent heat transfer characteristics, small volume, and good nuclear properties.

It is therefore thought that many interesting applications of this coolant should be investigated. For example, a reactor could be designed to utilize liquid metal as a coolant, and heavy water or beryllium or beryllium oxide as a moderator. Thus you would have a thermal neutron reactor using normal or slightly enriched uranium fuel, which could operate at extremely high temperatures and efficiencies. Such concepts could be designed to utilize either the tank or tube design for containing the liquid metal coolant.

ENGLISH REACTOR PROGRAM

The English have two plutonium producing graphite moderated air-cooled piles in operation at Calder Hall. No incidental electric power is produced from these units. The first of two dual-purpose reactors being constructed at Calder Hall is now in trial operation and the second will start operation very shortly. These reactors will produce both plutonium and electric power and are graphite-moderated and gas-cooled. They are rated at approximately 75,000 electrical kilowatts each.

The second phase of the British nuclear power program consists of three stations, construction of which will start in March 1957 and will be completed by late 1960 or early 1961. The reactors for these stations will be redesigns of the Calder Hall gas-cooled type which promise to be both more efficient and somewhat lower in cost. They are rated at 300,000 electrical kilowatts per pair of reactors. These designs emphasize the production of electric power rather than the production of plutonium.

This phase of the power program will be constructed by private industrial companies under contract with the Central Electrical Authority.

The third phase of the program is scheduled to begin approximately 18 months after the start of the second phase, and to be completed by 1963. This program will consist of 3 or more power stations consisting of 2 or more reactors of roughly the same size as the phase 2 reactors and will bring to conclusion an overall program of 10 stations consisting of 20 gas-cooled reactors producing an estimated 2 million kilowatts of electricity. The total cost is estimated to be somewhere between six hundred million and seven hundred million.

The U. K. is planning to build a prototype 100,000 electrical kilowatt sodium graphite reactor which will produce power and some by-product plutonium. It might very well be that this type of reactor will supersede the gas-cooled reactors which make up the major British program.

The British are also building a fast reactor experience similar to the United States breeder reactor No. 2. It is possible that this design may find its way into the civilian power reactor program at some future date.

THE SOVIET UNION PROGRAM

As outlined in the paper delivered by Dr. Ivan Kurchatov in England recently indications are that by 1960 the Russians can be expected to have between 2 and 2½ million kilowatts of capacity generated from nuclear powered plants. A significant portion of this capacity may come into operation as early as the latter part of 1958. According to Dr. Kurchatov's statement the reactor concepts being developed include the following:

No. 1. Water moderated and water cooled thermal and epithermal (slightly more energetic than the so-called thermal range neutron but not as energetic as the so-called "fast" neutron) reactors of 200,000 kilowatts capacity.

No. 2. Graphite-moderated steam and water cooled reactors. This is the type used at the much publicized 5,000-kilowatt reactor station in Russia.

No. 3. Heterogeneous heavy water-moderated and gas-cooled reactor. (In this reactor the fuel elements and moderators are separated from each other.)

No. 4. A water-moderated thermal reactor which would furnish slightly radioactive steam directly from the reactor to a turbine. (This appears to be either a highly pressurized normal uranium light water-moderated concept of a slightly enriched light water-moderated boiling type reactor.)

No. 5. A homogeneous heavy water-moderated thermal-breeder using a thorium blanket. (Homogeneous indicating an intimate mixture of fuel and moderator.)

No. 6. A thermal graphite-moderated and sodium-cooled reactor. (This appears to be a standard graphite moderated normal uranium reactor which is cooled by circulating liquid metal through the core.)

No. 7. A fast sodium-cooled breeder reactor using the plutonium-uranium cycle. (This would appear to be utilizing a natural uranium blanket in which plutonium is produced by the reaction of neutrons being absorbed by the uranium atoms in the blanket.)

An authoritative interpretation of the Kurchatov statement indicates that probably the first three types outlined above are the most logical concepts to be used by the Russians for their announced power program.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Tennessee whether he realizes that in the drive to defeat this bill in the House of Representatives, there was introduced into the RECORD a letter from the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, pointing out that he had called a conference of the directors of all the laboratories, to see whether anyone could suggest another type of reactor which might be built.

Mr. GORE. Yes. I must say that I regretted to see such a letter used. The letter had not been called to the attention of the joint committee, and the letter referred to a meeting which likewise had not been called to the attention of the joint committee. The letter dealt with a meeting which was called, not by the Commission, but by the chairman himself. I was also surprised to see that the only expert who has actually directed the construction of a successful civilian reactor was not included in the group at the meeting. I refer to Admiral Rickover, who built the Nautilus and is now directing construction of the Shippingport plant, now under construction under the McMahon or 1946 act, which was repealed by the 1954 act.

I should like to state here that not one license has been issued under the 1954 act. The program has stagnated. Not a single plant is now under construction by terms of that act, now 2 years old.

I should like to read one sentence from the letter to which the able Senator has referred. It is a letter from Mr. Strauss, the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, to Representative STERLING COLE. I shall read one sentence; and I hope that in doing so I shall not be unfair in taking the sentence out of context. The letter is a long one, and I believe the sentence to which I refer is a complete one taken alone.

As you know, the Commission staff and the Commission itself, with the exception of one member, believe that each reactor concept which has reached a stage warranting the expenditure of substantial sums for large-scale development, either is now in process as a specific project, is in the design stage, or is actually under construction.

I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico how many large-scale atomic reactors are actually under construction.

Mr. ANDERSON. The number is zero.

Mr. GORE. Under the 1954 act?

Mr. ANDERSON. With the exception of the Shippingport plant, which is under construction under the 1946 act. Everyone understands that.

When they say "all the types," I call attention to the fact that the gas-cooled reactor, which is the basis of the British system, under which commercial power is now being produced, was proposed for construction about 1944. Three million dollars was set aside for its construction, and a contract was given to the Monsanto Chemical Co. As soon as someone found out that it was likely to be a good reactor and was likely to produce commercial power at low prices, the contract was canceled. I say that, realizing that the Democratic Party to which the Senator from Tennessee and I belong was in control at the time. I do not know what prompted the cancellation of the contract, but certainly the hour has arrived when that process or type should be tested. It was one of the types that the Senator from Tennessee was hoping would be tested, as a result of his bill; is that not correct?

Mr. GORE. Yes. But that particular type has been ready for large-scale tests since 1946. However, under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, the Atomic Energy Commission is powerless to bring about the development of a large-scale reactor of this design or any other design unless a private concern makes to the Commission a proposal to construct such a reactor. An appropriation to the Atomic Energy Commission itself is not now authorized for that purpose.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me ask the Senator from Tennessee whether the type he had under contemplation was the modified Hanford type, which is a modified graphite type of water-cooled reactor.

Mr. GORE. That is the advice of the experts in the field; and it is one of the types about which I was convinced there was need for further large-scale development.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would the Senator from Tennessee not recognize, and does he not recognize, that there has been more experience accumulated in the operation of the Hanford reactor than in the operation of any other reactor of comparable size anywhere in the world?

Mr. GORE. I do, indeed. Yet no company has come forward with a proposal to build a nuclear powerplant using the Hanford or the Savannah design.

Mr. ANDERSON. But the Senator from Tennessee may remember that several years ago, the General Electric Co.—surely a very reputable concern—proposed to the Atomic Energy Commission that it would construct at Hanford a dual-purpose reactor, making both plutonium and power; and its survey showed that it would be able to do so at a cost of between approximately $4 million and $7 million for the cost of that reactor. Is that not correct?

Mr. GORE. That is true.

I should like to add here that in making the remark that no private concern has come forward with a proposal to develop reactors of this particular type, I do not speak critically. Instead, I speak factually. I recognize and appreciate the great risk involved. I recognize with what hesitation a private utility should and does proceed in this risky field to invest large amounts of its stockholders' funds. Indeed, the State regulatory agencies and the Federal regulatory agencies will forbid a company from leaping over its head into an unprofitable field. The development of the art, therefore, has not reached the stage where we can safely place sole reliance upon private enterprise for development in this field.

I should like to see the Government demonstrate the feasibilities of the processes, thus facilitating and inviting the profitable and vigorous entrance into this field by private enterprise.

Mr. ANDERSON. I asked that question because the able junior Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] is on his feet. He has been urging that a dual-purpose reactor be constructed at Hanford.

I wish to say to both the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Washington that in the hearings on the second supplemental appropriation bill—and just today the conference committee on that bill concluded action on its report—there is testimony by the present Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission that he would like to see such a reactor built. Yet, when we introduced a bill which would give him a chance to do so, he pitched in and tried to defeat the bill.

Mr. GORE. And he succeeded, with the help of other persons and vested interests.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNAMARA in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. JACKSON. I should like to thank the distinguished junior Senator from Tennessee for the statement he has made.

I should like also to commend the distinguished chairman of the joint committee and the Senator from Tennessee for the valiant fight both of them have been carrying on in connection with this very important problem.

Is it not a fact that if we are to have a dual purpose type reactor, one which will produce power as well as special nuclear material needed for our defense program, such an undertaking would almost have to be carried on and constructed by the Government? In other words, a dual purpose reactor is the kind of reactor which will provide power and weapons material.

Mr. GORE. Also a large quantity of very dangerous radioactive waste material.

Mr. JACKSON. Exactly. It is virtually impossible for an arrangement to be made with a private company to carry out such an objective. Is it not true that the General Electric Co. desired to build this type of reactor for the Atomic Energy Commission at Hanford back in 1953, under its first proposal?

Mr. GORE. I believe that is true.

Mr. JACKSON. As I recall, at the time it made its proposal there was no attempt to undertake this tremendous job by General Electric Co. as such, but it was the desire of General Electric to do it as manager, and as agent for the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. GORE. That is true.

Mr. President, I have many more thoughts on this subject. I doubt that the 84th Congress has considered a bill more important to the future of the free world than the atomic reactor bill. As I said earlier, its defeat was one of the keenest disappointments that has ever come to me in public life. However, disappointment to a Senator is not important. What is very important is that it means that the United States of America, which, whether it desires the role or not, is burdened with the political and economic leadership of the free world, will fall farther behind in the development of nuclear power. I predict that early next year the Congress will enact such a program. The Senate will vote, not 49 to 40 for such a program, but by a larger majority. I predict that the House of Representatives will see the error of its way, and that that vision will come by reason of the pressure of events. The secondary position of the United States of America, which 3 years ago had unquestioned leadership in this field, will become apparent to all within the next few months.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that I am looking at pages 64 and 65 of the hearings on the second supplemental appropriation bill of 1957. My attention was called to this testimony because I was present when it was given, and helped to bring it out.

I had mentioned the bill which bears the name of the Senator from Tennessee, and I said I thought it might be desirable to take some of the "bets" which looked promising, such as the dual purpose reactor, which the British had tried. I said:

> Now that you have opened the subject * * * we have indicated a program that might cost as much as three or four hundred million dollars if it is all to be done. One of the members of the Commission had an idea that $190 million ought to be obligated in fiscal year 1957. I am sure that it needs to go to any such figure as that.

Then the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] pointed to the chairman and asked:

> What would be the Commission's suggestion—

Meaning the Atomic Energy Commission—

> if a second bet was to be contemplated, as Senator ANDERSON referred to it, as a second bet?

Mr. Strauss replied, as appears on page 65:

> Senator, the majority of the Commission have taken the position, and I have not seen the report to which the Senator refers, which may make provision for this—that we would like, with each reactor concept which we consider has reached the point of a full-scale plant, to try to get industry to do it.

Finally he went on with reference to the dual purpose reactor, and said that he had wanted this done, but had been voted down by the Commission.

Would not the bill of the Senator from Tennessee have permitted the Commission to do that very thing?

Mr. GORE. In that respect, it would have authorized identically what the Chairman of the Commission said should be done, and which he recommended.

There is some mystery about this. Here is a program vital to the future of America and the future development in this strategic, important field, a program conferring authorization upon the Atomic Energy Commission to accomplish the goals which we have in common.

The bill was endorsed by a vote of 14 to 0 in the committee. Yet for some reason unknown to the junior Senator from Tennessee, powerful opposition developed, which brought about its defeat. I regret it, indeed. I have not attempted here tonight to speak with partisan connotations. I have tried to avoid that. I am keenly disappointed. However, I repeat that my disappointment is utterly unimportant, but the meaning of this defeat is important to America.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. I should like to associate myself with what the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] has said. I have been at his side on this question, although I am not so well informed as he is on atomic energy. The great fight which he and the distinguished chairman of the joint committee have made in trying to bring life and light instead of death from atoms, I think will stand out as a stellar mark of the 84th Congress.

On the Congress side, I believe that the determination of a willful chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission apparently to take advice not from his technicians and scientists, so as to keep America abreast, but from politicians, thus forcing America to have a subsidiary role, a lesser role, in the development of atoms for peace than we might otherwise have will stand as a black mark on the 84th Congress. I regret that the bill was killed, not in this body, but in the other body. We may see the pain and loss of world leadership which will be the result of the ill-advised action of the Chairman of the Commission and Members of the House.

Mr. GORE. I thank the Senator for his generous references to the junior Senator from Tennessee. I thank him also on behalf of the chairman of the joint committee.

I wish to express particularly keen disappointment and embarrassment that a deliberate attempt was made to mislead the House of Representatives. I again read a sentence from a letter from the Chairman of the Commission which was read to the House of Representatives in the closing minutes of its consideration of this subject:

> As you know, the Commission's staff and the Commission itself, with the exception of one member, believe that each reactor concept which has reached a stage warranting the expenditure of substantial sums for large-scale development—

I now invite attention to the remarks of the able chairman of the joint committee, who has cited not one, but 2 or 3 types of reactors which are not only ready now, but have been ready and waiting for large-scale development. Continuing—> either is now in process as a specific research group, is in the design stage, or is actually under construction.

The fact is that there is only one large-scale reactor under construction. As a member of the joint committee, I have no knowledge of any other reactor under construction.

I will ask the distinguished chairman of the joint committee if he knows of one other reactor for which even the core has been designed?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know anything about the designing work, but I know that in the case of two, small prototypes are being built, which it is hoped, after testing, will prove of sufficient importance to permit going ahead with something else. But if that is a program, I do not recognize it as such.

Mr. GORE. Does not the Senator recognize a similarity in the misleading sentence structure in this letter and the misleading sentence structure in the full page advertisements to which he and I recently paid our respects?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I say to the Senator from Tennessee that I do. I should like to say also that in the material which I inserted in the RECORD a few minutes ago, there was included reference, as one of the possible types we could build, to the heavy-water-moderated reactor, of which the Savannah River production reactors are the largest and most recent examples.

Those reactors were designed by Dr. Zinn, who was the consultant to the committee in the presentation of our report. Certainly, if anyone knows anything about reactors, Dr. Zinn knows, beginning with his first boiling-water reactor; and he testified that a similar type of reactor could be converted to generate power in a very simple fashion, and could be operated at high temperatures and pressures. He said he could pressurize the whole reactor core. Why not, he asked, design a pressurized fuel element and coolant tubes?

Mr. President, in that way I could go through the entire statement Dr. Zinn made.

I wonder whether the Senator from Tennessee would not be interested in a small item, which appears at page 64 of the hearings. Again referring to the dual-purpose reactor, supported by both Washington Senators [Mr. MAGNUSON and Mr. JACKSON] and by the Oregon Senators [Mr. MORSE and Mr. NEUBERGER], who are very much interested in this subject.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to read first from the testimony of the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. This appears at page 64. I had asked him what we were going to do with the production which was not used up—that is, the mineral production from the uranium industry—and whether, if we did not use it up, we might not profitably use it in dual-purpose reactors. That was my question. This was his reply:

> Senator, the Commission decided some time in the spring of 1953 that the dual-purpose reactor approach was not a sound one from the point of view of the production of the development of economic power. When I became a member of the Commission in the summer of 1953, I questioned the soundness of that decision by the Commission.

That was the decision, I may say, Mr. President, not to build a dual-purpose reactor. Admiral Strauss said he questioned the soundness of that decision by the Commission. He continued:

> But in the winter of 1953–54, when the General Electric Co. made us a proposal for the dual-purpose reactor at Hanford, I was not able to carry the point.

Mr. President, all I say is that I cannot understand why he did not sit down and rejoice when the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy carried the point for him. We took it to the Senate floor, and, by a vote of 49 to 40, we got him what his heart desired.

I could have recited for him that verse from the Bible:

> What he had worshipped without knowing, came we to declare unto him.

We gave him exactly what he wanted. What did he do? When the bill went to the House, he tried to defeat it. I say that is the most amazing political performance I have ever seen.

I should like to point out that the conference of directors of laboratories was called and conducted without the knowledge of one of the members of the Atomic Energy Commission. Many people know that in the closing days of the previous Congress, I introduced a bill, known as the Murray bill, which was designed to require the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission to tell all the Commissioners what he had found out, and that there could be no secrecy among the members of the Commission.

I have in my hand a letter dated July 26, 1956, addressed to me by Thomas E. Murray, one of the Commissioners of the Atomic Energy Commission.

In that letter he points out that he did not know that this conference was being held. He said in his letter:

On July 24, 1956, I became aware of another action by the Chairman which I consider also disregarded the provisions of section 21. I learned on that date that the Chairman had called a large meeting of "the most experienced reactor specialists in the country to meet in Washington for the purpose of evaluating our reactor development program" in relation to the pending Gore bill. Yesterday I was informed by the General Manager that at the instruction of the Chairman telegraphic invitations to this meeting were sent on July 10, 1956. The meeting was held on Friday, July 20, in the Chairman's office and attended by the Chairman, Commissioner Vance, the General Manager, the Deputy General Manager, and other principal staff concerned. I was neither invited nor apprised of the fact that such an important meeting was to be held.

This is a member of the Atomic Energy Commission, on whose suggestion I introduced the Murray bill, which was passed by Congress and signed by the President of the United States.

Mr. GORE. The inference was left in the House of Representatives that these scientists disagreed with the bill then before the House. Does the Senator have any information about what preliminary understanding they reached?

Mr. ANDERSON. The next paragraph of the letter says:

A copy of a document giving a preliminary summary of the meeting was furnished to me yesterday afternoon. In my opinion it tends to support the position I have taken with respect to acceleration of the power-reactor program.

I think it is tragic——

Mr. GORE. Has Commissioner Murray's position not been consistently in support of the acceleration program?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; exactly. But after the chairman summoned people from all over the country and heard their testimony, the letter which went to the House and which was read before the House seemed to suggest that the witnesses had testified against the Gore bill, when, as a matter of fact, they had supported the Gore bill very strongly. These men are on the firing line. They realize that the United States is not testing the atomic reactors which seem to give promise; that the people of Great Britain are testing reactors which promise to give atomic power; and that the Russians are building such reactors.

The only country under the sun which does not have a chance to build them is the country in which the atomic bomb was devised and developed and into which the people of this country have put $14 billion of their treasure. But they are not allowed to have it. It can only be done in Russia and Britain and Germany and France. I say it is a tragedy. I ask unanimous consent that the letter to which I have referred may be printed in its entirety in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 26, 1956.

Hon. CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Chairman, Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, Congress of the United States.

DEAR SENATOR ANDERSON: You will recall that at a hearing before your committee on July 23, 1956, I testified that the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission without my knowledge released a statement relating to the results of the recent weapons tests. As I informed you, I believe this to be one of the most important statements ever issued by the Commission. On the basis of the information available to me, I cannot subscribe to it in its entirety. Furthermore, I believe that this action was a violation of section 21 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954.

On July 24, 1956, I became aware of another action by the Chairman which I consider also disregarded the provisions of section 21. I learned on that date that the Chairman had called a large meeting of "the most experienced reactor specialists in the country to meet in Washingon for the purpose of evaluating our reactor development program" in relation to the pending Gore bill. Yesterday, I was informed by the General Manager that at the instruction of the Chairman, telegraphic invitations to this meeting were sent on July 10, 1956. The meeting was held on Friday, July 20, in the Chairman's office and attended by the Chairman, Commissioner Vance, the General Manager, the Deputy General Manager, and other principal staff concerned. I was neither invited nor apprised of the fact that such an important meeting was to be held.

A copy of a document giving a preliminary summary of the meeting was furnished to me yesterday afternoon. In my opinion it tends to support the position I have taken with respect to acceleration of the power reactor program.

These instances make it clear to me that section 21, as now worded, has not succeeded in bringing about the result for which it was intended.

Very sincerely,

THOMAS E. MURRAY,
Commissioner.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. EASTLAND addressed the Chair.

Mr. GORE. I yield first to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to thank the three Senators who have been discussing this matter for what I consider to be the great service they endeavored to render to the people of my State with reference to the dual-purpose reactor at Hanford. A few months ago I wrote to each one of the Senators, as I wrote to each member of the committee, and asked for such assistance as they could give toward the effort we were making to establish one of these reactors at Hanford. So much electric power is taken out of our Northwest system for the purpose of the Hanford installation that it resulted in a tremendous shortage of power in our area. We had received information from engineering authorities that it was feasible and would supply sufficient power to meet the installation needs at Hanford. Not only the people in my region of the country, but of the entire United States owe a great debt of gratitude to the three Senators for the leadership they have given to us in this matter.

I am perfectly willing to stand here and make the prediction, that it will be less than a year before the people of this country will be fully awakened to the facts being brought out in this debate, and they will insist that at the next session of Congress action be taken to rectify the great wrong which has been done by the failure to get the Gore bill through both Houses. The Senator from Tennessee has introduced a bill which I hope will eventually become the law of this country.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. On the very first day of the next session of Congress I intend to introduce the bill again, and I join the Senator from Oregon in full confidence that the bill will be enacted early in the next Congress, because we shall bring unmistakably to the attention of the Congress the necessity of doing so. Events and time will establish the rectitude of our course.

Mr. President, I yield to my colleague from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I certainly wish to compliment my colleague from Tennessee for the very able fight he has made to see that the United States keeps on an even basis with other nations in the commercial development and use of atomic energy.

I also wish to compliment the able chairman of the committee [Mr. ANDERSON] for the outstanding leadership he has furnished as chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague to make clear one point, namely, whether, in view of the requirements which have been set forth as conditions precedent to the development of reactors, such as my colleague has been discussing, by private industry, under the act of 1954, he feels that unless his bill is passed, or, at least, there is some Government leadership to show the way and to demonstrate the reactors, so that a reactor can be made which will be economically feasible, we are ever going to have any program and get it going under the present situation which will put us on an even basis or enable us to maintain our lead.

Mr. GORE. Briefly responding to my able colleague from Tennessee, the art of nuclear power has not advanced to a point where we can rely safely and solely upon private enterprise for all further development in the construction and operation of large-scale plants. Further participation of the Government in this vast program is absolutely essential to the realization of the fruition of this program on which the American people have already spent $14 billion.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I gained the impression from reading the debate in the House of Representatives that the issue was presented as one of public versus private development. But, is it not a fact that, looking forward, private development will be along the line of experimentation before private industry will be willing to accept the responsibility of such a large program?

Mr. GORE. I thought it was unfortunate that the debate took that turn in the other body. The development of atomic power is a task so great and so challenging as to require the combined efforts of both American industry and the Government.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Is it not similar to what we had at the beginning of the program. It would not have been expected that private industry in 1941 and 1942 would risk such a large amount of money. The Government had to show the way and make the initial investment. In that connection, are we not presented with almost a similar situation to the one which existed at the beginning of this great effort?

Mr. GORE. There must be further effort by both Government and industry.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield further?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have appreciated greatly the contribution which the Senator made in trying to make the program a feasible one and in pointing out the dangers existing in the present program.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the New York Times of July 19, 1956, published a news item headed "Reactor Barred at Brussels Fair—Belgium Forbids It in City for 1958 on Health Basis—Big Atom Plant Studied."

That was merely a tiny experimental reactor.

The Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards, at its 18th meeting on June 3, 1956, studied the building of a plant in Michigan, and it came to certain conclusions, one of which was the following:

> It appears doubtful that sufficient experimental information will be available in time to give assurance of safe operation of this reactor unless the present fast reactor program of the AEC is amplified and accelerated as detailed below.

A committee of the Atomic Energy Commission talked about a reactor to be built in the great State of Michigan and suggested that certain things which are contemplated in the bill of the Senator from Tennessee should be accelerated.

Does not the Senator think that was the very purpose of his bill?

Mr. GORE. Indeed, so.

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to read further:

> On the other hand, if it cannot be shown that breaching of the building during a melt down is impossible, then a much more extensive EBR–II program is required. The test reactor to be operated as EBR–II should then be a genuine prototype of the PRDC reactor.

Did not the Senator's bill contemplate the construction of prototypes for those reactors?

Mr. GORE. It did. It contemplated maintaining America's leadership in this vital field of nuclear power.

Mr. ANDERSON. Exactly.

Mr. GORE. And without such a program we are falling woefully behind.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me read the last paragraph of the report:

> The committee considers it important that bold steps be taken to advance the development of the fast breeder reactor concept and commends the willingness of the Power Reactor Development Co. to risk its capital and prestige in advancing the development of this reactor concept. But the committee does not feel that the steps to be taken should be so bold as to risk the health and safety of the public. It is important for the AEC to provide sufficient development facilities and experimental information that the safety aspects of the PRDC reactor can be reliably appraised in advance of operation of the reactor itself.

Should that be regarded as a fight between public and private power, or was it an effort to help private power all over the Nation?

Mr. GORE. It was an effort to assist private enterprise to move into the field, to demonstrate, and to make it possible for both private and public enterprise to move vigorously in the development of atomic energy. I have no aversion to public power, but in the bill on which the Senate and the House voted we had completely removed the issue of public versus private power.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say to the Senator that the bill on which the House voted went far beyond the Senate bill, so it is a bill completely divorced from the issue of public versus private power.

I commend the Senator from Tennessee for his willingness to adapt his program to the requirements of the other members of the committee. I think we could have reported a straight out-and-out public power bill if those concerned had been disposed to do so. We did not do so; we took a very substantially compromised route, in the hope that a political controversy or a fight between public and private power would not develop.

I commend the junior Senator from Tennessee for taking that broad-gage point of view.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. HILL. I strongly commend the junior Senator from Tennessee upon his very able, very enlightening, and very challenging address tonight.

I also strongly commend the chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, the distinguished junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], on the vision, the wisdom, and the will to carry on this fight.

I am confident that the efforts of these two Senators will be rewarded, and that they will win this battle. They must win this battle; they will win it; because if we are to keep America free and keep America strong, we must win the fight to which they have given, wholeheartedly, so much of their support and devotion.

I feel that the American people will realize and appreciate all that they are doing and that they have already done, and will give them their loyal support.

Mr. GORE. I thank my friend, the distinguished and able senior Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, I have felt throughout this fight, for more than 2 years, and I feel now, that the United States has an especial moral responsibility to be the first to bring the benefits of the peacetime uses of atomic energy, not only to our own people, but to the people of the world.

CONVEYANCE TO INDIAN TRIBES OF CERTAIN FEDERALLY OWNED PROPERTY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3927) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to Indian tribes certain federally owned buildings, improvements, or facilities on tribal lands or on lands reserved for Indian administration, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

> That the Secretary of the Interior at the request of any Indian tribe, band, or group is authorized to convey to such Indian tribe, band, or group, by such means as he may deem appropriate, title to any federally owned buildings, improvements, or facilities (including any personal property used in connection with such buildings, improvements, or facilities) that are situated on lands of such tribe, band, or group or on lands reserved for the administration of its affairs, and that are no longer required by the Secretary for the administration of Indian affairs. Any tribe, band, or group to which property is conveyed pursuant to this act may dispose of such property whenever its governing body determines that the property is no longer needed for its use. If, at any time while property conveyed pursuant to this act remains in the ownership of any Indian tribe, band, or group, the Secretary of the Interior determines that such property is not being adequately maintained or properly utilized by such tribe, band, or group or that the property creates a health or safety hazard or other undesirable condition, he may declare a forfeiture of the conveyance and the title to such property shall thereupon revert to the United States. Such determination by the Secretary shall be final.
> SEC. 2. For the purpose of this act, the term "Indian" shall include Eskimos and Aleuts.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, does the bill include the Eskimos and the Aleuts in Alaska?

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator is correct.

The House amendment merely provides that Eskimos and Aleuts in Alaska shall also be brought within the scope of the bill. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2916) for the relief of Mrs. Alberta Bernard, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 695) to suspend the application of certain Federal laws with respect to personnel employed by the House Committee on Ways and Means in connection with the investigations ordered by House Resolution 331 and House Resolution 606, 84th Congress, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JAMES W. MURPHY, OFFICIAL REPORTER OF DEBATES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to submit a resolution recognizing the services which have been performed for the Senate during the last 60 years by Mr. James W. Murphy, the Chief Official Reporter of Senate Debates. I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 324), as follows:

Whereas James W. Murphy, senior Official Reporter of Debates for the Senate, will have completed 60 years of service to the Senate at the termination of the 84th Congress; and

Whereas James W. Murphy is 1 of 5 members of a distinguished family who have given uninterrupted service as reporters of debates for the United States Senate since 1848; and

Whereas the four other members were James W. Murphy's father, Edward V. Murphy, Sr., his brother, Edward V. Murphy, Jr.; and his two uncles, Dennis F. Murphy and James J. Murphy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate hereby acknowledges the valuable service it has received from James W. Murphy and the members of his family who have served as Official Reporters of Debates, and expresses its appreciation for such service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I feel that the Senate should not adjourn this session without formally recognizing the invaluable services which have been rendered to this body during the past 60 years by Mr. James W. Murphy, our present chief of the Senate reporters.

Those of us who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD every day know how completely and how accurately the proceedings are reported, even though they cover a multitude of subjects and an amazing flow of language, much of it extemporaneously spoken, some delivered after careful preparation. It is no mean achievement for a reporter to take down the rapid delivery of controversial debate, and I am happy to testify, as one whose service as a Member of the Senate began in January 1934, that I have never known anything but diligent, intelligent, and accurate reporting of our proceedings by Mr. Murphy and the very efficient staff he has gathered about him.

When we honor Mr. Murphy, we honor also a great family of Murphys who for 108 years have been taking down by shorthand the proceedings which have taken place upon the floor of this body.

Mr. Murphy is the son of Edward V. Murphy, who was the brother of Dennis F. Murphy, chosen by Senator John C. Calhoun as long ago as 1848 to give the Senate verbatim reports instead of the little summaries which had been the original style by which the activities on the Senate floor were reported to the public and made available in the formal records. For 48 years Dennis F. Murphy served the Senate in this capacity. His nephew, to whom I pay tribute today, has exceeded that record by 12 years, and I am ready to testify from my experience that no parliamentary body has ever had a better reporter than our present Chief of the Official Reporters. He began his service in the Senate on December 7, 1896. That was the beginning of the 2d session of the 54th Congress. We are now closing the 2d session of the 84th Congress, so that through 30 Congresses he has been a reporter of activities which began 26 years before the senior Member of this body, our beloved colleague, WALTER F. GEORGE, was first sworn in as a United States Senator. Mr. Murphy, who holds a degree of master of laws from the Law School of Georgetown University, has been a member of the District of Columbia Bar for 50 years. By association and training, as well as by personal capacity, he has been equipped to render this body the remarkable services which have accumulated to his credit during 60 years.

It is only fitting that in honoring Mr. Murphy we honor his uncle, who established the reporting service in 1848; his father, Edward V. Murphy, who beginning in 1860 was a Senate reporter for 59 years; his uncle, James J. Murphy, who was a Senate reporter for 20 years—1854–74; and his brother, Edward V. Murphy, Jr., who was one of the official corps of reporters for 25 years. I know of no similar record in the history of Congress or of any other parliamentary body.

Every Senator knows that the official reporters are in constant and intimate touch with Members of the Senate. They know the whole story of words that have been said upon the floor in the heat of debate and later withdrawn. They have been the repositories of many confidences, and I think it is to the eternal honor of the Murphy family and of the official reporters who now serve with our chief reporter, James W. Murphy, that none of them has ever been known to reveal a confidence.

I hope the resolution which I have presented may be adopted by a rising vote of the Senate in the presence of Mr. Murphy, who is sitting here.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, before the question is put to the Senate, as the minority leader I should like to join—and I know I speak for all Members on this side of the aisle, as I am sure the Senator from Wyoming speaks for Members on the other side of the aisle—in paying tribute not only to Mr. Murphy but to his family, and to all the reporters who serve us so faithfully and well in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I should like to join the distinguished Senator from Wyoming and the minority leader in their expressions of appreciation for the fine service that has been rendered not only by the present member of the Murphy family who is now serving the Senate, but by those who have preceded him. They have done magnificent work over a span of years that amounts to a substantial portion of the history of the Senate itself. It is a work that will live as long as the records of the Senate are preserved.

I congratulate Mr. Murphy; I extend again my deep gratitude for his consistently fine services, and those of his able staff, and I commend the Senator from Wyoming for calling the attention of the Senate tonight to the fine service that has been rendered by a distinguished family.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I should like to tell the distinguished Senator from Wyoming how happy I am that he has submitted the resolution, and how I have enjoyed hearing his words of tribute to Mr. Murphy and to the Murphy family. We know that Mr. Murphy is always helpful, efficient, and fine in every way. He contributes much to the work of the individual Members of the Senate, and to the Senate itself. He is, indeed, a great and devoted public servant, and a grand American.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Wyoming for submitting the resolution. In support of the resolution, I want to say that in the 20 years I have been in the Senate I have always found Mr. Murphy to be a courteous gentleman and an efficient and able public servant. He typifies to my mind and in my mind what is fine about a career public servant, a public servant who has given his life to public service. I know I speak for many other Senators as well as myself when I express my appreciation to him, and extend to him my best wishes for everything that is good.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am always delighted when I see the Senate unanimous about anything. I want to say the Senator from Wyoming could not have presented to us tonight a resolution about which we could be more unanimous, with more enthusiasm, than the resolution he has submitted, which gives us the opportunity to honor Mr. Murphy.

He is not only a great public servant, as has been repeated on the floor of the Senate, but he is a kindly and a gentle person. He is one who has taken a great deal of interest in the Members of the Senate, over and above his line of duty. When on occasion we have found ourselves ill, it has always been a beautiful thing to have had a word with Mr. Murphy.

I want to say we can call him friend because he has been our friend. I wish to say good naturedly that he is the only man who has ever been able to put words in my mouth, and he can speak for me any time that he wants to.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, Mr. Murphy has not only done his work ably, but he has furnished something that is always welcome and helpful in the Senate. That is good humor and good cheer to the Members of the Senate in lightening their burdens and work. It is certainly wonderful that we have been able to have Mr. Murphy and so many capable members of his staff to help us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to join the Senator from Wyoming in paying my respects to a man who is one of the most able public servants I have ever had contact with. I know every Member of the Senate feels likewise. I wonder if the Senator from Wyoming would have any objection to the entire membership of the Senate joining in cosponsoring the resolution. I am sure the resolution sets forth the sentiments of each and every one of us.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure the Senator from Delaware is correct when he states that the resolution represents the feelings of every Senator.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I can enthusiastically support the resolution. Speaking for one Senator, I want to say that Mr. Murphy has been of valued service to me since I have been in the Senate. I believe it was Mark Twain who said "the difference between the exact word and almost the exact word is the difference between lightning and lightning bug." Mr. Murphy supplies us with the exact words, and I wish to thank him very much.

Mr. LEHMAN. I rise to express my great pleasure that the Senator from Wyoming has submitted his resolution, which I, of course, wholeheartedly support.

I think it is an amazing thing to see how accurately the proceedings are reported in this body. In the 7 years I have been a Member of the Senate, very, very few errors have come to my attention. I remember one instance when, through an inadvertence, the speech I made was attributed to another Senator. It was not a serious matter at all, but I brought it to the attention of Mr. Murphy. Even though the matter was trivial in character and of no importance at all, Mr. Murphy took the trouble to write me a three-page letter to explain the error and express his regret. That showed the pride Mr. Murphy had in his work, and the pride he has in those who work under him. I am glad there is taking place this recognition of Mr. Murphy and his work.

Mr. JENNER. I wish to express my personal thanks for the great service Mr. Murphy has rendered this body and this country. Many times he has been helpful to me, and I am sure to every other Member of the Senate. I know he exemplifies the best in public service today.

Mr. BENDER. I should like to associate myself with those who have spoken so favorably about Mr. Murphy. I have not bothered Mr. Murphy too much, because I have not said too much in the past 2 years. We all appreciate his work, and I hope hereafter we shall show our appreciation to all those who work here by raising their pay.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, in connection with the pending resolution, I should like to join in paying tribute to Mr. Murphy. It was my pleasure to become acquainted with Mr. Murphy when I first came to the Senate, 10 years ago. Many a time Mr. Murphy has given me sound suggestions and very good advice. I have always appreciated his helpfulness and courtesy.

Mr YOUNG. Mr. President, I probably have more reason to be grateful for the fine work done by Mr Murphy than has any other Member of the Senate. As my colleagues know, I often have the habit of talking too rapidly. Mr. Murphy and his associates have ably recorded what I have had to say. He has been a wonderful public servant. I am very happy to join in these highly deserved tributes to him.

Mr CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, somewhat over a year ago I had occasion to make a little study of some of the veteran employees of the Senate. I found that right at the top of the list was our friend, Mr. Murphy. He has a record, both personally and through his family, that is unbeatable, as has been stated many times this evening.

He is a friend of all of us, and we wish him the best of everything in the world.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. President, I wish to join my distinguished colleague in paying tribute to a great American. Mr. Murphy has been extremely kind to me on many occasions. He is always most efficient, and he has always shown extreme courtesy whenever he is called upon to do something out of the ordinary.

I wish for him many, many years of happiness.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, until this evening I thought I was the only Member of the Senate who had received such unusually fine treatment at the hands of Mr. Murphy. I should like to say that I realize now that he has treated all Members of the Senate alike, and I am glad to know of it.

I am always amazed that the Official Reporters record so accurately as they do what we Members of the Senate have to say, because often we become involved in hassles and do not speak too plainly, and sometimes we do not speak the best of English. The Official Reporters always straighten out such interchanges. I am deeply appreciative. One who has served us as well as Mr. Murphy has cannot be too greatly honored.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I am one of the host of friends and admirers of Mr. Murphy, all of whom have been the recipients of his kindness and his courtesy.

Long ago I discovered that Mr. Murphy takes great pride in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; he wants the speeches and proceedings of the Senate, as recorded in the RECORD, to be presentable and readable and to represent the responsible body which he considers the Senate to be, and which all of us sincerely believe it to be.

I may add that Mr. Murphy has demonstrated a patience which contradicts his Irish name.

I congratulate him from the bottom of my heart.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I must assure the Senator from South Dakota that patience is one of the primary virtues of the Irish people. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish the RECORD to show that I join in the words of praise and the expressions of gratitude to Mr. Murphy, for his wonderful public service.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, no one who reads the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD can fully appreciate how deeply indebted we are to Mr. Murphy for correcting the many mistakes we make in our extemporaneous statements. I take pleasure in paying tribute to him tonight for his excellent work, his genial character, and the many times he has protected me in the RECORD.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, I take this occasion to join my colleagues in expressing my appreciation to Mr. Murphy on the occasion of the celebration of his 60th year of service to the Senate.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the most unusual publication printed in the United States. At the beginning of the assembly of material, unlike any daily newspaper or magazine, the Lord only knows how many pages and how much type will be required before "30" is written at the end of the galley proof to show that the Congress has completed its work for that day.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is different from most newspapers. It is said that there is nothing so old as yesterday's newspaper, and nothing so uncertain as tomorrow's. There is nothing so uncertain as today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or tomorrow's. As to the age of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, whatever words are spoken here are solidly engraved in the public record, as though they were engraved in the hard, lasting granite of the State of Vermont.

The city editor of this unusual publication has served not only this generation of Senators, but past generations. His father and uncles served at an even earlier time, to carry on the great tradition which results in the running play-by-play account of the transactions of the Senate becoming a living document for historians to see.

I am glad that slips of the tongue, split infinitives, and all the bad grammar which sometimes creeps into our speech during the heat of debate can be corrected by the able and competent Mr. Murphy, who has served us so well and so faithfully.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, during my necessary absence from the floor of the Senate earlier this evening, it is my understanding that the very able and distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] submitted a resolution paying tribute to Mr. James W. Murphy, dean of the Senate reporters, for the invaluable service rendered by him to all the Members of this body.

At this time, I ask unanimous consent to join as a sponsor of this resolution, for I, too, wish publicly to express thanks and appreciation to this great public servant who has so unselfishly given of his time and talent in being helpful to me.

I sincerely trust that Mr. Murphy, a true friend to all of us, with God's help, will be with us for many years to come.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I should also like to have the privilege of associating myself with the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], because, I may say, Mr. Murphy has been exceedingly kind to the junior Senator from Minnesota, and I think I owe him a debt of gratitude.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, there are few documents more important than the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Locked in its pages are the debates, the resolutions, the bills, the memorials, the petitions, and the legislative actions that are the reason for the existence of the Senate. It is a document which affects our laws, our precedents, and our judicial decisions.

The basis of this record is the able, loyal, hard-working, highly skilled corps of official reporters who take down the debates. And presiding over them is a man dearly beloved by us all—James W. Murphy.

Day after day he sits at his desk in the official reporters' room, scanning the words that we utter in debate. His skilled hand puts on paper the highly complex activities which must be daily recorded and published for all the world to see. Under his deft touch, the technicalities, the contradictions, the subtle nuances, and the bewildering phrases arrange themselves in a neat and orderly fashion. They fall into place in such a way that they have coherence and logic and reason.

Jim Murphy is a man who is vital to the Senate. For many years he has made—and is still making—a contribution to the life of this Nation of which he can always be proud. He is a man of integrity, a man of good humor, a man of tact. I am very proud that I have this opportunity to say to him that we all respect his services, and regard him with affection and esteem. And I also want to say to his family and to his loved ones that he is a loyal American who has served his country well and faithfully.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I desire to associate myself with the fine tributes paid Mr. Murphy. I want to take this occasion to thank him for his many acts of kindness and the cooperation he has invariably shown, and to wish him many more years of service and good health and happiness.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues in paying tribute to Mr. James W. Murphy, the very efficient Chief Reporter of Debates of the Senate. The reporters of debates of the United States Senate, are, I think, models of efficiency and good temper. The strain of reporting the proceedings of the Senate is very great. Mr. Murphy handles a tremendous volume of work. He is always able to put our somewhat scrambled grammar into impeccable English. When we make faulty references to the classics and to English literature, he can be depended upon to straighten out our inaccuracies.

For scores of years Mr. Murphy has conducted the work of the office of official reporters of debates with great intelligence and efficiency. That was also true of his father and his uncle before him. For over a century the House of Murphy has preserved with accuracy the debates in this body.

I want to say that I think Mr. Murphy is one of the most remarkable and one of the finest human beings I have ever known. I only hope that too great a strain has not been placed upon him in the concluding days of this session. In company with all other Members of the Senate, I wish for him happiness and a long life. The accuracy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is a tribute to his life.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, until the moment when I walked onto the floor, I did not know that the Senate was engaged in a very worthwhile endeavor, this evening, namely, in paying tribute to a man who has corrected more senatorial errors of grammar and rhetoric over the past many years than Senators have corrected for themselves in going through their remarks.

Mr. James W. Murphy is one of the most remarkable men I have ever known. The Senate of the United States has been fortunate in many respects in those who serve it; but certainly no one has contributed more to maintaining the dignity of the Senate and our public stature in the minds of our constituents than has Mr. Murphy. Not only is he a gentleman, but he is a very great scholar. He can correct any errors which we may make when we undertake to quote Shakespeare or anyone else, in delivering our statements here on the floor of the Senate.

I can only express the hope that long after I have gone to my last reward—whatever it may be—the Senate may have the services of Mr. James W. Murphy for another 60 years, because I think that would contribute as much to maintaining the position of the Senate in our form of government and in the American public mind as any other one thing that might happen.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate, but I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Georgia, and to express my appreciation of the work of Mr. Murphy and his colleagues.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I was in the Chamber when the Members of the Senate began eulogizing Mr. Murphy; but I had to leave the Chamber at 8 o'clock, in order to attend a conference. Since I was afraid I might miss this opportunity, I spoke to Mr. Murphy personally.

I wish to take this opportunity to join my colleagues in paying tribute to this man, who has meant so much to the Senate and to individual Senators over the past 60 years. It has not been at all unusual for him to look us up, to call us at our offices or at our homes, in order to straighten out some little matter which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

He has been most efficient, most courteous, and most kind. Through the years, he has been a real asset to the Senate. I join my colleagues in wishing for him many more years of great happiness and good health.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I wish to say that I do not know how Mr. Murphy could have done a better job, and I do not know how he could have been more cooperative.

I wish to join in the remarks of all other Senators about Mr. Murphy, except I would like to multiply by about five times all the fine things that have been said about him.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, I should like to join my colleagues in paying tribute to Mr. Murphy, and I wish to associate myself with what my colleagues have said about him.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues in paying tribute to a most worthy American, Mr. James W. Murphy, the senior official reporter of the United States Senate. He has always been most helpful to me. My hope is that his health will continue to be good, and that he will be with us for many more years.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, in paying this tribute to Mr. Murphy, our friend and our collaborator, the Senate adopt the resolution by a rising vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair). Before putting the resolution to a vote, let the Chair state, following the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], that the United States Senate without a Murphy would be the same as Ireland without a Murphy. [Laughter.]

We are very happy to pay this tribute to so fine a public servant.

I well recall the day when I first entered this Chamber—somewhat bewildered by the brilliant personalities around me and somewhat blinded by the glaring lights. But Mr. Murphy greeted me with a cordial smile and with the words, "If I can ever be of any help to you, please let me know." They are words the junior Senator from Delaware will long remember.

The question now is on agreeing to the resolution. Those in favor of agreeing to the resolution will please rise.

[The Members of the Senate rose and applauded.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is unanimously agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all of the tributes which have been paid to Mr. Murphy be printed at the same place in the RECORD, so all of them will appear in continuity, and that they be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONVEYANCE OF LA PUNTILLA MILITARY RESERVATION TO THE COMMONWEALTH OF PUERTO RICO

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9506) to provide for the conveyance of La Puntilla Military Reservation, San Juan, P. R., to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the pending business is Calendar No. 2849, House bill 9506.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army to convey 3.24 acres of land, together with improvements thereon, known as La Puntilla Military Reservation, in the city of San Juan, P. R., to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, without monetary consideration therefor, in order that the more than 100-year-old naval arsenal may be restored and preserved as an historical monument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 9506) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPIRATION OF THE GI BILL OF RIGHTS AND VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION PROGRAM

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on yesterday, the most succesful program in the history of veterans' legislation came to an end. I refer to the expiration of the educational and on-the-job and on-the-farm training provisions of the GI bill of rights and the vocational rehabilitation program for World War II veterans.

I am proud to have had the privilege to be one of the sponsors of the GI bill of rights and the vocational rehabilitation program, and to coauthor subsequent amendments to implement and expand the programs.

When Congress undertook these broad and imaginative steps 12 years ago, a new world of educational opportunities was opened. In my home State of Alabama alone, a total of 185,000 World War II veterans benefited from the GI bill and the vocational rehabilitation program. More than 8 million veterans received educational training and vocational rehabilitation throughout the country.

In these closing hours of the session, I shall not undertake to enumerate the many benefits which our veterans have derived from the programs and the profound effect the programs have had on the intellectual, cultural, the economic, and the scientific strength and well-being of our Nation. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, following my remarks, an article from the New York Times of July 22, an article from the Washington Post and Times Herald of July 25, an article from the August issue of Coronet magazine, and the text of Eric Sevareid's CBS Radio News Analysis of July 23, which so well review and evaluate the success of the programs.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 22, 1956]

EDUCATION IN REVIEW—GI BILL, EXPIRING AFTER 12 YEARS, HAS BEEN, IT IS AGREED, AN OUTSTANDING SUCCESS

(By Benjamin Fine)

On Wednesday the GI bill of rights setup for veterans of World War II on June 22, 1944. expires. In 12 years, nearly 8 million ex-servicemen attended school and college, took on-the-job training or worked on farms. The whole program cost the Government $14,500,000,000.

Educators began last week to take stock of this great educational venture. At one time college campuses were swamped with veterans. A total of 2,200,000 veterans took advantage of the GI bill to go to college or graduate school, with up to $500 in tuition fees, and subsistence grants ranging from $75 to $110 a month from the Government.

There were misgivings at first. But the educators soon found that the veterans were characterized by maturity and strong motivation. The veterans were substantially older than their civilian classmates. And they wanted to make up for lost time.

Perhaps the situation at Yale University is typical of the institutions that found their campuses overcrowded with ex-servicemen. Some 15,000 veterans attended Yale in the 12 years. A maximum of 5,900 were enrolled during the spring term of 1947. Yale found that scholastically the vets did better work than the other students. But, as Richard R. Shank, head of the veterans' affairs program at Yale puts it, the University benefited also from the rise in standards achieved by the veterans.

BENEFITS CONFERRED

The GI bill, educators generally agree, opened avenues of educational opportunities to wide numbers of veterans qualified in every way except financially. It did so without directly subsidizing schools. Nor were the administrative controls too objectionable. Many veterans continued their education at the graduate level. This, of course, increased the country's supply of research scientists and Ph. D. scholars to teach as well as to man posts in private industry.

The GI bill discounted the theory, held in some quarters, that only those able to afford it should take graduate studies. It has given impetus to a fellowship program sponsored by industry and the Federal Government.

The Columbia University campus probably had the largest number of GI's of any institution. Some 85,000 veterans have attended Columbia since the program began. The peak year was reached in 1947 when 17,733 ex-servicemen were enrolled, comprising 74 percent of the male student body.

Contrary to expectations, few veterans gave up before completing their educational objectives. The ease and completeness with which the ex-GI's fitted into the academic environment proved heartening.

"Veterans seem to be more interested in public affairs and world problems, and in equipping themselves for sound citizenship," one official summed up. "They have brought to our campuses an atmosphere of serious purpose and a sense of responsibility."

The GI program is bound to have lasting results. It has trained 238,000 teachers, 450,000 engineers, 180,000 doctors and nurses, 113,000 scientists and 36,000 clergymen.

There is little doubt that the veterans brought a sense of maturity previously unknown to college campuses. This view was best expressed by Dr. Herold C. Hunt, Under Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and former Chicago school superintendent and Harvard University professor.

HIGH LEVEL OF ACHIEVEMENT

Having shared the experience and responsibility of winning World War II," he said, "many veterans came to college with a deeper sense of values than those who came directly from high schools. Their seriousness brought good scholarship and a high level of achievement. The progress they are now making in their peacetime pursuits confirms this observation.

"As a former superintendent of schools, I have observed the benefits of the G. I. Bill of Rights at first hand. I feel that inestimable good has come from educational and training opportunities the bill made possible."

According to Dr. Henry T. Heald, president of New York University, who recently has been named as president of the Ford Foundation, the GI bill was one of the most enlightened pieces of legislation enacted by Congress in the wake of any military effort in which the Nation has been engaged.

Educators in all parts of the country, in almost every type of institution, speak highly of the GI program. Dean Fred W. Ajax, coordinator of veterans' affairs at Georgia Institute of Technology, says, "The veterans' program was worth every cent spent by the Government, both to the individual veteran and to the country. Federal aid to higher education in peacetime is more than justified by the results of the federally sponsored GI bill.

UNDER HANDICAPS

Not only were the GI's ambitious and eager to complete their courses, but many worked under tremendous handicaps. Some 600,000 disabled veterans received vocational rehabilitation, some of them in colleges. A striking example is the Tulane University veteran who had lost both hands and one eye but completed an architecture course with an outstanding record.

Many institutions created veterans' divisions. Brown University set up a separate college for ex-servicemen in the fall of 1946 for men whose academic background was not up to those of the regular students. All, however, who had the equivalent of a high school education had been told by Uncle Sam that they could go to college. College gave them this chance to show that acquired maturity and greater incentive to learn could offset any deficiencies of previous training.

They took the same course under the same faculty and with the same grading system as the students of the regular college. The only differences were that their classes and laboratories were held in the late afternoon and evening (thus utilizing the Brown plan during off-hour periods) and they did not participate in any extracurricular activities. They made good. Most of them were able to transfer successfully to the college proper.

Although in the main the GI program did an excellent job, in its early years some unscrupulous promoters made financial killings. They organized phony trade schools or other institutes to get a share of the free tuition funds. Some GI's in these schools, spent Government money on ballroom dancing, toying with photography or taking up horseback riding. The Government cracked down in 1948, when the Veterans' Administration tightened up its requirements.

Now the Korean veterans, 350,000 strong, are on the Nation's campuses and in the classrooms—not a large number, in comparison with their predecessors. But they are being made welcome by educators impressed with the success of the World War II veterans.

GI EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM ENDS

(By Jean White)

The world's largest veterans' training program—the educational GI bill of rights—closes out today but not without leaving its imprint on American life and education.

In its 12 years of existence, the GI bill gave more than 7,800,000 World War II veterans the chance to continue their schooling or learn new skills.

The GI bill training program has cost $14.5 billion. This investment, the Veterans Administration emphasized yesterday, is now paying dividends to the Nation from improved education and skills of its citizenry.

With the end of the educational provisions of the GI bill today, only a small handful of World War II veterans will continue their studies under Government grants. These enlisted in 1945 and 1946 under the Voluntary Recruitment Act.

KOREAN BILL IN EFFECT

But the veteran will not disappear from college campuses and training schools. Under the Korean GI bill, now in its 4th year, some 750,000 former GI's are expected to go to school this fall.

World War II was at its bitterest in Europe and the Pacific when President Roosevelt signed the GI bill into law on June 22, 1944.

Not all educators and college administrators welcomed the vast Government-financed educational venture. Some warned against all sorts of dire effects on education: rowdy veterans overrunning colleges; millions loafing on Government expense; college standards and traditions overturned.

It took only a short time for the returning veteran-student to dispel these fears. On the whole, he was mature, serious, intense, determined to reach a job goal as quick as possible.

STANDARDS "VERY HIGH"

"The standards of performance of GI students were very high," a local college official said yesterday. "I hope students in the future can achieve as fine records as the returning servicement did."

He is O. S. Colcough, dean of the faculties at George Washington University. At the peak of GI enrollment, George Washington had 7,000 veterans on its student rolls at times.

Educational and training institutions in the Washington area had a big stake in the GI bill. Some 123,616 World War II veterans received training here.

Of the total, 54,193 went to institutions of higher learning, 46,820 attended trade and high schools, 13,946 took on-the-job or apprenticeship training, 8,158 enrolled for correspondence courses, and 499 received on-the-farm training.

Under Public Law 16—which also ends today except for special hardship cases—6,672 disabled veterans were helped to become self-reliant here. Of these, 2,750 went to institutions of higher learning.

One of every two of World War II's 15½ million veterans took some advantage of the educational provisions of the GI bill.

Of the more than 7,800,000 qualifying for tuition and monthly subsistence payments, 2,200,000 went to college. Another 3,500,000 attended schools below college level. On-the-job or on-the-farm training attracted 2,100,000 more.

A recent survey showed that the median income of veterans has gone up 51 percent over the last 6 years. This compares with a 19-percent rise for nonveteran males in the same age group.

TO OUR GI'S WITH THANKS

(By Martin L. Gross)

When 39-year-old ex-mess sergeant Joseph Cazulo-Alvarez, of Levittown, Long Island, received his bachelor's degree at the June commencement at nearby Adelphi College, he symbolized the end of what has been called "one of the noblest experiments in American history."

Of 350 graduates, Joe was the only GI of World War II still studying under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, more affectionately known to 15,600,000 veterans as the GI Bill of Rights. A few weeks later, on July 25, 1956, the famed educational program that brought the trench coat and baby carriage to America's colleges and vocational schools came to an end.

Joe Cazulo-Alvarez, the last ex-dogface at Adelphi, had been a staff sergeant in the Middle East until his discharge in 1946. For 5 years he worked as a chef at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City, taking evening courses during 2 of the years. Then he decided to get a college education by studying full time. For this, the Government, according to the GI law, paid Joe's tuition and gave him $105 a month subsistence to help support his wife and pay the GI mortgage on his ranchhouse until he received his degree in dietetics and nutrition.

"I could never have done it without the GI bill," Joe says appreciatively.

Since the GI's bill's inception in 1944, almost every World War II ex-serviceman has used at least one of its many benefits. Over 7,800,000, or 51 percent, trained in schools, on the farm and on-the-job for every civilian occupation from nuclear physics to shoemaking. The bill turned out 440,000 engineers, 63,000 doctors, 23,000 nurses, 113,000 scientists, 237,000 teachers, 42,000 machinists, 36,000 ministers—all in drastically short supply in postwar America.

More than 4,500,000 vets bought homes under the small downpayment GI mortgages; 9 million collected unemployment benefits from the 52–20 club which terminated in 1949; some 300,000 received GI business and farm loans to develop everything from cattle ranches in Florida to two kiddie shops in Washington, D. C., opened by two ex-WAC's.

For all this, Uncle Sam's tab was some $19 billion. Has it been worth all that money? Has it really done the veterans and America any good?

After the Civil War, returning Union soldiers were given $100. Spanish-American War veterans, at first, got only a hopeful pat from Teddy Roosevelt. In 1932, disgruntled World War I servicemen made their bonus march on Washington only to be dispersed by the United States Army. Veterans, it seemed, were inexorably doomed to be the "lost" generation of the society they fought to protect.

Then on June 22, 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the bulky Servicemen's Readjustment Act, Public Law 346, 78th Congress, with the comment: "[This] gives emphatic notice to the men and women of our Armed Forces that the American people do not intend to let them down."

Today, 12 years later, the record indicates that the GI bill has been a miraculously successful social experiment without precedent—with a resounding impact on the country's very way of life. At a cost of $1,800 per veteran, it has been a veritable banker, friend, counselor, cosigner and both rich and Dutch uncle to him. It has not only helped restore him to a position he might have had without the war, but as from all evidence made Mr. Ex-GI (average age 36½) the educational, financial, and professional leader of America.

He earns almost $600 a year more than the nonveteran ($3,631 against $3,065) according to last compiled figures in 1953, with probably a broader spread today. He is a college man (freshman) compared to the 10th grade education of the nonveteran. Courtesy of GI mortgages, the chances are better than average that he owns his own home; and he has unusually high representation in the skilled fields.

"The GI bill might seem expensive. The training program alone cost $14,500 million," a Veterans' Administration spokesman explains. "But just the extra income tax that vets who trained now pay Uncle Sam comes to over $1 billion a year. By 1968, they'll have paid the program off in full."

The first rumors of free schooling for vets were tossed off as latrine hearsay by GI's from New Guinea to Sicily. But 2 weeks after D-day, the legislation was passed unanimously and duly nicknamed "The GI bill of rights." The education provision guaranteed full tuition up to $500 a year plus textbooks and monthly subsistence that eventually became $75 a month for single students, $105 for married men and women, and $120 with a child.

Though the VA itself predicted that only 7 percent would take training, over 2,200,000 vets went to college on the GI bill. In 1948, for instance, 74 percent of all men students and 10 percent of the women at Columbia University were veterans. Two of every five were married.

Overnight, the American campus was transformed. Smith took in its first man in 70 years. Freshman skull caps disappeared. Hell Week at Cornell became Help Week. Well-traveled mature veterans needled harassed professors into reevaluating lectures they had delivered unchanged for 20 years.

The new student body was an eager, poor, hard-working group anxious to make up for lost time.

Now, with all the records in, Dean of Admissions Elwood C. Kastner, of New York University, which trained more GI's (75,000) than any other college, says, "The World War II GI's were among the best and keenest students we ever had. They caused colleges to expand and because of it the schools are now better able to meet the large enrollments. What we learned from them has increased the efficiency of educational techniques in our colleges."

Probably 48 percent of the GI students couldn't have gone to college without the bill. And of them, 2 out of 3 were gifted students.

Floyd T. Gould came home after 3 years overseas with no idea of what he wanted to do. He took a menial job in a laundry, then switched to selling soap. He tried, then quit, a typing course on the GI bill.

By 1948, disgusted, he went to the VA for free vocational counseling, a service 1,500,000 vets have used. When the tests showed he had an outstanding IQ and a natural tendency for sciences, he was enrolled in college as a GI physics student.

Now, 8 years later, exlaundryman Floyd Gould has 3 degrees, including a doctor of philosophy degree, and is an atomic physicist at the AEC's Brookhaven National Laboratory.

The vets proved to be a levelheaded group: 300,000 went back and finished grade and high school, and 3 million more studied trades including auto mechanics, upholstery, electronics, commercial art, etc.

Veteran Pat Anthony learned to be a lion tamer on the GI bill. The VA raised a bureaucratic eyebrow but finally approved his application to study the "trade" at Lewis Groebel's wild animal farm in California. Anthony's 10-lion act, valued at over $30,000, is now headlined by major circuses.

Actor Rod Steiger, famed for his TV role of Marty and Jud in the film Oklahoma, learned his craft as a GI student. Rod had only 1 year of high school before he went into service. He fought as a combat torpedoman in the Navy, and after the war got a civil-service clerk's job in Newark, N. J. Evenings, he did some amateur acting in the employee's dramatic group.

"Rod, you ought to study fulltime," the director told him one day. "You've got talent."

"On what?" Rod asked, and the director reminded him that the GI bill covered theatrical schools.

Stieger studied at the American Theatre Wing and the Actors' Studio, Inc., for 4 years before launching his successful career. Today he's one of the bill's most enthusiastic rooters.

"Without it," he says, "I'd probably still be a clerk in Newark."

The GI bill has no greater enthusiast than the ex-GI who lives in suburban comfort with his wife and 2 children in a $13,000 6-room ranch house—courtesy of the home-loan provision of the bill. Veterans—including a great many who couldn't otherwise afford it—have bought over 4,500,000 GI bill homes (24 percent of the homes built in the country), making them our largest home-owning group.

The GI bill has been bread and butter to the home-building industry, now the second largest in America, and to allied industries such as banking and building materials. In fact, 1 of every 6 people is gainfully employed either directly or indirectly by the home-building business.

A little riskier, but just as rewarding, has been the GI business and farm-loan program under which the Government guarantees 50 percent of a GI's bank loan up to $4,000. So far, Uncle Sam has backed 295,000 vets, an average of $3,000 each. Seven out of ten have been repaid in full to date, and only 1⅓ percent of the money has defaulted.

The life of the GI bill of rights has not been idyllic by any means. The 52–20 Club, for example, came under attack as an invitation for veterans to loaf. Actually, the average ex-GI used less than one-fifth of his $20-a-week benefits. The majority did look for, and find, work.

The material benefits of the GI bill of rights to World War II veterans have been legion—education, jobs, businesses, farms, homes—but, greatest of all, it has given added self-respect and faith in America to an entire generation.

[From newscast by Eric Sevareid of July 23, 1956]

Good evening. This week an unprecedented social experiment comes to its official end after 12 extraordinary years. The GI bill of rights expires on Wednesday. Its balance sheet today makes one think back to impressions and forecasts of years ago and reflect on the unpredictability of the American person, upon how wrong one can be in attempting to plot his future course of behavior.

I can remember discussions with serious-minded American officers and soldiers during the war, in the Far East, in Europe, in Africa; men trying to guess what would happen to those millions of GI's about us, in their sloppy uniforms, what would happen when they were suddenly released back into the established order of peacetime society. Many were full of forebodings. Here were raw young men, their minds half formed, taught at one and the same time to accept the semislaver yof the military discipline, and the ultimate license, the right to kill. They would go back to orderly society, many thought, contemptuous of all restraint upon them, or, on the other extreme, bereft of personal initiative, expecting their lives to continue to be arranged by somebody else.

In particular, so many then thought, further education would be lost to these men; they would not accept disciplines again for years to come, self-disciplines least of all. Many would be too old, past the formative years that are best for awakening the mind to the world of ideas; they could turn out to be, in moral and intellectual growth, a lost generation.

I can remember, soon after the war, visiting my own university, seeing the strange, most uncollegiate trailers on the campus that housed the swarming thousands of GI students, their wives and children. The whole atmosphere of the place was changed; I asked a former philosophy professor of mine if the old academic spirit was being destroyed, if standards had been weakened and diluted to accommodate this mass. He said, "I was sure at the beginning all that would happen; but I was completely wrong. These are the best, most serious students we ever had; our standards have been tightened, not loosened."

And this was the general experience of most American colleges. It was a giant headache to the managers of the physical plant, but an astonishment, pleasure, and inspiration to those managing the minds of the young who wanted to understand the confusing world whose four corners they had lately been cast upon and told to save. Something unforeseen had happened to millions of green GI's. They had sounded, in Asia and Africa and Europe as if the whole world outside their own home town, bored them to tears, as if, once home, they would shut the rest of the world and its problems out of their minds forever. Many sounded bitter about their enforced role, as if they would expect the country to take care of them the rest of their lives.

The reverse occurred. The GI Bill of Rights tapped and revealed resources of personal independence and resolve that few had suspected. Nearly two and a quarter million veterans took advantage of the bill to go to college; in all some eight million took on some form of advanced training they had not had. There was some boondoggling, by both veterans and phoney, fly-by-night institution, but for the most part it was very serious business. The self-discipline of study was hard, at first, but surprisingly few gave up. College standards, courses, and instructions, were improved, not worsened by their presence.

And the American society is much better off by reason of this extraordinary experiment and demonstration. By the New York Times accounting the GI program has produced nearly a quarter million teachers, nearly a half million engineers, over a hundred thousand scientists, nearly two hundred thousand doctors and nurses and some thirty-six thousand ministers.

It is a record that all those currently uneasy about Federal aid to education might, very seriously, consider.

This is Eric Sevareid in Washington.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN INDIAN LANDS IN WYOMING TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 3467.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Shoshone Indan Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation are authorized to convey to the United States the tribes' interests in the 388.23 acres of land that are described in section 2 of the act, subject to a reservation to the tribes of all minerals, including oil and gas, and mineral rights, which may be exercised only in a manner that does not interfere with the construction and operation of the dam site and reservoir of Anchor Dam, a part of the Owl Creek unit, Missouri River Basin project in Hot Springs County, near Thermopolis, Wyo. The conveyance shall be for a price that is mutually agreeable to the tribes and to the Secretary of the Interior, based upon the fair market value of the land. The consideration payable to the tribes pursuant to this act shall be paid out of funds appropriated for the Missouri River Basin project and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit and for the use of the respective tribes in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 19, 1947 (61 Stat. 102), as amended by the act of August 30, 1951 (65 Stat. 208).

SEC. 2. The lands that are referred to in section 1 of this act are: Lots 1 and 2, section 13, northwest quarter, north half southwest quarter, west half northeast quarter, and northwest quarter southeast quarter, section 24, township 8 north, range 1 west, Wind River meridian, Wyoming, containing 388.23 acres.

SEC. 3. In the event of the failure or abandonment of the Anchor Dam feature of the Owl Creek unit the interest in the land acquired pursuant to this act shall be reconveyed by the Secretary of the Interior to the tribes and the title shall be held in the same manner it was held before such acquisition: Provided, That the purchase price paid by the United States shall be returned by the tribes.

SEC. 4. The portion of the construction costs of the Owl Creek unit that is allocable to the irrigable lands of the Shoshone and Arapahoe Tribes of the Wind River Reservation shall be a lien against such lands, but the assessment and collection of such costs shall be deferred in accordance with the provisions of the act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564). The irrigable lands of the tribes shall be entitled to their pro rata share of the water storage and regulation benefits accruing from the construction and operation of the Owl Creek unit upon payment by the tribes, under appropriate contract, of their pro rata share of the annual operation and maintenance costs of the Owl Creek unit.

SEC. 5. The members of the Shoshone and Arapahoe Tribes shall be permitted to fish on the lake created by Anchor Dam, without a license, as if the lake were within the exterior boundaries of the Wind River Reservation, but the Indians shall be subject to all other provisions of applicable conservation laws and regulations.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, request a conference thereon with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. WATKINS, and Mr. BARRETT conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY ON H. R. 9424

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to submit a favorable report on H. R. 9424.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have been requested by a Member who is out of the Chamber at the moment, to object to the report being filed. Therefore, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

TEN-YEAR REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for permission for the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy to file a 10-year report of the Joint Committee to the Congress during the adjournment of Congress. The basic Atomic Energy Act was approved and became effective on August 1, 1946. A report covering the major accomplishments of the Atomic Energy Commission and the activities of the Joint Committee during the past 10 years is in preparation and is expected to be ready for publication in August. It is the desire of the Joint Committee to have this report reflect all the legislative actions of this Congress on atomic energy matters.

We hope that this report will be submitted to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], as well as to Representatives COLE and DURHAM, and myself, before it is released.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3732) to provide insurance against flood damage, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SPENCE, Mr. BROWN of Georgia, Mr. PATMAN, Mr. RAINS, Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. TALLE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12080) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. FALLON, Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, Mr. BLATNIK, Mr. JONES of Alabama, Mr. DONDERO, Mr. MCGREGOR, and Mr. MACK of Washington were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 30, 33, 35, 39, 40, 44, 47, 51, 54, 56, 59, 62, 64, 65, 67, 70, 72, 73, 74, 77, 78, 82, 85, and 96 to the bill, and concurred therein; and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 18, 21, 22, 37, and 86 to the bill, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills:

S. 3879. An act to supplement the antitrust laws of the United States, in order to balance the power now heavily weighted in favor of automobile manufacturers, by enabling franchised automobile dealers to bring suit in the district courts of the United States to recover damages sustained by reason of the failure of automobile manufacturers to act in good faith in complying with the terms of franchises; or in terminating or not renewing franchises with the dealers;

H. R. 8750. An act to amend the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act;

H. R. 11544. An act to improve and simplify the credit facilities available to farmers, to amend the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12354. An act relating to clerk hire of Members of the House of Representatives.

FISH HATCHERY IN VICINITY OF PAINT BANK, VA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11548) to provide for the establishment of a new fish hatchery in the vicinity of Paint Bank, Va.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct and operate a fish hatchery near Paint Bank, Va. The increasing pressure on sport fishing facilities throughout the United States emphasizes the necessity for additional hatchery facilities in many parts of the United States. Fish and Wildlife Service has determined that there is a need for a new hatchery in the vicinity of Paint Bank, and has determined upon a suitable site.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment; if there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISCRIMINATION BY FOREIGN NATIONS AGAINST UNITED STATES CITIZENS BECAUSE OF INDIVIDUAL RELIGIOUS AFFILIATIONS

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2844, Senate Resolution 323.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 323) opposing distinction by foreign nations against United States citizens because of individual religious affiliations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that it regards any such distinctions directed against United States citizens as incompatible with the relations that should exist among friendly nations, and that in all negotiations between the United States and any foreign state every reasonable effort should be made to maintain this principle.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] wishes to make an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I have been asked, on behalf of the Foreign Relations Committee, to make a brief explanation of Senate Resolution 323.

The resolution in its present form is a committee revision of a longer resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN]. Members of the Foreign Relations Committee heard the Senator from New York on his resolution. We heard representatives of the State Department, and we heard representatives of the Defense Establishment in respect to the Lehman resolution, and we reached the conclusion that the resolution which we are submitting as a committee resolution is a very fitting resolution, and one which we think will accomplish at least the primary objective of the original Lehman resolution while at the same time avoiding any question as to whether or not we will be transgressing upon the rights of the executive branch of the Government.

Briefly, what the resolution does is to express, in the preamble, certain basic American principles which I do not think anyone can question, namely, that the protection of the integrity of United States citizenship and of the proper rights of United States citizens in their pursuit of lawful trade, travel, and other activities abroad is a principle of United States sovereignty; and that it is a primary principle of our Nation that there shall be no distinction among United States citizens based on their individual religious affiliations and since any attempt by foreign nations to create such distinctions among our citizens in the granting of personal or commercial access or any other rights otherwise available to United States citizens generally is inconsistent with our principles.

It is the sense of the Foreign Relations Committee that such a resolution would be of assistance to the State Department and the Defense Establishment in connection not only with pending negotiations, but future negotiations, for the principles of the pending resolution might in some way be encroached upon if we did not stand firm.

I submit the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, the Senate may well congratulate itself for having approved the resolution reported from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee reaffirming the traditional attitude of the United States Government toward discriminations practiced by any country among United States citizens on the basis of their religious faith.

I submitted Senate resolution 298, which formed the basis of the Foreign Relations Committee's action. I am glad that the Foreign Relations Committee saw fit to accept the language I used in my proposal, although the committee also saw fit to abbreviate some of it and to eliminate some of it.

It is not quite so strong a resolution as the one I originally introduced, but it clearly states the sense of the Senate in regard to the central aspects of this critical matter. The action of the Senate will be hailed by millions of people throughout our country and will be heard with respectful regard by millions beyond our borders as a redefinition of a principle which we have long supported as a Nation and which we have professed to support as a universal concept.

This is not a moment for assessment of blame nor for pointing a finger of responsibility at anyone. It is, however, a moment for revalidating the great American tradition—the tradition of the integrity of American citizenship.

Mr. President, I was glad, indeed, to appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and justify at great length my advocacy of Senate Joint Resolution 298. I was proud to be associated in support of this resolution with 24 other Members of the Senate who cosponsored it with me. They have performed a public service in standing with me for this fundamental principle.

The Foreign Relations Committee and its distinguished chairman are to be congratulated for having given this matter the serious consideration that it did. Each member of the committee is to be congratulated.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a prepared statement which I presented to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations in support of this proposal. I believe it contains adequate justification for the action the Senate has just taken, and that it may serve to supplement the language of the resolution itself.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TESTIMONY OF SENATOR HERBERT H. LEHMAN BEFORE THE SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE IN EXECUTIVE SESSION MONDAY, JULY 23, 1956

I appreciate the opportunity to appear before this distinguished committee in executive session and to justify the pending resolution, S. 298.

As the members of this committee undoubtedly know, this resolution already has broad support in the Senate. It is cosponsored by 24 Senators in addition to myself. I would like to read their names—Senators DOUGLAS, LANGER, PAYNE, MURRAY, MORSE, BUSH, IVES, JACKSON, NEELY, PASTORE, DUFF, KUCHEL, NEUBERGER, MAGNUSON, KENNEDY, HUMPHREY, CHAVEZ, PURTELL, BENDER, O'MAHONEY, BEALL, KEFAUVER, MCNAMARA, and MONRONEY. You will note that three members of this committee, Senators LANGER, HUMPHREY, and MORSE, are among the sponsors of this proposal.

I am aware that the representatives of the State Department are also present and are also to be heard at this session. I am aware, too, that the State Department has expressed its opposition to this proposal.

I wish to assure this committee and the State Department that this resolution is not intended as an affront to the Department or to the administration. It is not designed to make more difficult, in any way, the work of our Government in maintaining friendly relations with other countries in the world or advancing the security interests of the United States.

Indeed this resolution is proposed as a means of assisting our Government in its conduct of foreign affairs by making it clear that any representations on the points covered in this resolution made by the State Department in the past—and we are assured that such representations have been repeatedly made—are supported by the Senate of the United States.

But however this resolution strikes the State Department, and I would hope, as I have indicated, that the State Department would be unofficially pleased at the passage of this resolution, it, this resolution, surely does express the sentiment of the American people and the traditions of the United States. As such I cannot see how there can be any objection to the action taken by the Senate in expressing itself on the points contained in this resolution.

This resolution reaffirms the traditional policy of the United States. It does no more; it dares do no less.

I assure the members of this committee that no political motivations are reflected in this resolution. Since the introduction of this resolution I have been told that some of the practices concerning which I complained in a speech which accompanied the introduction of this resolution, the discrimination against Americans on the basis of their religious faith by Saudi Arabia and other countries, date back to a time before the present administration took office. I have been told that the base agreement with Saudi Arabia, which is one of the principal items of contention, was entered into by the Truman administration before the present administration took office.

Mr. Chairman, I am not concerned over when these practices started or which administration was responsible for them. I am not even interested in assessing the blame. I am interested only in the present and the future. I am interested in having the United States affirm now, before the eyes of the world, the traditional American concept of American citizenship and our traditional repugnance to any efforts made by any country to discriminate among American citizens on the basis of their religious faith.

Whatever the interests involved, whatever the stakes at issue, I cannot see how we can make any compromise with the fundamental principle of the integrity of American citizenship.

I believe that if we reaffirm this principle and reaffirm our opposition to discrimination against any American citizen on the basis of religious affiliation, we will gain a higher measure of respect from all the countries of the world, including even those which have been practicing the discriminations complained of.

For the United States Government to acquiesce in any way, under any condition, or for any consideration, to distinctions being made by foreign countries among our citizens, is to my mind intolerable, and it is inconsistent with our American traditions.

I am confident that the entire membership of the Senate, if given an opportunity, would express itself in similar fashion. This attitude is surely, I believe, the overwhelming sentiment of the American people.

The current situation demands the passage of this resolution. The honor of the United States is at stake. We can do no less than express, as the sense of the Senate, that any governments which discriminate among United States citizens on the basis solely of their religion are acting in a manner abhorrent to our sense of morality. We can not permit, without protest, actions by foreign nations designed to make second-class citizens of some of our fellow Americans on the basis of their religious faith.

For a government to seek to make—and to succeed in making—our Government bow to its prejudices is indeeed a sorry sight.

We did not bow to the Barbary pirates in the 18th and early 19th century—why should we do it now for Saudi Arabia?

We did not bow to Austria in 1885—should we do it now for Saudi Arabia?

We did not bow to the Czar of Russia in 1911—should we do it now for Saudi Arabia?

I understand that it is maintained by those who would oppose this resolution that it would affront the Government of Saudi Arabia and that to do so would endanger our base rights in Saudi Arabia and the access which the free world has to Saudi Arabian oil.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the Government of Saudi Arabia will sacrifice the very real considerations which led it in the first place to grant us the base rights merely because we insist on securing respect for our traditional concept of American citizenship. Saudi Arabia had its own reasons for granting us airbase rights at Daharan. I do not believe that Saudi Arabia will sacrifice its own security and other interests in order to insist upon its prejudices, or, as Secretary Dulles is supposed to have described them before this committee, its idiosyncrasies.

I do not think that Saudi Arabia, in order to indulge its prejudices, would destroy its profitable trade in oil with the free world. The Saudi Arabian oil leases and contracts, including the royalty arrangements, are, I assume, as advantageous to Saudi Arabia as to the free world.

I believe that the arrangements with Saudi Arabia are a two-way street. I believe that we should walk up our side of the street, head high, without acting as if we had cheated Saudi Arabia in the first place and hence must humbly accept any indignity which the Government of Saudi Arabia sees fit to visit upon us and some of our citizens.

Why do we want these bases—why do we want this oil? Is it not because we want to protect and defend our American way of life? And how can that way of life be protected and safeguarded if we barter away our rights and freedoms for an airstrip?

What is the situation that calls forth this resolution? The facts are simple.

First, the Saudi Arabian Government has made it a practice to refuse both entry and transit privileges to any United States citizen of Jewish faith or of Jewish descent.

Second, the Saudi Arabian Government has decreed and enforced a boycott against American firms and corporations in which persons of Jewish faith have an interest. This invidious practice is being carried on right here, on our own soil, by accredited diplomatic representatives of the Saudi Arabian Government.

And, third—and most insupportable of all—the Saudi Arabian Government, having granted to the United States the right to construct an airbase in Saudi Arabia, presumes to tell us that we must not station on this base or allow to land on this base any American soldier or other individual who is of Jewish faith or descent.

Permit me to underscore the significance of this last item. This is the Government of the United States acting to discriminate against its own citizens on the basis of their religious faith. It is the Government of the United States itself which is deciding whether an individual can serve its interests at the airbase, not on the basis of the qualifications of the individual—not on the basis of whether his or her skills are needed in our defense, and, if you please, in defense of Saudi Arabia itself, but on the basis of the individual's religious beliefs.

This situation must be corrected. It cannot, it must not, be permitted to continue.

That is the reason for my resolution. That is the reason why I have been joined by almost 30 of my distinguished colleagues in requesting this declaration of the sense of the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, I want to correct one further area of misunderstanding about this situation in its relation to this resolution. It is maintained by those who would pigeonhole this resolution that a foreign country or any country has a right to admit whatever individuals it sees fit into its territory.

We ourselves exercise the right to deny certain individuals entrance into our country. We exercise it perhaps too arbitrarily. I wish to concede, before it is brought up, that the McCarran-Walter Act does discriminate against immigrants into this country on the basis of their national origin. This is an unfortunate truth.

But, Mr. Chairman, this has absolutely nothing to do with the pending question and there is no analogy involved.

Discriminations in our immigration law, on the basis of national origin, are directed only against those who seek to emigrate into this country as permanent residents. We do not discriminate on the basis of national origin, or on any other similar basis, among those who seek to enter the United States as visitors, or as businessmen, and surely not when they come here on the official business of their Government.

Any government has a fundamental right to exclude particular individuals on particular grounds. But this is not a matter of excluding individuals. This is a matter of excluding a whole class of American citizens on the sole ground of their religious faith—and not only exclude them from the country, but exclude them from access to an American facility within that country.

Those who are designated as diplomats may be refused accreditation by a foreign government on the basis of being persona non grata. But we have never conceded that even our diplomats can be refused accreditation on the basis of religious belief. Indeed, on one historic occasion we denied to the Austrian Government the right to refuse accreditation to one diplomat on the basis of the religious faith of his wife.

Mr. Chairman, this is not just a question of discrimination, it is a question of discrimination on the basis of religious belief—discrimination against American citizens on the basis of their religious faith. This we have never tolerated in the past, and we should not tolerate it now.

The resolution before you does not undertake to direct foreign policy. That is the business of the President.

This resolution merely expresses the sentiment of the Senate concerning discriminations against American citizens. That is the concern of the Congress and of the Senate. In the face of overt and persistent violation of our principles and traditions, this is not a matter to be left to the discretion of the State Department.

Now what would the proposed resolution do?

In the first place, it would call upon the President of the United States to proclaim to all nations that the Government of the United States tolerates no distinction based on religious faith among its own citizens, just as it makes none among the citizens and subjects of any other country, and that it regards any such distinctions directed against United States citizens as incompatible with the relations that should exist among friendly nations.

This is but a simple declaration of faith. It expresses what we all believe in. It pronounces no new doctrine—it merely reaffirms the traditional guidelines by which we in the United States have built this country into the great Nation which it has become.

Secondly, this resolution would state it as the sense of the Senate that no agency of the United States shall refrain from assigning any otherwise qualified American citizen to military, diplomatic, or other services within any foreign country solely because of that country's objection on grounds of religious affiliation to any American or class of American.

This, too, is but a simple declaration of faith. It reaffirms a standard of conduct for our Government which is contained in the Constitution itself, which states in article VI that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

And a religious test is exactly what the Air Force is imposing when it screens out personnel of the Jewish faith and refuses to assign them to a particular airbase solely because of their faith. Our military services should use a man's skills, knowledge and abilities as they are needed in the defense of our country without discriminations based on race, creed, color or religious faith. That our Air Force should ever have done so is deeply to be regretted. That it should continue to do so is intolerable.

The third portion of the proposed resolution would express it as the sense of the Senate that "every treaty, convention, or executive agreement entered into or renewed between any foreign state and the United States should expressly provide that no United States citizens shall, solely because of religious affiliation or derivation, be denied the advantages of travel, employment or trade or any other benefit made possible by such treaty, convention or agreement."

This, too, is but a simple declaration of faith. It puts into concrete terms what is set forth in the preceding two sections of the operative portion of the proposed resolution. While it comes about because of the Saudi Arabian situation, the application of this principle should be universally applicable. Such discriminations written into a treaty should never be sanctioned or tolerated by this Government. And I believe the Senate of the United States should so state in forthright and unequivocal language. That is what this proposed resolution asks the Senate to do.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask permission at this point to insert into the RECORD the text of the resolution in question, Senate Resolution 298.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the protection of the integrity of United States citizenship and of the proper rights of United States citizens in their pursuit of lawful trade, travel, and other activities abroad is a cardinal function of United States sovereignty; and

Whereas it is a primary principle of our Nation that there shall be no distinction among United States citizens based on their individual religious affiliations and since any attempt by foreign nations to create such distinctions among our citizens in the granting of personal or commercial access or any other rights otherwise available to United States citizens generally is repugnant to our laws and intolerable to our principles—an attitude which our Government has historically and successfully maintained in our relations with foreign countries on several notable occasions; and

Whereas recently certain United States servicemen, solely because of their religious faith, affiliation, or even derivation, have been denied assignments to certain United States military bases abroad and these and other United States citizens have been refused entry and travel visas by the governments of certain foreign countries, which governments have also directed and organized a trade and economic boycott against American citizens and classes of American citizens based solely on the religious faith, affiliation, or religious derivation of such citizens: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that (a) the President of the United States should proclaim to all nations that the Government of the United States tolerates no distinction based on religious faith among its own citizens just as it makes none among the citizens and subjects of any other country and that it regards any such distinctions directed against United States citizens as incompatible with the relations that should exist among friendly nations; and (b) no agency of the United States shall refrain from assigning any otherwise qualified American citizen to military, diplomatic, or other service within any foreign country solely because of that country's objection on grounds of religious affiliation to any American or class of Americans; and (c) every treaty, convention, or executive agreement entered into or renewed between any foreign state and the United States should expressly provide that no United States citizen shall, solely because of religious affiliation or derivation, be denied the advantages of travel, employment, or trade or any other benefit made possible by such treaty, convention, or agreement.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, as one of the cosponsors of the original Lehman resolution, I think the Senator from New York is deserving of high commendation for the statesmanship he has demonstrated again, as he has done so many times during his service in the Senate, in calling the attention of the Senate to the very important human rights and sovereignty problem he raised in his original resolution.

He is quite right in the remarks he has made, that the adoption of the resolution by the Committee on Foreign Relations and its recommendation of the resolution to the Senate, and now its adoption by the Senate, will be taken note of around the world. It will demonstrate once again—and it is time we made it clear—that a basic idea of America, not only in foreign relations, but in domestic policy, is that there can be no question raised as to the rights of our citizens based upon religious faith.

Mr. LEHMAN. I thank the Senator from Oregon. I wish to say there has been no legislation with which I have been connected since I have been a Member of the Senate which I consider to be more important than this resolution, and I am happy that the Senate has agreed to it today.

I believe the resolution affects every man, woman, and child in the United States, because it again defines the integrity and the importance of American citizenship, and the determination of those in high position to make certain that that integrity shall be safeguarded; that equal justice shall be done to everyone; and that no one shall suffer discrimination because of his religious faith.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I desire to express my full agreement with the remarks made in support of the resolution by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] and by my distinguished senior colleague [Mr. MORSE]. It is well to emphasize that when a citizen of our country leaves its shores, he does not leave the Bill of Rights behind him.

Mr. LEHMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am very happy to return to the floor at this time when the resolution is being discussed. I thoroughly agree with the expressions which have been made as to its importance. I have long felt that the Government of the United States must again and again reassert its basic sovereignty in terms of protection of the rights of our citizens. The minute a nation forgets that fact, it starts to lose respect throughout the world. The resolution, which was originally offered by the distinguished Senator from New York, and the new resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, constitute declarations not only of intent, but also of the fundamental purposes and principles of the American Republic.

We are deeply indebted to the Senator from New York for his leadership in this matter. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the other members of that fine committee who have expressed themselves on this matter are to be commended for the expeditious manner in which the resolution was handled.

Mr. LEHMAN. I thank the Senator from Minnesota very much for his remarks and also for his great assistance in the consideration and formulation of the resolution. The members of the Committee on Foreign Relations and, in fact, every Member of the Senate, is to be congratulated on the adoption of the resolution. It again defines a doctrine and a tradition and a policy on which the United States was founded, and as a result of which the country has grown great over the 180 years of its existence.

I am very happy that the resolution has been agreed to. I not only wish to express my appreciation for that action but, what is more important, I wish to congratulate every Member of the Senate and the entire country on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, on July 2, 1956, the Senate passed S. 2916, to waive a ground for exclusion in behalf of the beneficiary. On July 26, 1956, the House of Representatives passed S. 2916 to include the beneficiaries of 13 similar individual Senate bills and 2 similar individual House bills. One of the bills included in S. 2916, as amended, passed the Senate to include as beneficiaries the three minor children of the adult beneficiary. It has subsequently been determined that relief is not necessary for the minor beneficiaries, and their names were, therefore, deleted by the House of Representatives.

S. 2916 was also amended to waive the excluding provision of existing law relating to those afflicted with tuberculosis in behalf of four persons. Three of these cases were recommended by the Department of State for the relief provided for in the bill, and the remaining case was recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives.

The amendments are acceptable, and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to S. 2916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1957—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the 2 Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12350), making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the conference report be rejected; that the Senate further insist on its amendments in disagreement, request a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HILL, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. YOUNG, and Mr. KNOWLAND conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

AMENDMENT OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS FOR FURNISHING WATER TO RAPID CITY, S. DAK.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3468.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3468) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to amend certain contracts for furnishing water to the city of Rapid City, S. Dak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with amendments on page 1, line 3, after the word "notwithstanding", to strike out "section 9 (c) of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939, as amended (43 U. S. C. 485h (c)), or section 9 of the act of August 11, 1939, as amended (16 U. S. C. 590Z–7), or"; in line 8, after "14–06–", to strike out "M" and insert "W"; and on page 2, line 6, after the word "contracts", to insert "The priority authorized in this act shall be limited to revenue bonds the face value of which does not exceed $2,500,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I will state to the Senate that this is a Senate bill which has been approved by the chairman and other members of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The sponsor of the bill, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], is on the floor, and I am sure he would like to make a statement in connection with the measure at this time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, this is a small bill which would give the Secretary of the Interior authority to amend contracts with reference to repayment for water to be taken from the reservoir at Rapid City, S. Dak., and to issue revenue bonds, to extend some mains, and to sell the water. The report by the Secretary of the Interior asks that a limitation be placed upon the amount of bonds which may be issued, and the amendment to the bill includes the placing of a ceiling on the amount of bonds which can be issued.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I have not had an opportunity to study the bill, but I take it from the Senator's explanation that there is no question in this about the Federal Government not being compensated.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Select Committee on Small Business, of which I am chairman, I ask unanimous consent to file with the Secretary of the Senate, after the adjournment, the following reports which will inform the Senate as to the results of various studies conducted by the Select Committee on Small Business during the past few months of this session of the Congress:

First. A Study on Fair Trade.

Second. Problems of Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors.

Third. Small-Business Participation in Government Procurement—1956.

Fourth. Supply and Distribution of Nickel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PATENT TERM RESTORATION

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield in order that I may ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. THYE. My question is in connection with House bill 2128, a bill to provide patent term restoration. It is a bill to authorize the extension of patents. The bill passed the House without amendment and it has been on the Senate Calendar since July 20. I am hoping that we may be privileged to consider the bill and take action on it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No one is more hopeful than is the Senator from Texas that we can get the bill through. There is considerable opposition to it from various Members who feel that veterans are being used in connection with the bill to benefit a number of corporations and persons who are contractors with the Government. I have attempted to resolve those differences. There have been many differences which have appeared in the past few days of the session which have not been resolved, and this is one of them. I shall continue to do my best to bring about some kind of a solution of the problem.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I have consulted with members of the calendar committee on this side of the aisle, and I believe I have succeeded in removing most of the objections. I know it is utterly futile for me to try to get the bill to a vote at this time if there are objections made to it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the body of the RECORD my statement explaining the bill. I hope then, Mr. President, that it can be looked over between now and tomorrow and that possibly the generosity of the leaders on both sides of the aisle and those who may object to the measure may bring about a change of heart and that we may have favorable action on the bill tomorrow.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR THYE

H. R. 2128, A BILL TO PROVIDE PATENT TERM RESTORATION

I speak in behalf of the enactment of H. R. 2128, a bill providing for the extension of patents, the normal use or development of which was prevented or substantially curtailed by reason of: (a) the service of the owner or his spouse in the Armed Forces of the United States; or (2) Government stop orders; or (3) such owners having granted royalty free or nominal royalty licenses to the United States or to manufacturers furnishing goods to the United States, in order to promote the national defense program.

The presence of this legislation before you today arose from a recognition of the need for a bill of general applicability which will provide a remedy of relief where frustration of the patent contract was brought about by acts of the United States or any of its agencies.

Passage by the House of Representatives and favorable recommendation by your Committee on the Judiciary is a demonstration of the determination of the Members of the Congress to redeem the merited reputation that our Government holds for discharging whatever obligations it assumes.

To fully appreciate the fundamental issues of the problem, it is essential that we contemplate the significant words of our Constitution by which Congress is directed and granted the power, "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive rights to their respective writings and discoveries." Basically the question posed by this bill is whether or not the Congress, pursuant to this purposeful grant of power in the Constitution, already has passed legislation under which the Government has fully discharged the obligations it assumed by the issuance of patents to inventors.

From the testimony presented to your committee in hearings on this bill, I believe the conclusion is inescapable that the Government is at least morally bound to grant extension of the terms of patents under the conditions specified in this bill as it now stands.

Essentially, the rights granted to an inventor by the issuance of a patent under our laws are analogous to those which arise out of a simple contract. In exchange for the public disclosure and dedication of an invention, the Government of the United States solemnly undertakes to secure to the inventor the exclusive rights to the use of his invention for a full period of 17 years. That is the inducement to inventors which the Government has long offered by law and upon which inventors have been led to rely.

Now, as legislators we would be justifiably incensed if someone proposed that we enact a statute arbitrarily reducing the terms of patents heretofore issued and outstanding from the issued period of 17 years to a period of 13 years or even less. We would regard such a proposal as a clear violation of the obligations which the Government assumed when the patent was issued. And yet the result is the same when the Government, during public emergencies, issues an order directing that for a period of time the holder of a patent shall not use certain machines or articles or materials or processes the use of which is necessary to the use or development or manufacture or exploitation of a patented invention. A similar result occurs when the inventor himself is drafted into the armed services or is accepted for enlistment therein.

The fact that the Government does not take such drastic measures except during public emergencies does not justify the Government refusing to make reasonable restitution for that part of the 17-year period of the patent during which the action of the Government prevented or substantially curtailed the use and development of the patent. In my opinion, the provisions of this bill would provide no more than reasonable restitution in those classes of cases most directly affected.

The right to the exclusive use of a patented invention for the full period of 17 years is analogous to, if not in essence, a right of property. Where the Government expropriates private property for public use it is required by the Constitution to pay just compensation therefor. If public emergencies such as World War II or the Korean conflict force the Government to abridge the special obligations it assumed by the issuance of patents, the least the Government can do to make good its original undertaking is to extend the terms of such patents for a period corresponding to that during which the normal use or development of the patent was prevented or substantially curtailed.

We have no doubt that the profit motive constitutes a fundamental premise upon which the draftsmen of the Constitution and the patent laws hoped to stimuate inventors to exert themselves and to disclose the results of their work, and upon the basis of which also, inventors do these things. It does not seem realistic to take the position that either party to this compact was under any illusion that invention would be stimulated, or that inventors would be satisfied, by the granting and receipt of a nugatory right to exclude.

My conclusion is that unless H. R. 2128 is enacted into law, we cannot contend that our Government has fairly and justly carried out the obligations it assumed by the issuance of patents under our laws. To avoid such an unjust and distasteful consequence I urge all of my colleagues to support this bill for immediate passage without amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I should like to say a word, if I may, with reference to the bill. I am the author of the bill. I can think of nothing which would render greater justice to veterans of the Nation than would the passage of this bill. I can think of nothing more harmful to the inventive genius of America than not to pass the bill. When a person is given a patent, it is for 17 years.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Indiana will yield——

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, if the majority leader will yield to me, let me say that the Senator from Indiana has expressed my feeling, and it is the feeling of those who have expressed the hope that this bill may be considered and enacted. I have endeavored to study the question to find if there is any reason for an objection. When I go into the question I find that the Patents Division of the Commerce Department has no objection to the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. The only one who could object to it would be a manufacturer who wanted to use the inventive genius and the patents of the small inventor who invents some kind of a device and then during the war years is denied the right to use his patent. At the end of 17 years big manufacturers pick it up and continue to use it. I do not think it is fair.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOUSING AND CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF URBAN COMMUNITIES

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, for the information of the leadership, I wish to say that we were unable to have a conference on the housing bill because, I believe, of the indisposition and difficulty of the conferees on the part of the House to meet; but I am very optimistic that perhaps at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning there will be a conference.

HARRIS-FULBRIGHT NATURAL GAS BILL

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement I have prepared relative to the Harris-Fulbright natural gas bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FULBRIGHT

Although it has been only 5 months since the President, acting on reasons entirely aside from the merits of the legislation, placed his veto upon the Harris-Fulbright natural-gas bill, we are already beginning to see that the effects of this veto are just what the President said they would be.

The President, who killed this vital legislation by his veto, and the 53 Senators who had voted for it, agreed that one of the consequences of the failure of that bill to become law would be a shortage of natural gas for distribution in the States which do not produce it but which use so much of it. As part of his veto message the President said:

"I must make quite clear that legislation conforming to the basic objectives of H. R. 6645 is needed. It is needed because the type of regulation of producers of natural gas which is required under present law will discourage individual initiative and incentive to explore for and develop new sources of supply.

"In the long run this will limit supplies of gas, which is contrary not only to the national interest but especially to the interest of consumers."

These remarks echoed the fears voiced by the Senator from Arkansas and other supporters of this legislation when it was before us last January. The President's veto of this bill had the effect, because of the Supreme Court decision in the Phillips case, of requiring the Federal Power Commission to place upon the independent, competitive producers of natural gas the kind of regulation which heretofore had been applied only to utilities. In my first speech on the bill I said:

"Under Federal utility controls applied at the producer level, the only result—over the long pull—can be one of less gas at higher prices. Such is the probable consequence of unrealistic Government meddling with the competitive production of consumer goods."

Now, what has happened since, by reason of the veto, the FPC has begun to try to apply these unworkable regulations upon an industry for which they are poorly designed and on which they certainly cannot work to the benefit of the consumers or producers of this Nation? What is happening is just what I said would happen and what the President said would happen—Federal regulation is having the effect of taking natural gas away from the consumers who do not live in States where it is produced.

The evidence I submit to support this statement is significant but it marks only a beginning, for the withering hand of Federal control has only started to make itself felt. It is plain, though, that the trend to which I point is strong and will not be reduced until free competition and initiative and incentive have been restored in the field of natural-gas production.

I submit for the consideration of the Senators several news stories from reliable publications which are enlightening. The Oil and Gas Journal for June 11, 1956, points out in the following dispatch that since the veto of the Harris-Fulbright bill pipelines which carry natural gas from the producing States to the consuming States have been unable to purchase enough supplies to offset normal declines in their reserves. The article follows:

"[From the Oil and Gas Journal of June 11, 1956]

"GAS PINCH SPREADING—TRANSMISSION LINES SHORT OF NEW SUPPLIES IN GULF COAST; PRODUCERS REPORTEDLY FIND LOCAL MARKETS MORE PROFITABLE

"HOUSTON.—A shortage of new supplies of natural gas for interstate sale already is being felt by transmission companies operating out of the gulf coast area.

"Distributing companies in the East will soon feel the pinch also.

"That is the report of Wayne J. Johnson, president of Natural Gas Service Co. Johnson resigned recently as manager of the gas-supply department of Trunkline Gas Co. to establish his new concern. It will work primarily to develop new intrastate markets for independent gas producers. But it will also advise them on dealing with pipelines and the Federal Power Commission when selling interstate.

"Since veto of the Harris-Fulbright bill, Johnson says, interstate pipelines in south Texas and Louisiana have run into trouble. They have been unable to purchase enough new supplies to offset normal declines in their reserves.

"The only new reserves they have been able to connect are small ones. These were obtained when the producer faced a drainage condition, a financial obligation to sell, or had no other market.

"Local buyers gain: At the same time, Johnson says, purchasers of gas for consumption within the State of production are getting the gas.

"They are paying from 1 cent to 5 cents per thousand cubic feet above prices offered producers by interstate lines. Such prices for interstate movement have been blocked by the FPC on grounds they are not shown to be just.

"According to Johnson, industries that use gas in large quantities are showing increased interest in locating plants near the source of gas supply. This indicates the intrastate markets for gas in the gulf coast area will soon absorb most of the new gas reserves which otherwise would be sold for interstate transmission.

"There is little hope for new legislation removing FPC regulation of gas producers until consumers and distribution companies realize that supplies for interstate sale are actually drying up. Johnson predicts that pinch will be felt this winter but will become acute before satisfactory legislation can be enacted.

"Big question: As long as prospects remain as good as they now are for developing local markets, Johnson says, the attitude of those owning uncommitted gas reserves is this:

"Why sell gas in interstate commerce? You can never be assured under existing procedures of FPC that you will receive the prices contained in your contract. And they are arrived at only by long hours of arms-length bargaining and in tough competition with other interested purchasers.

"If FPC would call a conference of interstate pipelines, Johnson believes, it would soon discover a majority of them already are having great difficulty maintaining their supply position. The situation is rapidly getting worse.

"In the absence of legislation, Johnson suggests, the condition could be improved if the FPC would:

"Stop treating producers as guilty before trial by making them bear the burden of proof.

"Lay down some standards for determining when a producer's price is proper.

"Employ staff members who understand the producing end of the gas business.

"Establish field offices in producing areas with authority to issue temporary certificates and make preliminary decisions. This would end much of the delay in referring everything to Washington.

"Realize potential markets in areas of large gas reserves are more attractive to producers than interstate sales under the present FPC procedures."

And the Oil Daily in its issues of May 29, 1956, and June 4, 1956, finds that because of Federal regulation producers are withholding vast quantities of gas from interstate markets. In the meantime the industries of the gulf coast, the article estimates, believe they can attract enough new industries to absorb "nearly all the gas reserves which their producers are withholding."

In other words, this gas is going into the more friendly markets of industrial use at home, rather than into the pipelines which link the gulf coast producing areas to the colder climes of the Northern States where natural gas is so much cherished for home heat. The Oil Daily articles follow:

"[From the Oil Daily of May 29, 1956]

"DRIVE TO MARKET GAS INTRASTATE SPEEDED

"HOUSTON, May 28.—The natural-gas industry's drive to market its reserves intrastate and escape Federal Power Commission controls is gathering speed.

"It seems to be bearing some fruit, too. Whether enough to satisfy the appetites of operators and landowners remains to be seen.

"Two principal trends appear visible. First is an effort to develop intrastate gas markets by attracting new industries to producing States. Second is an apparent willingness on the part of some producers to build intrastate pipelines instead of selling gas to nearby interstate carriers, and an eagerness on the part of some consumers to snap up long-term reserves which might not be available if the interstate market were free.

"Dramatic evidence that many persons see a solid future for the intrastate gas business was offered here recently when Atlantic Refining Co. let it be known that it might be willing to sell the Houston Pipe Line Co. system, which it will acquire June 6, along with other petroleum properties of Houston Oil Co. of Texas. By one count, 19 firms have their names in the pot to bid on the wholly owned, wholly intrastate Houston Oil subsidiary if Atlantic decides to dispose of it.

"Now moving about 300 million cubic feet of gas daily, the system contains 714 miles of trunk, 196 miles of branch lines, 214 miles of gathering lines, and 1 compressor station, owns interests in auxiliary lines, and serves 80 Texas communities. It extends 210 miles southwest of Houston and 90 miles east, through one of the Nation's major gas-producing areas. And producers who turn thumbs down on interstate pipelines are clamoring to sell to it.

" 'It can buy all the gas it conceivably could use, and there is reason to believe that it can use a rapidly growing amount,' one source said.

"Texas gas consumption was growing pretty rapidly before the Phillips case dispute arose. Now some additional pressure has been exerted by Phillips Petroleum Co. and Texas Gas Corp., Houston, the latter in cooperation with a number of southeast Texas chambers of commerce.

"Phillips, trying to attract plants which consume petroleum and its products to a 900-acre site on Houston ship channel, already has assigned part of the acreage to Celanese Corporation of America and M. W. Kellogg division of Pullman Co. for polyethylene plants estimated to cost about $25 million each.

"Texas Gas et al. have just mailed out the first issue of a quarterly brochure entitled 'Plant Site' which describes the Port Arthur-Beaumont-Orange refinery and petrochemical triangle, cites area business indices like bank debits, electric power consumption and employment, and lists and describes acreage available to industry.

" 'We've had two or three out-of-State inquiries as a result of the first mailing,' said Russell M. Riggins, Texas Gas president. 'Some of these might have come in the normal course of events, but the increased availability of intrastate gas may be stepping up the tempo.'

"Examples of pipeline construction by producers and consumers are provided by Humble Pipe Line Co. and Reynolds Metals Co.

"Humble, sitting on major gas reserves, is building a 20-inch gas line from the King Ranch in southwest Texas to Corpus Christi; Reynolds has run a 16-inch carrier across Corpus Christi Bay to tap the large Flour Bluff field gas reserve.

"Some Oil Daily sources believe neither line would have been constructed if the FPC had not entered the gas fields.

"At any rate, there are signs that supply is becoming an increasingly urgent concern of interstate carriers. They have plenty of gas for current commitments and even enough for some additional expansion. But a spokesman for one such company has called the situation respecting new supplies 'the worst yet.'

" 'I know of no interstate line which has been able to buy any substantial amount of gas recently except in cases of distress—where a property is being drained or property owners are insisting on some revenue,' he said. 'Most producers seem to be sitting on their hands, waiting to see whether an intrastate market develops.'

"This analysis excepts producers who are out of reach of intrastate consumers. Some of those already have sold their gas production, lock, stock and barrel, a Houston oil man reported, and others are considering similar moves."

[From the Oil Daily of June 4, 1956]

"GULF COAST'S MARKET POTENTIAL FOR INTRASTATE GAS IS VIEWED

"HOUSTON, June 3.—Gulf Coast States, source of more than half the Nation's natural gas, can attract enough new industrial plants to absorb nearly all the gas reserves which their producers are withholding from interstate markets.

"So believes Gordon H. Turrentine, general manager of the Houston Chamber of Commerce.

"The former Houston banking executive makes only one stipulation—an important one: 'It will take an unpredictable amount of time.'

"His reasoning, in substance: Tremendous growth is predicted for many industries, particularly chemicals. In many, including chemicals, access to raw materials instead of nearness to markets dictates the choice of plant sites.

"Phillips Petroleum Co., Humble Oil & Refining Co., and Continental Oil Co. were among major gas producers whose annual reports this year speculated that veto of the Harris-Fulbright bill would stimulate efforts to sell gas intrastate.

"Turrentine was asked how successful he thought such efforts would be.

"The Oil Daily sought his opinions for several reasons. As a banker, he coauthored an annual review of gulf coast petrochemical construction which became a standard reference, and as a chamber official has addressed leading financial circles, including the New York Society of Security Analysts, on the coast's industrial outlook.

"More particularly, the chamber of late has been thrust increasingly into the role of go-between for buyers and sellers of intrastate gas.

" 'We've had more plant site inquiries recently than ever before.' Turrentine said, 'I mean for branch plants of large national corporations—we're not pirating from anybody.

" 'And look what's happening on the supply side. Just recently, two important producers—I'm not permitted to name them—asked us to put them in touch with intrastate customers who want large volumes of gas. A letter with the same kind of request came from an individual in the East; he represents a company with a lot of south Texas production.' "

"The chamber has a perfect record on one score, its general manager said: 'Nobody who, ever asked us to find a gas supply has gone away emptyhanded. And because of the Harris-Fulbright veto, more gas is available on the gulf coast than ever before.'

"Indicating how this gas might be absorbed, Turrentine said, is a prediction by Frank Soday, vice president of Chemstrand Corp., Decatur, Ala., that the petrochemical industry alone must expand 170 percent by 1975 to meet rising living standards.

"Petrochemicals' share of chemical output has been growing, the chamber official said, and the gulf coast has been getting a growing share of the Nation's new petrochemical plants. Although petrochemicals take only about 2 percent of the Nation's gas as feed stock, he said, the figure is misleading because it excludes the enormous fuel consumption of generally high-temperature processes.

"Abundant, assured supplies of fuel gas have attracted many other kinds of industries to the coast and can be counted on to attract more as Federal controls hamper deliveries in other parts of the Nation, he observed.

"In his address before the New York security analysts, Turrentine called the gulf coast's deep water and barge transportation 'a great equalizer.' As other coastal advantages he listed increasing availability of refinery off-gases, low-cost liquefied petroleum gases, and low production costs.

"That companies enjoying such prerogatives find it more economical to spot their plants near raw materials than near markets is best shown, he said, by the recent decision of Dow Chemical Co. to spend $45 million for expansion of its Freeport, Tex., facilities and $20 million to set up Louisiana plants, 'leaving little more than $10 million of its construction budget to spend elsewhere.'

"He said one Midwest firm which located a plant at Houston to produce for the southwest 'found, to its amazement, that it could ship Houston products to overseas customers cheaper than it could from its home plant, and that it could lay its products down on the Atlantic seaboard at prices competitive or better.'

"Texas already consumes some 57 percent of its natural-gas production, exporting only about 43 percent to other States, Turrentine pointed out."

Further evidence that Federal regulation is forcing natural gas into industrial uses and away from the interstate market comes in an interview with Mr. Ralph E. Davis, a respected consultant from Houston, Tex., in the Oil and Gas Journal for March 12. The interview follows:

"[From the Oil and Gas Journal of March 12, 1956]

"INDUSTRIAL BOOM IN GAS STATES

"HOUSTON.—Continued Federal control of natural gas going into interstate commerce may cause an industrial boom in the major producing States, especially along the gulf coast in Texas and Louisiana.

"Ralph E. Davis, Houston consultant, estimates that nearly 25 percent of the gulf coast's proved gas supply is being withheld from the market.

"Much of this gas—amounting to approximately 20 trillion cubic feet—would be available for intrastate consumption. But, according to Davis, limited amounts will be offered under present Government regulations for sale outside the State in which it is produced.

"The future of the natural-gas industry will depend largely on finding suitable intrastate markets, which are still free of Federal Power Commission regulation.

"Davis thinks 'substantially less gas is going to be made available for interstate lines' on account of the President's veto of the Harris bill which, to an extent, would have exempted producers from Federal price controls. As a result, he predicts a 'downward trend in the search for gas and development of gas unless there be a suitable intrastate market for it.'

"Davis, an oil and gas consultant for 36 years, has been in geological and engineering work since graduating from Wisconsin University 50 years ago this spring. He had been associated with many of the major gas-pipeline projects highlighting the growth of the gas industry.

"The burden of bringing new industries into the southwestern producing States, he feels, does not rest with chambers of commerce. Companies seeking to expand their manufacturing plants are looking for fuel. If necessary, they will move to the producing area to get it, Davis believes.

"Davis thinks that uncommitted reserves actually may increase in value as a result of Federal controls.

"Most of the big gas reserves in the United States except those on the gulf coast are committed to specific markets. In Texas and Louisiana there are sufficient uncommitted reserves for several major pipelines. Owners of these reserves are reluctant to sell if doing so places their production under Government price control.

"If members of the FPC set field prices too low, Davis fears that 'there will be such a withholding of gas to interstate pipeline companies, they will find it is not a satisfactory solution, even from the standpoint of the ultimate consumer.'

"He believes there's a good chance that present members of the FPC who are inclined to fix a low field price will be overruled by those who would be more realistic.

"'But we can't tell what the next Commission will be,' says Davis, whose testimony before the FPC has helped some of the biggest gas-transmission projects ever built.

"Proved gas reserves in this country represent only about 22 years' supply at the present rate of consumption. As Davis points out, 'it's very clear that the amount of gas and the amount of oil being found per well, or per million feet of hole, or per million dollars spent, is substantially less than it was 5 to 10 years ago.'

"If the Harris bill had been signed into law, operators would have had the incentive to continue their high rate of drilling as long as their discoveries warranted the increased expenditure. As a result of Federal controls the drilling rate, especially in gas-producing areas, is likely to level off or perhaps drop, Davis believes.

"But the drilling rate or the discovery rate no longer controls the amount of gas which will go to northern and eastern markets. Consumers are likely to feel the pinch within 2 or 3 years because of the reluctance of producers to release gas for interstate commerce."

To offset this growing tendency of producers to withhold their gas from interstate markets, some of the interstate pipelines are trying to develop their own sources of natural gas. But, as the following article from Petroleum Week of May 11, 1956, points out, this too is subject to the vagaries of Federal control—for, if the Supreme Court does not permit pipeline companies a "fair field price" for gas produced from their own fields, then the incentive for pipeline produced gas is demolished just as the incentive for the independent producer to find gas for the interstate market has been demolished. The article follows:

"[From Petroleum Week of May 11, 1956]

"GAS IS TOUGH TO GET, SO PIPELINES DEVELOP PRODUCTION

"Increasing producer reluctance to selling natural gas to pipeline companies is forcing some of the latter to seek, or add to, their own supply holdings. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., for instance, is going to spend $6 million this year to develop its own oil and gas production.

"Panhandle Eastern officials say that the Phillips decision and failure of legislation to ease the impact of that court ruling have made gas more difficult to buy. The company, therefore, sees development of its own reserves as a hedge against too much dependence on independent producers—and as a distinct aid when bargaining with other producers.

"W. G. Maguire, Panhandle Eastern's board chairman, says the company's reserves have been increased in the last few months by more than 500 billion cubic feet, to a total of more than 12 trillion cubic feet.

"In making the move, Panhandle Eastern is openly hopeful that the United States Supreme Court eventually will uphold the Federal Power Commission's fair field price formula. But the alternative is diminishing supply, at a time when demand continues upward.

"Maguire says Panhandle Eastern has been encouraged to step up the exploration of its long-held leases as a result of the FPC decision to allow the company a fair price for the natural gas which it produces from its own leaseholds.

"In the Panhandle Eastern case, FPC ruled that the company, when expensing its own gas production in its rate base, was entitled to the weighted average price of gas sold by independents in the same or nearby fields.

"Panhandle Eastern feels the high Court ultimately will approve the fair-field-price concept, despite the setback suffered when a United States circuit court remanded the case to FPC for further consideration. The lower court said FPC failed to give due weight to the cost of production.

"Panhandle Eastern's intensified deep drilling and exploration program is concentrated in western Kansas and in the Oklahoma Panhandle. The company expects to drill at least 60 wells this year—and more, if warranted.

"The new drilling program is taking place in the Hugoton Embayment of the Anadarko Basin, and in other parts of the basin, just outside the edge of the Hugoton Embayment.

"Most of the wells programed for this year will be at depths below the shallower zones from which gas has normally been found within the embayment.

"Though significant, Panhandle Eastern's action is not surprising. Such moves by pipeline companies were widely predicted in the wake of President Eisenhower's veto of the natural gas bill, which would have freed independent producers from direct Federal control.

"Industry sources were agreed, and the facts since then support them, that sales of gas in interstate markets would slow down as producers sought to avoid Federal controls.

"J. G. Dickinson, vice president of Natural Gas Pipeline Company of America, testified before FPC recently that he knew of cases where gas has been sold in intrastate commerce for less than could have been obtained in interstate sales.

"The trend of pipelines to develop their own production is expected to continue unless they and independent producers are given assurance that they will be allowed a fair price for gas sold in interstate commerce.

"Dickinson, in his testimony, reported that his company was having trouble buying natural gas from independent producers because they feared their operations would be subject to Federal control.

"He added: 'There is no room for doubt that, in the interests of the consuming public, the pipelines should be encouraged to enter the exploration and development part of the gas business, rather than leaving it to the independent producers as they have in the past.'

"Independent producers also can be expected to continue efforts to sell more gas in intrastate channels. There also has been talk (but no action) of independent producers joining to build their own pipelines to industrial markets.

"There have been substantial efforts by producers, particularly in Texas, to entice industrial users into their States. But even this plan may backfire, in time. There's a good chance that intrastate sales may be put under Federal control, too, if they continue draining supplies from interstate channels.

"And the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association, at a recent meeting, considered the possibility of setting up a producer association to market gas. But, though it was conceded that something had to be done, no definite plan was drafted."

Still further evidence of how and why the Texas producers of natural gas are planning to keep that valuable commodity at home comes in an article published by Petroleum Week on June 22, 1956. The article points out that producers there are signing long-term contracts to supply new industries within the State, are encouraging the development of a new chemical and industrial center on the Houston Ship Channel and are hiring experts to help industry find new ways to make use of natural gas.

It is no wonder then that the article points out that "the long lines transmission companies are taking a grim look at the situation."

I call the Senators' attention to the following quotation in the article from a spokesman for the interstate transmission companies: "We haven't been able to get any gas since the veto of the Harris-Fulbright bill and neither has any other interstate pipeline company. A little is being sold, but it is the kind where the operator is in a bind and has to sell—where he has to do it in order to hold on to his lease and where his reserves are small or remote." This highly revealing article follows in full:

"[From Petroleum Week of June 22, 1956]

"KEEPING TEXAS GAS INTRASTATE

"What one Texas gas producer is doing to segregate interstate gas sales from intrastate sales is shown in the map above. It's cogent evidence of the fact that Texas gas producers want as little as possible to do with interstate sales.

"The problem of Texas Gas Corp., Houston, stems from the fact that one of its pipelines transports gas both intrastate and interstate. And, by Federal Power Commission definition, all this commingled gas is subject to Federal control. (Although producers hotly deny that the FPC view is legal.)

"Texas Gas can't halt its interstate sales to Texas Eastern Transmission Corp. and Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp. Long-term contracts forbid that. But it doesn't want the gas it sells intrastate to be subject to FPC regulation. So it is:

"1. Building 5½ miles of new line from its Winnie (Tex.) gas processing plant north to a connection with the Texas Eastern line.

"2. Eliminating the commingling of interstate and intrastate gas on its Winnie to Beaumont line by cutting the present Texas Eastern connection near Fannett, Tex.

"Thus, Texas Gas will wind up with a pair of interstate pipelines to serve Texas Eastern and Transco, and three intrastate lines to serve the growing industrial complex in the Beaumont-Port Arthur area.

"All this stems, of course, from producers' distaste for FPC regulation—the result of the United States Supreme Court's decision in the Phillips case and of President Eisenhower's veto of the natural gas bill (PW—Feb. 24, 1956, p. 9).

"I. SHIFTING MARKETS

"Gas producers are searching out varied methods for developing local markets for Texas gas:

"They're signing up new industrial accounts.

"Humble Oil & Refining Co. has signed long-term contracts to supply several industries in the Corpus Christi area.

"Humble is building a 20-inch, 30-mile line from fields in the King Ranch area to serve various Corpus chemical and utility companies. It also is involved in a deal with Reynolds Metal Co. to supply gas for the $30 million expansion of Reynolds' alumina and aluminum reduction facilities now underway at Corpus. Reynolds is building a 12-inch, 15-mile line between Corpus and Humble's Flour Bluff field for this purpose.

"Magnolia Petroleum Co. is expected to complete a deal soon for sale of 20 million to 30 million cubic feet of gas daily from the Wadsworth field, Matagorda County, to Dow Chemical Co.'s plant in Freeport, Tex.

"They're fostering industrial development. Phillips Petroleum Co., for example, is developing a chemical and industrial center on the Houston Ship Channel. So far, it has sold acreage to Celanese Corp. and Pullman Co. Phillips officials say they have 'nibbles' from others, but they aren't talking until negotiations reach the signing stage.

"They're tapping the fast-growing petrochemical market for gas. The latest unofficial count tallied up 71 petrochemical plants in Texas alone. On top of that, the Manufacturing Chemists Association estimates that construction and expansion projects just completed, underway, or definitely scheduled in Texas, represents an outlay of $414.8 million.

"An example of what's going on is the bold step taken by Texas Gas: It's hired Dr. Willard M. Dow to head up research directed at promoting manufacture of more products from gas. Dow formerly was assistant director of research for United Gas, at Shreveport, La.

"The company's Winnie plant now is processing 200 million to 210 million cubic feet of gas daily. But another 70 million to 75 million cubic feet daily is simply being sold as fuel gas with no processing.

"Dow's job, in one respect, will be to upgrade this fuel gas into more profitable materials. First step, he says, will be a scrutiny of the company's situation: 'What can we offer and what does the market offer us?'

"Then will come an effort to meet the demands of potential buyers for additional materials.

"Texas Gas President Russell M. Riggin calls this project "part of our program to develop more uses for Texas-produced natural gas, so that it will not have to be exported under FPC regulation.

"One company has been set up specially to help independent producers find markets. Natural Gas Service Co. will deal either interstate or intrastate, but it has no retainer setup with any long-line transmission company. The company says it already is negotiating for an intrastate market for some 50 million cubic feet of gas daily.

"II. THE PRICE PICTURE

"Producers evidently will take a little less money in order to sell gas intrastate—but competition actually is lessening the price differential.

"Wayne J. Johnson, president of Natural Gas Service Co., says not much interstate gas is being offered at any price, "and the prices offered for intrastate gas—excluding distress sales—are competitive with interstate."

"One major gas producer reportedly has signed with an aluminum manufacturer to supply long-term gas intrastate for 12.5 cents per thousand cubic feet, plus escalation terms.

"Another major producer is understood to have agreed to sell gas to a synthetic fibers manufacturer for 5 years at 19 cents per thousand cubic feet. Price for the gas for which National Gas Service is dickering will be between 17 and 19 cents per thousand cubic feet.

"United Gas Co. has renewed and expanded a contract with another gas producer for intrastate sales of gas from the Magnet-Withers area, Wharton County, plus new deliveries from the Chocolate Bayou Field, Brazoria County.

"In both instances, the reported price is about 14.5 cents per thousand cubic feet, with escalation of ½ cent per year per thousand cubic feet. The contracts will run 20 years.

"III. THE LONG LINES' VIEW

"That the long lines transmission companies are taking a grim look at the situation is apparent.

"One interstate transmission company concedes that it is experiencing difficulty finding gas supplies to replenish the reserves.

"'We haven't been able to get any gas since the veto of the Harris-Fulbright bill and neither has any other interstate pipeline company,' a spokesman told Petroleum Week. 'A little is being sold, but it's the kind where the operator is in a bind and has to sell, where he has to do it in order to hold onto his lease, where his reserves are small and remote.'

"Before the veto, the management of this transmission company felt that a failure to enact the legislation would cause a temporary freeze on new gas development. Now it would appear the freeze actually has begun.

"These company officials think the freeze will thaw when the competition drives prices up so high the development of new gas reserves will again become too attractive to resist.

"Of course, that leaves open the question of the effect on consumers and the attitude of the FPC in the absence of legislation.

"IV. FOR THE FUTURE

"Few people think that the Southwest will ever be able to absorb all the gas it produces.

"Despite the drum-beating for "Texas gas for Texas use,' despite chamber of commerce forecasts, most industry people feel that a lot of gas will have to move interstate if it goes anywhere.

"Johnson, of Natural Gas Service, for instance, has an intimate knowledge of shut-in production in Texas, Oklahoma, and Louisiana. It is his best stock in trade.

"You'd be surprised at the number of wells shut in on the Gulf Coast," he says. "It is a tremendous amount of potential gas production.

"'But, even if all of us got busy right now, working around the clock, we'd never be able to find intrastate markets for all of it.'

"This puts the independent producer on the spot, even if he has a sizable reserve reasonably close to a connection.

"The majors can afford to 'hold on' to their gas longer, and they are actively seeking intrastate industrial sales now.

"If the independents continue to do nothing, they'll wind up having to sell interstate because there'll be no other market open.

"But the independents have a lot of problems. They've got to figure out how to tackle the collecting and transportation of gas for some distance—because, obviously, it would be impossible to set down a nice little industrial plant beside each small gas field.

"The independent producer has one inceasingly bright prospect: that an out-of-State purchaser will buy his gas in the ground, thereby avoiding virtually all Federal control. It would work like this:

"An industrial plant outside the producing State would purchase outright the properties of the gas producer—all the gas reserves, lease rights, etc. An interstate line then would contract to haul the gas to the industrial plant. The producer might or might not be retained by the industrial firm as operator of the properties. In either case, the producer would have removed himself from the transaction and therefore, from Federal control.

"The industrial concern would be using its own gas but could not possibly be classified as a "natural gas company" under the act.

"The only thing left to be regulated federally would be the transportation price charged by the interstate transmission line, which already is under Federal regulation.

"It isn't inconceivable that some transmission lines themselves might make such purchases, rather than undertake the task of exploring for and developing their own reserves.

"An expansion of exploration activity by transmission companies can be expected, however. Within the next 2 months, one such company probably will announce completion of its reorganization to develop gas reserves of its own."

I commend these articles to the particular attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] who recently undertook to convince the Senate that figures provided by the oil and gas industry itself prove that the failure of the Harris-Fulbright bill in no way reduced the Nation's natural gas reserves.

I have caused to have made a careful study of the figures used by my able friend because on the surface they appeared to be convincing support for his position. However, as is so often the situation with conclusions arrived at by cursory methods, the figures actually prove exactly the reverse of what the Senator says they prove.

I wish now to discuss the Senator's statements and to submit a number of tables in support of my remarks.

The Senator from Illinois reminded the Senate that the proponents of the Harris-Fulbright bill argued that Federal utility-type regulation of the natural gas producer would result in the elimination of exploration for natural gas, and he then attempts to refute that contention by (1) showing that there was an increase in 1955 over 1954 of gas reserves found through discoveries of new fields, and (2) pointing out that 22 trillion feet of gas reserves were added during 1955, representing the greatest increase in the history of the industry. Here the Senator misses an important point and in so doing places an erroneous interpretation on the statistics he quotes—statistics which were, as he points out, put together by the oil and gas industry itself.

While it is true that the increase in reserves found through the discoveries of new fields is the direct result of exploration, this is not true for the reserves added during 1955 by reason of extensions and revisions. The latter are for the most part the result of developmental operations as distinguished from wildcatting or exploration operations. It would be well to explain at this point that in addition to such development operations, which include drilling of new wells to known productive horizons (levels) within the then known boundaries of proved fields, drilling of new wells resulting in the revision or extension of then known boundaries of pools or fields, natural gas reserves included in those classified as extensions and revisions are also added as the result of (1) changing economic condition which permit estimating the reserves to lower abandonment pressures; (2) recompleting or treating; and (3) improved techniques which make it possible to obtain better information concerning the physical properties of the reservoir or field and thus estimate the quantity of reserves more accurately.

These last three mentioned activities may be carried on with little or no expenditure of funds and they also bear no relation to exploration activities.

The most important fact in these statistics, then is that of the 22 trillion feet of natural gas reserves added during 1955, 16.3 trillion feet, or approximately 74 percent, were added as the result of revisions and extensions and not as the result of exploration. The fact that exploration increased reserves by only about one-fourth of the total is a sobering one when we remember that unless new fields are discovered in the future, through exploration, there will be no such fields in which revisions or extensions can be made to add to future natural gas reserves.

Now, here is another instance in which the Senator used the right set of figures to jump to the wrong conclusion. While it is true that total gas reserves added during the year 1955 (which include revisions and extensions) exceed the quantity of natural gas produced during 1955, what is most important to consider is that production during that year (10.1 trillion cubic feet) was nearly twice that of reserves added during that year through discovery of new fields (5.7 trillion cubic feet). This was also true in each of the years 1947 through 1955 (as shown by the table); that is, that production exceeded the reserves added through discoveries of new fields. Thus, we have been burning gas about twice as fast as the explorers—not the developers—have been finding it.

What is the actual factual situation with respect to our country's natural gas reserves? The importance of such determination cannot be exaggerated. By looking at table 1, which, with the exception of columns (4) and (8), is the same table furnished for the RECORD by the Senator from Illinois it is obvious that despite the yearly increase in production, the proved reserves—column (6)—have increased yearly from 147.7 trillion cubic-feet in 1945 to 223.6 trillion cubic-feet in 1955. Table 1 follows:

What is not obvious from table 1, however, is the incontrovertible fact that while total gas reserves have increased, the effect of the yearly excesses of production over reserves obtained through discoveries of new fields, that is, through exploration, has brought about a serious decline in the expected life of the total reserves.

This is clearly demonstrated by table 2. It will be seen from table 2 that there has been a decline each year (except in the year 1949 when it remained at the 1948 level) in the life of the total natural gas reserves starting with an estimated life of 32.5 years in 1946 and ending with 22.1 years in 1955.

In other words, 10 years of the expected life of the country's natural gas reserves have been sloughed off during this period of 10 years. What will happen to our reserves in the future if this rate of decimation continues is obvious to anyone. I suggest that you try adding to and deducting from your personal bank account in this same manner and then determine the status of the bank account 10 years hence. These facts certainly lead away from—and not toward—the conclusion that "our natural gas reserves are continuing in good shape," which is where the Senator finds himself after his remarkable interpretation.

An interesting aside at this point is the fact that of the total gas reserves enjoyed by us up to the time of the passage of the Natural Gas Act, practically none have been discovered by utilities subject to the kind of utility regulation which must be imposed on the independent producers of natural gas in the absence of the Harris-Fulbright bill.

There is no way, of course, in which anyone could determine how many more reserves might have been added through new field discoveries if the impending regulatory threat had not been present during 1955. It is certainly reasonable to assume that while the new reserves found during 1955 were somewhat higher than in 1954, they were lower than would have been the case if complete freedom of operation had been restored to the independent producer. In other words, the disease is still in a stage of incubation. We cannot measure its ravages until it has fully broken out and run its course.

Another fallacy which the Senator seeks to perpetuate is the notion that, willy-nilly, gas will continue to be discovered as an accident in the continuing search for oil. "Drilling, as I have said many times before, is primarily for oil; the discovery of gas is incidental to it," the Senator said. Fortunately, that, too, can be refuted by statistical facts which speak more eloquently than rhetoric.

I have had prepared, in table form, a comparison as between natural gas and oil reserves added during the years 1947 through 1955, and the percentage relationship which each bears to the total reserves added each year. This table follows:

It will be noted that the quantities in column 1 are the same as those shown in columns 1, 2, and 3 of table 1. In column 2 the Mcf of natural gas have been converted to barrels on a Btu equivalent basis of 6 Mcf equaling 1 barrel. This conversion equivalent is based on average countrywide figures and it is used in the industry for that purpose. Column 3 shows for the same three categories the barrels of oil reserves added during each of the years. Column 4 is the total of columns 2 and 3 and it represents 100 percent of the reserves (oil and gas) added. Column 5 shows the percentage of such total relating to gas reserves found and column 6 the percentage of oil reserves added.

Column 5 of this table 3 shows that in the year 1955 63 percent of the total reserves added through discoveries of new fields were natural gas reserves; 49 percent of the total reserves added through extensions and revisions were natural gas reserves; and that 52 percent of the total of all reserves added during 1955 were natural gas reserves. It is extremely difficult to understand how such relationships can be characterized as incidental. Of the total reserves added through discoveries of new fields, we see that in 1955 over 63 percent were gas reserves. The figures in column 5 indicate an increasing trend toward finding of relatively greater gas than oil reserves through discoveries in new fields. It is expected by the natural gas producing industry that this trend will continue because drilling has been deeper and because relatively more gas than oil has been discovered at the deeper levels.

Clearly, the statement that the discovery of gas is incidental to oil applies to the period of some years ago before the existence of pipelines which have brought producer and market together, but it has not been true for some time. It is entirely possible if this trend toward greater relative finding of gas continues, that in the not too distant future we may be referring to the incidental discovery of oil.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF VISAS TO BE ISSUED TO ORPHANS UNDER THE REFUGEE RELIEF ACT OF 1953

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement about Calendar No. 2730, S. 3570, the Langer bill and the orphan problem.

I understand that the Senate tomorrow probably will consider some amendments to Calendar No. 2249, H. R. 6888, which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] plans to call up. However, I wish tonight to make a few comments and to submit certain material for the RECORD in regard to S. 3570, which is the Langer orphan bill.

My colleague, the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER], introduced earlier this year a similar bill, and on July 21, 1956, he made very clear, in an able speech to the Senate, that the Langer bill would be acceptable if some action could be had on it. In his speech on July 21, the junior Senator from Oregon said:

The Senate Judiciary Committee, within the last few days, has reported favorably the bill by the distinguished senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], S. 3570, to extend the provisions of the Refugee Relief Act as it applies especially to orphans. This bill extends the time for issuing visas under section 5 of the Refugee Act from December 31, 1956, to December 31, 1959, and would increase the number of visas authorized in section 5 from 4,000 to 9,000. This bill follows closely the provision of my bill, S. 3753, and deserves, in my opinion, the full support from the Congress.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Oregon and I—and I feel certain the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], also, if he were here—share the view that we do not particularly care how this justice shall be done, whether it be done by way of the Langer bill or the Neuberger bill, or by way of amendments to the sheepherders bill, which I understand the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] may offer tomorrow. Those amendments will not only take care of the immigration of some sheepherders, which I may say are sorely needed in my State, but also will do justice to the orphan problem.

I have in my hand some communications I have received from persons in my State who are very much concerned about the passage of the Langer bill before adjournment. I ask unanimous consent to have those communications printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHRISTIAN CELEBRITY TIME,
Hermiston, Oreg., July 20, 1956.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: It was my happy privilege yesterday to eat lunch with the Harry Holt's of Crestwell, Oreg. What a joy it was to see their own lovely children in perfect harmony with their newly adopted eight Korean children of GI soldiers and Korean mothers.

Mrs. Holt and the older children were quite concerned about the fact that unless something is done before Congress adjourns the Refugee Act of 1953 will expire before many more children from Korea can be brought to this country. Mr. Holt is now in Korea and has many more children about ready to come to this country. Also, Mrs. Holt tells me there are hundreds of couples eagerly hoping the day will soon come when they can have their children of mixed blood here in America.

Even though the Senate is under tremendous pressure to adjourn in a few weeks, I am hoping and praying that the act can be extended. May we count on you to do your best to see that this Refugee Act is extended before Congress adjourns?

Sincerely,

H. P. SCONCE.

FOREST GROVE, OREG., July 23, 1956.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are very anxious to have the Refugee Act of 1953 extended as we have a partly adopted child in Korea, and understand the quota has run out.

Besides our own interest in this matter we feel the extension of this act would benefit many a needy orphan and bring joy to the adoptive parents in this country.

We will appreciate your making an effort to see that this legislation is passed.

Sincerely,

JAMES C. SIMONTON,
RUTH SIMONTON.

PORTLAND, OREG., July 42, 1956.

DEAR SIR: We are very concerned about the Korean-American babies, and am writing to you to help us get the baby we have been promised.

We want this baby more than anything on this earth, and pray that you will pass bill S. 3570 so it will be possible to get the baby that has been promised us.

We have looked forward to this baby for a long time now. It means so much to us. We have the things we will need for her already, including a nice new crib.

Please help us. We have a lot of faith in you. There are many of us waiting for our babies.

Yours truly,

Mrs. EDITH WADDINGTON.

MR. MORSE: We have a partly adopted child in Korea and we can not bring him home until the Refugee Act of 1953 is extended.

So we are asking you to do all you can to get it extended.

The quota has run out and we would like so much to bring him here where we can take care of him.

Thanking you sincerely,

Mr. and Mrs. HERBERT C. MILLER.

LYLE, Wash., July 23, 1956.

The Honorable WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: We, the undersigned, wish to urge you to cast your vote for the extension of the Refugee Act of 1953. There are people interested in adopting these children; and some who have legally adopted children there now. The quota has run out and these children have no chance at life in a Christian family without extension of this act. We feel that since so many American boys have proved themselves delinquent fathers, that other American families who feel so inclined should be given the opportunity of taking these children who so badly need a home.

ASTORIA, OREG., July 20, 1956.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: We are writing this letter asking your support of the extension of the Refugee Act of 1953.

We have adopted two Korean-American orphan boys, ages 5 months and 16 months. As we understand, we will be unable to bring them home unless this act is extended; so we are asking your support of this bill.

Thank you.

Very truly yours,

Mr. and Mrs. EUGENE W. HUNSINGER.

WAYNE L. MORSE,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORSE: I would like to stress the importance I feel attached to the pending legislation concerning proxy adoption of Korean war orphans. Will you please do all in your power to extend the Refugee Act of 1953 in order that we may bring to our home the orphan we have now at least partially adopted.

I am sure that you will attempt to do the honest thing, and I feel sure that you are capable of making sensible decisions. I also realize the stress of innumerable problems which are ahead of you in the closing weeks of Congress, and I am asking this consideration from you on behalf of underprivileged orphans that many of us are offering our homes to.

Acknowledgment of this letter is not necessary; rather than that, please help to clear this pending legislation through the Senate.

Very sincerely,

CLEMENT N. STOCKARD.

LAKE GROVE, OREG., July 20, 1956.

The Honorable WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORSE: We understand there is a bill before the Senate to extend the Refugee Act of 1953. We sincerely hope you not only vote for it, but use your influence to get it passed.

We have two Eurasian children in Korea, fully adopted, but being held there because the quota has been filled. Knowing how much better these children will be in a country where they will get food, shelter, and love instead of persecution and want, we are most anxious to have the legal door opened to them.

There is not only the moral obligation we Americans feel toward all uncared for children, but the more definite obligation, knowing our Armed Forces were responsible for these little Korean outcasts.

Thank you for your attention.

Sincerely yours,

BERTA BURCH BABB.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A very close friend has fully adopted a Korean orphan, now in Korea, but has been advised that the child cannot be brought to the United States because the immigration quota has been filled, and that the only hope of bringing the child home is dependent upon an extension of the Refugee Act of 1953, before Congress adjourns within the next few days.

I solicit your efforts in bringing about such extension of the Refugee Act of 1953, in order to enable the subject orphan, and others in similar circumstance, to enter the United States.

Thank you.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH D. BEEMER.

DEAR SIR: Regarding the new bill presented by Senator NEUBERGER for extension of Refugee Act of 1953.

We have an adopted child in Korea which we wish to bring to the United States.

We will appreciate your cooperation regarding the passage of this bill which will assure the entry of many of these childen from Korea.

Thanking you for your cooperation in this matter,

DEAR SENATOR: I would like to urge immediate passage of Senate bill S. 3570 regarding extension of the Refugee Act.

We, along with many others, are in the process of adopting an American fathered, Korean orphan.

Unless this bill is passed many of these children will be left homeless.

Thank you for doing all you can to see this bill passed as soon as possible.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: A letter from Mr. J. D. Wilson, chairman, Governor's Committee To Implement the Refugee Relief Act; tells me this morning that you are entirely on our side regarding liberalizing present immigration laws, particularly as to refugees.

I might add that I consider the McCarran-Walter Act as unfair to certain sections of Europe.

Sincerely yours,

CONCORDIA COLLEGE,

The Honorable WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: This letter comes to you with the earnest request for your assistance in a matter which is of deep concern to some friends of mine and hence also to me.

My friends are in the process of adopting a Korean child. I understand that there is at present a bill in the Senate to extend the Refugee Act of 1953. Unless this act is extended, they will not get their child, since, as you know, the quota of Korean children has already been filled.

I will, therefore, deeply appreciate your doing everything in your power to have this Refugee Act of 1953 extended. Thank you very much for your cooperation in this matter.

Cordially yours,
ARTHUR G. WAHLERS, Pastor.

HOOD RIVER, OREG., July 24, 1956.

DEAR SIR: We would like to urge you to do all you can to pass bill S. 3570 so children of our American soldiers can be brought to the States to be brought up as good citizens in a Christian nation.

Yours truly,
Mr. and Mrs. VERNON POLSON.

ESTACADA, OREG., July 24, 1956.

Senator WAYNE MORSE: I am writing in regard to bill S. 3570, about adopting GI refugee children and urge that it be passed so those who have already fully or partially adopted children; who are waiting for visas, be allowed to come to America and join their parents.

Hoping and praying that this goes through, I am,

Mrs. LEWIS PAULI.

INDEPENDENCE, OREG., July 21, 1956.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: We are writing to ask you to please pass bill No. S. 3570. This will allow us to apply for and to adopt a foreign child.

We want to adopt a child so badly and have tried to adopt one through many sources including the Boys and Girl's Society in Portland. Also have our name on four different doctor's lists but to no avail. It seems impossible to adopt a child yet there are thousands in orphanages that need parent's love, care and guidance and a home. Also these foreign children will have an opportunity to live normal lives that they are deprived of in many foreign countries.

To be able to adopt a child would make us very happy as well as hundreds of childless couples.

I believe too, that this is a wonderful missionary opportunity to bring these children into American Christian homes and raise them to be American citizens.

We urge you to please pass this bill.

Sincerely yours,
Mr. and Mrs. JACOB WARKENTIN.

BOARDMAN, OREG., July 23, 1956.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
Senator DICK NEUBERGER,
Oregon Representatives,
Senate Office Building,

DEAR SIRS: I sincerely request that you pass bill S. 3570, as these poor children are so badly in need of homes.

Yours truly,
Mr. and Mrs. LELON MCLOHTH.

COTTAGE GROVE, OREG.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Will you please vote in favor of extending the time limit and increasing the quota on the Childrens Refugee Act, S. 3570?

We, who are trying to adopt these GI children from Korean and Japan, will be ever grateful to you in Washington for your help in getting this bill through so that the 500 children already adopted to American families may be brought home, as well as about 5,000 others for whom homes in our Christian land are available and waiting.

Thank you for your favorable vote for bill S. 3570.

Yours truly,
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. UMPLEBY.

WILLAMETTE NURSERY CO.,
Portland, Oreg., July 23, 1956.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We herewith would like to request that you would kindly support the bill for extending the Refugee Act of 1953, especially as it concerns the admittance of American-Korean orphans.

Moreover we feel it to be the duty of the United States Government to take over the care of these unfortunate children, for the United States Government sent the fathers of these children into the foreign countries and is therefore responsible for their conduct.

We appreciate very much anything you can do for these orphans. Thank you.

Respectfully,
Mr. and Mrs. WILLIAM A. K. LAMMERT.

ALBANY, OREG., July 23, 1956.

DEAR SENATOR: Will you please vote yes on bill S. 3570. We feel the Refugee Act of 1953 should be extended so that more GI orphans from Japan and Korea can be adopted. They are our responsibility, and we feel this bill should be passed.

Sincerely,
Mr. and Mrs. V. J. GRAF.

LEBANON, OREG., July 21, 1956.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: We understand that due to the Refugee Act of 1953 the quota set for the refugees to enter the United States has now been filled.

We also understand that presently is a bill submitted to the Senate to extend the Refugee Act of 1953. We ask as taxpayers and voters that you earnestly support this bill in order that we may complete our adoption of a Korean child, since we have already completed necessary forms for the adoption. We might add that there are several people just as interested as we.

Sincerely,
Mr. and Mrs. WILLIAM R. BOYD.

PORTLAND, OREG., July 24, 1956.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: It has come to my attention that there is before the Senate bill No. S. 3570 to increase the amount of children allowed to enter under the Refugee Act. This would allow 9,000 orphans to enter instead of 4,000, raise the age limit from 10 to 14 years and extend the time limit to December 31, 1959.

I understand that the quota is already filled and that there are still many children of GI parentage in the orphanages, and a waiting list of prospective parents wanting them.

If you would be so kind as to look into the matter and help us, as prospective parents, to get the children we would be very grateful.

If you could push this bill to the utmost of your ability and get it passed before Congress recesses next week it would help us tremendously. The present bill expires December 31, 1956, so it would have to be acted upon this week. So please act upon bill No. S. 3570, and help these children and us.

Thankfully yours,
LOUISE JOANNE KRETTLER.

ALBANY OREG., July 23, 1956.

DEAR SIR: I sincerely urge you to pass the bill S. 3570 for the extension of the Refugee Act of 1953. If it is passed it will allow over 500 children who have been partially or fully adopted and who are waiting for visas, to come to America. Otherwise they cannot join their parents as the quota is filled now. Thank you for your kind attention.

Sincerely, in the service of our Lord,
Mrs. DONALD RALSTON.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, those communications deal primarily with a group of proposed foster parents of some Korean orphan children fathered by American soldiers in Korea. The American faster parents are desirous of bringing some of those orphan children into this country. This they could do under the Langer bill. In fact, among the communications which have just been ordered to be printed in the RECORD is a communication from a man who is at present in Korea, seeking to bring back a baby which he and his wife have selected; but because of the quota restriction they are not allowed to do so.

I do not intend to take the time to argue the morality or the social conscience of this proposal; I simply say it is so obviously humanitarian, it is so obviously right from the standpoint of human values, that Congress certainly should not adjourn, in my judgment, without the passage of the Langer bill or the adoption of the amendments which I understand the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] plans to offer tomorrow to the so-called sheepherders bill, which I think is Calendar No. 2249, H. R. 6888.

Mr. President, I hope that certainly action will be taken on this matter, because a human problem is involved. It is a project which, in my opinion, is from the standpoint of the human values involved, so sound that, in our haste and our desire to get away from Washington and to return home, we should not forget what I think is our obligation to the orphans whom American foster parents want to adopt and bring into the United States.

BLACKLISTING

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Is Blacklisting Respectable at Present?" published in the Louisville Times.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IS BLACKLISTING RESPECTABLE AT PRESENT?

Blacklisting was once a dirty word in America. Although there never was a time when it wasn't used—against union organizers at one time, against people of certain races or religions at another—it was always done as discreetly as possible, for there was a general feeling among Americans that no man's job should hinge on his political, economic or religious beliefs, or on what someone thought his political, economic or religious beliefs were.

The Fund for the Republic, basing its report on a study begun in 1954, says that blacklisting for political beliefs is widespread in the movie, radio and television industries. That comes as no special surprise. It has been widely known that the practice has been used for several years.

FUND ONLY GIVES DATA

The Fund for the Republic, itself the target of slings and arrows, is drawing no conclusions from its report. In the words of its board chairman, Paul Hoffman, it "has brought in no indictments, and has offered no recommendations." If any progress is made, Hoffman said, "in resolving the conflicts of interest, viewpoint and principle involved * * * this progress must ultimately turn upon public knowledge and understanding of the actual situation and its problems. This report seeks only to supply the data * * *."

We are curious as to what, if anything, the public will do with the data supplied. Will it defend blacklisting as a necessary evil in these times? Will it become indignant about the practice? Or will the public shrug it off as a matter of little or no importance?

Blacklisting seems to us dangerous on many grounds, not the least of which is the fact that it condemns many without a trial. The entertainment business, with which the fund's report deals, is extraordinarily sensitive. Seeking to appeal to mass audiences, it wants to offend no one.

AN INDUSTRY TERRORIZED

Thus a spokesman for any group and even some spokesmen for nonexistent groups can whisper a word that a certain individual is a persona non grata, and that individual finds himself having to prove his innocence. And frequently he finds himself not only out of a job but unable to get another one.

In this way frequently anonymous individuals can terrorize an industry, as Red Channels, a publication which purported to list individuals in radio and television having Communist connections, terrorized radio and TV.

This is not what we like to think of as the American way. Yet it is, according to the Fund for the Republic report, going on all the time. We will have to wait to see whether the people of the country are interested enough to demand that something be done.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10:30 A. M. TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 10:30 a. m., tomorrow; and that when the Senate convenes tomorrow, there be the usual morning hour for the introduction of bills, the presentation of petitions and memorials, and the transaction of other routine business, subject to a 2-minute limitation on statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANSFIELD in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INTERCORPORATE RELATIONS BETWEEN GENERAL PUBLIC UTILITIES CORP. AND MANILA ELECTRIC CO.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I give notice of the possibility of calling up Calendar No. 2841, H. R. 10624, relating to intercorporate relations between the General Public Utilities Corp., a corporation organized and operating in the United States, and the Manila Electric Co.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to announce that, so far as I am informed, there will be no further business transacted tonight. Although there may be insertions made in the RECORD, there will be no yea-and-nay votes.

I have just been handed two additional bills which may be considered tomorrow, H. R. 10468 and H. R. 10622, both reported from the Committee on Public Works, and both relating to the construction of bridges.

I wish to express my gratitude to all Senators for the patience and understanding they have shown during the long sessions of the past few days.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I should like to call up a conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Cannot the Senator have it brought up tomorrow?

Mr. MAGNUSON. The House has agreed to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Senators are very tired at this hour.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It should not take more than a minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Most of the "minute" matters take about 10 minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. This concerns a very important piece of proposed legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Washington for that purpose.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, the conferees of the Senate and House have come to a unanimous conclusion on what I think is one of the most important pieces of proposed legislation which will be passed by this Congress, the Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956.

The House has approved the conference report on the Senate bill which was introduced by me. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the conference report on S. 3275. The Senate conferees accepted the House amendments. The House has approved the Senate bill with the House amendments.

I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, there are a number of Senators who are interested in this general subject matter. After consultation with the distinguished majority leader, I informed Senators on this side of the aisle that, except for insertions in the RECORD, the Senate was about to conclude its business for today.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. There are always exceptions, I may say to the distinguished minority leader. I desired to make a little statement, but I was interrupted by the Senator from Washington who said he desired to have laid before the Senate a conference report on an important wildlife measure.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the conference report has not come from the House.

Mr. MAGNUSON. There is no objection to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. If the Senator from Washington will arrange to get the papers, the conference report will be called up.

Mr. MAGNUSON. What has happened to them?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The chairman of the committee will have to inquire about that. The message transmitting the conference report has not come over from the House.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will ask that it be laid before the Senate tomorrow. I simply thought that since we were all unanimously in agreement, the business of the Senate could be expedited by having the conference report approved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Senator from Texas tries to specialize in that subject; but conference reports, as in the case of all other measures passed by the House, must be transmitted in a message to the Senate. The conference report in which the Senator is interested has not been received from the House.

Normally, the Senator who has handled the conference report submits it to the Senate and asks for its consideration.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I shall wait until tomorrow morning, with the understanding that I shall have an opportunity to call it up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The leadership is desirous of having all conference reports laid before the Senate. If the Senator from Washington will notify the leadership, the majority leader will be glad to cooperate with him.

FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF PUERTO RICAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, yesterday, July 25, the people of Puerto Rico celebrated the fourth anniversary of their commonwealth status, and I believe it but fitting and proper that we in the Congress pay tribute to them for the remarkable progress which they have been able to accomplish under this form of self-government.

It was just 4 years ago that Governor Muñoz-Marín, one of this hemisphere's most illustrious figures, officially announced the birth of the Puerto Rican commonwealth. In proclaiming the constitution of the new associated state to be in effect, he heralded the domestic autonomy of his people while reaffirming their affinity with their fellow citizens in the United States. The ties of affection and responsibility forever bind us together, for Puerto Ricans are still Americans first. Completely free in terms of local government, our island compatriots are happy, just as we are here in the United States, to pledge primary fealty to the Stars and Stripes.

Proud to be free, and Americans, Puerto Ricans are mindful each day of the economic and social blessings which are promoted and guaranteed under the compact of 1952. Under the leadership of two of the most outstanding citizens of the island, Governor Muñoz-Marín and Resident Commissioner FERNÓS-ISERN, together with their association with the United States, Puerto Ricans today, recognize no barrier to continued progress.

The people of Puerto Rico have shown a remarkable capacity to adjust themselves to changing conditions and circumstances; for making a practical appraisal of, and for taking appropriate action to meet, those circumstances and conditions. Because of the small size of their island and because of its very limited natural resources, they realized that isolation and separation from the United States was not in their best interest. On the other hand, because of their geographical position, 1,000 miles from Miami and 1,500 miles from New York, because of their cultural background, because they are a fully developed people by themselves, admission into the United States Union was not considered the most favorable way to maintain bonds of union with the United States. They brought us a formula conceived in the principles of freedom, democracy, and self-government, unique in the annals of our political system. In accordance with this formula, their bond with the United States does not mean incorporation into the Union, but rather an association with the Union by solemn compact. Of course, it is not separation. Under the aegis of a common citizenship, they maintain a voluntary association with the United States. Thus, they have created their Commonwealth, their free state, with a constitution of their own adoption. They exercise the right of decision in all matters of their everyday life, while the United States, with their consent, performs, relative to Puerto Rico, the same functions as it does in the States of the Union.

In a little over a decade, Puerto Rico's gross national product has climbed more than 300 percent, while wages and salaries have risen some 400 percent. Basic to such progress has been the cultivation of outside capital and the modernizing of ancient agricultural methods. Four hundred new factories and a large number of agrarian programs have been put into operation since the epochal year 1947, when the entire economy of the island began to be revitalized and enlarged with the institution of the Commonwealth constitution.

This veritable industrial revolution, with its attendant beneficial effects on housing, education, and other social factors, has transformed Puerto Rico from the poorhouse of the Western World to a showcase of democracy. It is enormously significant that thousands of visitors from some fourscore foreign lands have studied the Puerto Rican way to a better life under the United States technical-assistance program. It is safe to assume that these observers will give the lie to Communist propaganda.

Four years ago the flag of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico was raised to the top of the mast in Puerto Rico to fly alongside the Stars and Stripes. Both flags flying together are a symbol of a noble association.

We are proud of the Puerto Rican people and their efforts to reach a higher station in life. We should continue to help them as much as we can in their unemployment problem, heretofore extensive and appalling. They are trying to create new opportunities so that they will not have to leave their homeland to make a living. They are developing industrially.

The greater the interest and encouragement on the part of the people of the United States in pointing the way for Puerto Rico to achieve higher standards of living, the greater an asset Puerto Rico will be as an associate—both politically and economically. Thus, the greater would be the prestige of the United States before the world, especially before our good neighbors below the border who are kinsmen of Puerto Rico's people.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I should like to take this opportunity to extend to the people of Puerto Rico my heartiest congratulations for having made such an excellent selection in choosing their official representatives. Resident Commissioner A. FERNÓS-ISERN, their representative in the Congress since 1947, has done an outstanding and effective job in presenting to the Congress the many problems affecting Puerto Rico. His sincerity of purpose and sterling character have been indelibly imprinted upon every Member of Congress, without exception. Though he has no vote, he has frequently stated to me that he has the votes of 435 Members of the House of Representatives and 96 votes in the Senate of the United States. His activities on behalf of the Puerto Rican people have, on more than one occasion, amply demonstrated the correctness of this statement. As many of us here in the Congress will recall, it was he who was chairman of the constitutional convention which drafted the constitution of Puerto Rico. It was he who was chosen as a member of the United States delegation to the United Nations when the President of the United States informed the United Nations of Puerto Rico's self-governing status. In his official capacity, as a representative of the people of Puerto Rico, he has justly earned the admiration and respect of every Member in both Houses of the Congress. His warm personality has endeared him to all of us, and I, for one, hope that the people of Puerto Rico will see fit to retain such a worthy representative in the public service for many long years to come. His great contribution to our cause and the cause of the Puerto Rican people is inestimable.

In Gov. Luis Muñoz Marín, Puerto Rico has an equally outstanding citizen. As chief executive, he has unquestionably performed outstanding public service in their behalf. He is, in fact, a great leader. It was during his administration that successful efforts were made in industrializing Puerto Rico so that more people could obtain more jobs, which in turn provided them with an increased standard of living. The people of Puerto Rico and the people of the United States owe to him an everlasting debt of gratitude for the great public service which he has, and is, rendering. The record of progress which already has been made under his administration is one in which we can all take just pride.

It was through the leadership of these men that Puerto Rico has advanced, and is continuing to advance, under a truly self-governing associated status with the United States.

On this the fourth anniversary of its self-governing status, I am confident that the Congress and the people of the United States join with me in extending to the people of Puerto Rico best wishes for continued success and Godspeed.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article entitled "The Puerto Rican," which was written by Bill Baggs, one of our State's most humorous, and, at the same time, most effective and excellent reporters. This serious column about Puerto Rico is most informative, and deserves the attention of all Members of the Senate.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PUERTO RICAN

(By Bill Baggs)

(There are 80,000 people from Puerto Rico or of Puerto Rican descent living among us in this community. Each one is a citizen of the United States. Probably the Puerto Rican is the poorest understood citizen of our country. These notes are made on the eve of the fourth anniversary of the island becoming a full and free partner in the United States.)

Perhaps no people on earth have taken such giant steps toward democracy and its economic blessings in the past 10 years as the Puerto Ricans.

For 400 years the island was ruled by Spain and for 50 years by the United States.

Ten years ago the lack of sanitary and educational facilities would have shocked the most backward section of the continental United States. Today, you can almost see civilization climbing into the spectacular, green limestone hills and the mountains beyond.

INDUSTRY COMES

Essentially the problem of Puerto Rico is over-population. It is one of the most densely-populated places in the world. In Florida, our average is 51 people per square mile. In Puerto Rico the statistic is 643 per square mile.

The land is fertile. Testimony of the rich soil is given by the fine tobacco crop, sugar, coffee, a number of vegetables. Irrigation is needed. Modern agricultural technique is needed. To balance the economy, industry is needed.

In recent years industry has rolled into Puerto Rico like a high, continuing tide. One may observe the strong hand it places on the economy. A great discovery has come with industry: The Puerto Rican is a magnificent industrial worker. This is especially so wherein fingerwork in industry is required. The Puerto Rican has long, thin fingers with a grand dexterity.

PREYED UPON

Overpopulation pushes the Puerto Rican into the continental United States, mostly, it appears, in New York and Miami, and there have mushroomed anti-Puerto Rican feelings among people in this country. This possibly was inevitable.

Many are the Puerto Ricans who come with little education and no money to compete in the cities of the United States. They are preyed upon by the politician in many instances. Among us are people who take great economic advantage of the Puerto Rican. It is not difficult to do.

One must travel to the island, back into the country, where the Jibaro or countryman, lives. There one finds a splendid man. In his native circumstances, the Jibaro is a delightful, frank, honest man. He is as generous as man becomes. One who has been among them knows this to be so.

TO APPRECIATE

But in the severe competition of the cities, the Puerto Rican becomes, by necessity, hardened. They often do rash things. There was the young man a few years ago here who attempted to stick up a fellow. The fellow refused to be bullied whereupon the Puerto Rican began to cry and reveal his frustration. In a small half of a house, his five children and a wife waited for him to bring home something to eat. His only prospects were to rob.

One may say, and one can hear it said, that the Puerto Rican should go home. This is foolish and empty talk. The Puerto Rican is at home. Wherever his feet are on the soil of the United States he is at home.

Democracy and its economic goods were cultivated only in late years by this fellow. One must understand this to understand the Puerto Rican. To appreciate him one should travel to Puerto Rico and see the best advertisement the United States has for Latin eyes in this hemisphere.

WEEKLY HEALTH BULLETIN OF THE CONNECTICUT STATE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, I am sure that my colleagues in this body and our fellow legislators in the House of Representatives will welcome the information I propose to impart in the next 2 minutes.

All of us are aware of the numerous requests we receive in the course of a year; and we are equally aware, I am sure, of the very few times when we receive any public thanks for whatever we have been able to accomplish.

I am happy to report that the Connecticut State Department of Health, in its weekly bulletin dated July 16, 1956, has published an article which is entitled "Thank Your Congressman." The article points out that the young people of Connecticut and other citizens who are most susceptible to the dreaded disease of crippling poliomyelitis are being protected against this scourge by the action of their elected Congressmen who, with the other Members of the Congress, passed the Poliomyelitis Vaccination Assistance Act in 1955.

The article states that until July 16 of this year, 494,586 doses of vaccine have been received in Connecticut, through this act of the Congress.

I wish to publicly acknowledge this thanks from the Connecticut State Department of Health, and to express, in the name of my colleagues from Connecticut, our appreciation. I feel, too, that I may speak for my other colleagues in the Congress in acknowledging this recognition, which I hope may serve as a precedent for others.

FISHERIES DIVISION IN DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to announce that many persons have a deep and vital interest in Senate bill 3275, to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to fisheries; to strengthen the fisheries segment of the national economy; to establish within the Department of the Interior a Fisheries Division; to create and prescribe the functions of the United States Fisheries Commission; and for other purposes. It is a most important bill. All portions of the conference report on the bill have been unanimously agreed to by the conferees.

When I rose tonight, I assumed that the conference report had come to the Senate. However, it turned out that the conference report came to the Senate after I began to speak.

I do not know why by unanimous consent we could not consider and approve the conference report tonight, because so many Members are interested in it. However, in view of the fact that it was agreed that no other conference reports would be taken up tonight, I shall wait until tomorrow.

I wish to state that there is great interest in this measure, and there have been press releases and many other statements about it, in hopes that final action would be taken on it tonight.

I am sure there will be no objection to it tomorrow. The first thing in the morning, I hope to have the indulgence of the leader and the whip and all other Members who are "whipping us around" at this time of the year, so we may take final action on this very important piece of proposed legislation. All of it is agreed upon. I am sure that when all the Members return home, they will be able to point with pride to this measure as one of the accomplishments of this Congress. Many Members thought the conference report would be agreed to tonight.

The report is at the desk, and tomorrow morning I shall call it up at the first opportunity.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, let me say to my friend, the Senator from Washington, that he may have "whipped around" a little from time to time, although I have not been conscious of it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Oh, no.

Mr. CLEMENTS. But I take it that there are no saddle sores on my friend. [Laughter.]

THE CASE FOR GOING TO CONFERENCE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a research memorandum prepared for some of us who serve on the Banking and Currency Committee. The memorandum has been prepared by the exceedingly able staff of the committee.

In fact, Mr. President, I think this is a good time and place to say that in my judgment the committee, in its activities this year, would not have been able to accomplish nearly so much as it has accomplished under the very fine leadership of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], without the exceedingly able work of the members of the committee staff. Not only are they an able brain trust, but they are really an exceptional brain powerhouse.

When we came to realize what the House of Representatives has done in the case of the Senate housing bill, S. 3855, which passed the Senate on May 24, and when we realized that the House had really ignored the Senate bill, and had considered a bill which bore little relationship to it, we asked our committee staff to prepare a research memorandum on conference procedures in the Congress of the United States. I now ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the memorandum which the staff has prepared for us, under the title, "The Case for Going to Conference."

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CASE FOR GOING TO CONFERENCE

1. The Senate housing bill (S. 3855) was ignored by the House in a power play to avoid a conference.

2. The congressional conference committee system is a legislative mechanism which has been evolved over many years to meet certain imperative needs. It is recognized as a means of abbreviating legislative procedure and of harmonizing disagreements between the Houses. It is also recognized as a means by which essential legislation can be put through a Senate and a House of Representatives whose majorities, on certain issues, may be fundamentally opposed to one another.

3. There is no doubt but that the conference committee system has become a vitally important part of the legislative process in Congress. For many decades the overwhelming majority of major legislative measures has been the result of conference committee deliberation.

4. Under the rules of the two Houses, as amended in recent decades, the managers are subject to a reasonable degree of control by the House and Senate. There is now much less conference committee legislation than was formerly the case.

5. The composition of a conference committee makes it a particularly appropriate device for offering construction suggestions in regard to a bill that may have been altered several times in the course of its progress through the two Houses. For the members of the conference committee are also members of the standing committees of the two Houses which, working separately, have studied the bill carefully at the committee stage and have handled it on the floor. By meeting together in conference certain members of these informed committees can discuss the points of view of their respective bodies and arrive at a practical adjustment.

6. Long experience proves that the conference committee system is an essential part of the machinery of congressional government. Students of Congress are agreed that it is a necessary feature of our form of government. It achieves results, action, conclusion. Under our bicameral system, despite admitted defects, it is essential to have some arrangement for reconciling differences between the two Houses.

7. In the latest study of the congressional conference committee (1951), Prof. Gilbert Y. Steiner, of the University of Illinois, concludes that: "The conference committee is both a practical and satisfactory device to achieve this accommodation. It has not been a consistently irresponsible 'third house' of Congress. Conference committees have sometimes been reckless, and sometimes have flouted the will of a congressional majority, but the number of such instances is small. Conference committees may be and have been controlled by effective rules and precedents."

8. In his recent book on The Legislative Struggle (1955), Bertram M. Gross writes that: "The differences between measures approved by each of the two Houses are often of crucial importance to individual Members of Congress, private organizations, and executive officials. Conference committees become the only practical method of settling these differences." And he cites the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 as an example of the use of the conference committee to liberalize a measure (at p. 319).

9. Over the years, and especially in recent times, the courts have come to use the statement of the managers with increasing frequency as an extrinsic aid in helping them determine the intent of Congress. The courts give as much weight to such statements as they do to the committee reports prepared by the standing committees. In instances where a bill is almost completely rewritten in conference, the statement of the managers is the best extrinsic aid available to the court in determining intent.

10. From the earliest days of Congress the conference committee has been the accepted method of adjusting differences between the House and the Senate. This device has been used extensively by every Congress since 1789. Most important legislation goes through conference.

11. The conference committee is today perhaps the most unique and powerful legislative institution in America, and the least dramatic. It is a notable fact that American legislatures stand alone among modern bicameral legislative bodies in providing a formal method for adjusting differences between them. Since few, if any, important bills ever pass both Houses of Congress in precisely identical form, and since the final shape of differing measures must be determined in conference, the strategic role and importance of ad hoc conference committees will readily be appreciated.

12. In general, writers on Congress regard the conference committee as an admirable device for achieving its purpose. The advantages claimed for the system are that it settles differences between the two Houses in most cases, that it serves to expedite legislative business and prevent deadlocks, and that it facilitates majority party control of legislation.

Mr. MORSE. The memorandum points out the great importance of the conference procedure in the legislative process in the Senate, and in the House as well. I am glad that we were finally able, parliamentarywise, to resolve our difference with the House without getting into a controversy with the House over its attempt to circumvent the conference procedure.

That is about all I think we can say for the action we took last night on the housing bill. In my judgment, it was an act which, in terms of history, will be recognized as a legislative tragedy. I am very sad to think that we approved in the Senate last night a housing bill which deleted public housing for the old people.

I never wish anyone any misfortune, but I am satisfied that if my colleagues in the Senate did not have the advantage of the "public trough" we enjoy from the standpoint of our economic sustenance, and if we had to be dependent for our livelihood on the limited resources available to thousands of our old people, who I feel, were done a tragic injustice last night, perhaps we would have a better understanding of the humanitarianism of the section in the Senate bill which was approved by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and by the Senate, and which, in my judgment, ought to go to conference. It sought to provide at least 10,000 units of housing for the destitute aged.

So again I think there will be a day of reckoning, because, in my opinion, such injustices as we did last night will be recognized by the American people, and I think an accounting will be demanded.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 4203) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3275) to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to fisheries, to strengthen the fisheries segment of the national economy, to establish within the Department of the Interior a Fisheries Division, to create and prescribe the functions of the United States Fisheries Commission, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution of the House:

H. R. 7596. An act to provide for the disposal of federally owned property at obsolescent canalized waterways, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11090. An act concerning gifts of securities to minors in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 11489. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the American Institute of Architects in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 12270. An act to authorize certain construction at military installations, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 667. Joint resolution to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the Presidential inaugural ceremonies.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I again rise to urge my colleagues in the United States Senate to amend the Federal election laws before adjourning this session. For a Senator seriously to ask that the Senate, at this late stage in the session, consider a bill not previously cleared for debate by either the Senate Democratic Policy Committee or the Republican Policy Committee, is an extraordinary request and requires some explanation, even though the bill has been reported by the committee to which it was referred and has been on the calendar for more than a year.

The request, Mr. President, is made most seriously and the remarks I am about to make are, in part, an exhortation that the Senate enact legislation modernizing our grossly inadequate and outmoded Federal election machinery, and in part a review of the legislative history of proposed legislation designed to achieve these desired ends.

NO PROBLEM MORE VITAL TO DEMOCRACY

Mr. President, in my opinion, no problem of self-government by a free people which can be laid before their elected representatives is any more vital to the people's welfare than the one of providing that electoral and legislative decisions shall, in the long run, truly represent the people's will and the people's wishes, under the restrictions of constitutional government. That is the very essence of the Republican form of government to which we all subscribe. Popular rule, with written self-restraints to guarantee rights of minorities, is the one fundamental doctrine of any workable democratic process of government which clings to the ideal of human dignity and human freedom.

How to preserve such a Government from subversion by tainted elections and by tainted legislative decisions is a question which demands of everyone concerned with it a consideration beyond all thought of petty advantages to be gained momentarily by persons or parties.

CITIZENS' VOTING RIGHTS EQUAL

It is also fundamental to the American philosophy of Government that no one citizen is entitled to a greater share in the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship at the ballot box than another. To follow that philosophy of popular sovereignty through to its logical and rightful conclusion, no citizen in this country is entitled to a greater or lesser share in the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship by reason of his wealth or poverty. Rich or poor as a man may be, he is equal to any other before a jury in a courtroom, and in the weight to be given to his will by his exercise of the citizen's voting franchise.

No doctrine of inequality at the polls—as between citizen and citizen—should ever be tolerated within this great and free country of ours, if the status of a citizen of the United States is to mean what I believe it to mean. I feel about citizenship in the United States very much as the apostle Paul must have felt when he stated simply and proudly, "I am a citizen of Rome." And if I interpret correctly the wishes or the will of the vast majority of the citizens of this country, they all wish to be equal in influencing the selection of their governmental agents by use of the ballot.

VOTING RESULTS MUST NOT BE WEIGHTED BY WEALTH

They believe in the principle of one vote per citizen. They do not believe in the depths of their hearts that voting results should be weighted in favor of citizens of large means who not only cast their individual votes but subscribe large sums of money to obtain the election of candidates whom they favor. The use of the money power to influence elections, legitimate as it is, is a matter that disturbs the people of this country greatly. It has been disturbing to them for many years. The people of this country all recognize, as you and I do, that the expenditure of money is necessary to carry on political campaigns. But time and time again our people and their legislative representatives have been outraged by the lavish and massive use of money by a few persons of great wealth to influence election results. They have been so affronted by this occasional abuse of the money power by rich men or small minorities with riches at their command, that they have called it correctly a corrupt practice.

We all know that the lavish expenditure of private moneys and special interest moneys in the political life of our country is not confined to any one political party. We all know that sometimes vast sums of money have been expended to obtain political results by the triumph of one party alone, or by the candidates of one party. We knew, too, that at other times and in other places large and improper sums have been spent to corrupt the electoral and legislative process by secret expenditure of large sums of money for the control of public officers in both of the major parties of this country.

In our consideration of the problems facing the Senate's current inquiry into lobbying and campaign expenditures, or the problems before us in working for that real reform of our election laws upon which we are now engaged, we must always remember one truism. Neither the Republican nor the Democratic Party can boast a monopoly of political virtue and honor in this country. And neither party can contemplate its entire history, in city, State, and national campaigning, without regretting some episodes of the past.

And what is true of these two parties, singly, in this respect, has also been proved true of so-called bipartisan government so many times in local elections that we should all be aware of one thing—and remember it. So-called bipartisan or nonpartisan election victories and legislative victories, have also been bought corruptly by invisible governments, rich and powerful.

FREE GOVERNMENT IS MENACED

It was during my speech in opposition to the Natural Gas Act that I laid down this proposition:

> The concentrated money power of the great oil companies, wielded today to influence the decision of National Government by contributions to both parties in many parts of the United States, is a menace to the proper functioning of free government within this country.

In saying this I did not accuse the owners and managers of the oil companies of political corruption. I meant only that by means of lawful but massive campaign contributions and institutional advertising and by other lawful means, that they are able to exert an undue and disproportionate influence on the election of public officials and on the course of legislation in both State and the National Legislatures.

MUST CURB IMPROPER USE OF MONEY POWER

It is absolutely incumbent upon us that we investigate to the limit, and enact laws to curb the concentrated, undue and lavish and improper use of the power of money to influence elections and legislative decisions.

This money power works through both parties, at national, State and local levels. Of course, it is not the oil and gas industry alone which has used vast and improper expenditures, in this country's political life. There are others. Going back over the long struggle of the people of this country to rid themselves of political corruption, one may mention other highly reputable industries, other highly reputable divisions of commerce and industry, which have sometimes used the same improper but legal weapon, the massive use of money in politics. In our history we have seen abuse of the money power in politics and government by the mining industry, the railroads, the big insurance companies, the banks, the shipping lines—just to name a few occasional offenders. The whisky trade, to name another. And within our very recent memories are revelations of similar abuse of money power in politics by industries and commercial enterprises of no such status as these lines of industry which I have just named. I refer to the horse racing, dog racing, slot machine divisions of a nationwide gambling industry. Now, all the people within all these industries are legally and morally entitled to use campaign contributions up to a certain extent. They are entitled in law to lobby within certain limits. They all have a right to see that their views and interests are given proper representation in the government of the people. Our problem is where to draw the line and the limit, beyond which the use of the money power is improper and corrupts our electoral and legislative process.

This is both a complex and deceptively simple question.

INERTIA HAMPERS REFORM

Year after year our people, or some of them, have tried to deal with this complex problem of the corrupt practice in national, State and local elections. Hardly a year has gone by for the last generation but what some bill designed to correct an admitted national evil has been introduced in the Congress. But there is a natural inertia, I believe we all must confess if we are honest, in any body of elected representatives of the people, when it comes to any change in the rules which govern their own elections. They have adjusted themselves to living under the old ones. They have won their seats in legislative assemblies under the old ones. A great many other matters are brought before them for legislation. And reform of the election laws, however, much needed, has, therefore, languished far too long in my opinion, and in the opinion of so many other Senators and voters that it has now come before us as a matter of urgent necessity.

An extended study of the provisions regulating Federal elections and of the practices of our election campaigns has convinced me that the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, the basic law governing Federal elections, requires a considerable overhauling. For some 5 years, as a member of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, I participated in the investigations of election contests in Ohio, Maryland, New Mexico, Michigan, and several other States. In fact, part of the time I guided these investigations as the chairman of the subcommittee. This experience left no doubt in my mind that the act of 1925 was inadequate, even at the time of its enactment. Some of these inadequacies went to the substance of the law and some were due to the shortcomings of its language.

MAJOR DEFECTS OF CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT

The 1925 act has eight major defects:

First. It makes no attempt to limit or provide for publicity for expenditures in primary elections, conventions, or caucuses, despite the fact that in approximately one-third of our States success in the primary is, in effect, tantamount to election. Since Federal law does apply to general elections in all of the States, the exemption from that law of primaries and other nominating devices results in an incomplete and distorted picture of campaign finance.

Second. Existing law fails to place any effective limitation on contributions or expenditures even in final elections. This failure is due to several factors, including the fact that existing law regulates only the contributions received and the expenditures made by candidates themselves and does not apply to political committees which support them unless those committees are national in character. Moreover, the existing law establishes such unreal limitations on expenditures which a candidate may lawfully make that it invites, encourages, and even demands evasion.

Third. Existing law fails to fix the responsibility clearly either for improper expenditures or for failure to file reports in compliance with such law. Furthermore, it allows ad hoc political committees, created frequently with a candidate's complete awareness, to participate in exceedingly questionable campaign practices on behalf of that candidate, without providing that the candidate on whose behalf such practices are engaged in shall bear responsibility, even though he may be cognizant of such practices.

Fourth. The provisions of existing law insofar as it concerns the reporting of contributions and expenditures are confusing and onerous and provide many opportunities for evasion or avoidance.

Fifth. Existing law fails to provide adequate publicity for even the small number of reports filed in compliance with its provisions.

Sixth. Existing law does not apply to large numbers of organizations, both national and intrastate in character, which, while not directly supporting particular candidates, frequently exercise a controlling influence over election.

Seventh. Existing law provides no adequate means of checking the reports that are made or of enforcing the penalties prescribed for its violation.

Eighth. Existing law does not apply to any committee operating only within one State in behalf of a candidate for elective Federal office. It thus exempts a large number of organizations formed for a single purpose—to influence a Federal election—from any effective control or regulation.

PROVISIONS OF HENNINGS BILL

Mr. President, so much for the defects of existing Federal election laws. I now wish to discuss two bills dealing with election reform which have been introduced in the Senate. One of them, S. 636, was introduced by me on January 21, 1955—over 18 months ago—on behalf of myself, the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]. This Senate bill, S. 636, which bears Senate Calendar No. 629, was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Rules and Administration by Senator GREEN more than 13 months ago. It has remained on the Senate Calendar since, waiting for the Senate to act on it. This bill contains the following provisions:

First. To extend the coverage of Federal law regulating corrupt practices in general elections to primaries and caucuses held for the purpose of selecting candidates for elective Federal offices.

Second. To extend the coverage of Federal law regulating financial activities of interstate political committees to all political committees expending more than $100 annually which are active in campaigns for elective Federal office.

Third. To centralize, to the extent that such is practicable, responsibility for campaign practices and tactics.

Fourth. To improve, and make more realistic, reporting requirements imposed on candidates for elective Federal office and political committees supporting such candidates.

Fifth. To increase the amount candidates for elective Federal office may legally spend to seek nomination or election.

Sixth. To provide for legislative supervision of the enforcement by executive agencies of the Federal Government of Federal laws regulating corrupt practices in Federal elections.

Seventh. To limit the amount that an individual may spend or contribute in the aggregate to a total of $10,000.

LIMITATIONS IMPLICIT IN AMERICAN PHILOSOPHY

Those are the principal purposes of the bill, as laid down by the majority of the Rules Committee which has endorsed this legislation. Within that purpose of establishing realistic limits of expenditure, you may be sure, the principle that expenditures shall be so limited that no few rich contributors may dominate political decisions within the country is implicit. It is implicit by reason of that entire philosophy of democratic, popular government in action expressed so ably by Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Woodrow Wilson, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, and others. That is why a specific limitation of $10,000 as any one individual's contribution in a national election was written into the bill.

BILL APPROVED BY RULES COMMITTEE

The bill, as finally adopted by the majority of the Rules Committee provided for a complete repeal of the old Corrupt Practices Act, which had proven so ineffective. In reporting it, the majority suggested that legislation in the field of political expenditure on radio and television might well be incorporated as amendments. Majority members of the committee also have favored inclusion of the provisions of a bill now before the House of Representatives, giving tax exemption on political contributions up to $100 by individuals. This would be to encourage larger numbers of small contributions by average citizens in the moderate income group, and make the campaign funds of both major parties less dependent on a few gifts by big contributors.

Altogether, a good many months before there was any talk of a bipartisan bill to amend the Corrupt Practices Act, the leadership of the majority party within the Senate had S. 636, an honest elections bill, ready for debate on the floor of the Senate. It was ready for debate just as soon as a green light should be given under normal processes of congressional procedure.

BILL CAREFULLY DRAFTED

Mr. President, this honest elections bill, S. 636, represents, I believe the most adequate and advanced attempt ever made in this country to enact a satisfactory election law. It is a measure based upon earlier proposals made by many distinguished Members of this body. It incorporates the wisdom of congressional committees over a period of three decades. It was drafted on the basis of recommendations made by such committees and with full attention to the advice and counsel of lawyers, political scientists, party officials, and officeholders.

LITTLE INTEREST IN ELECTION REFORM UNTIL SENATOR CASE MADE CHARGES

This bill has been the subject of a good many speeches, both in the Senate Chamber and elsewhere, and the subject of a great deal of editorial comment by papers throughout the country, but until early February of this year, it received little interest in the United States Senate. In early February, an event occurred which created a great deal of interest in the Senate on the subject of election reform. This incident was the revelation by the junior Senator from South Dakota, Mr. FRANCIS CASE, that he had been offered a campaign contribution by an oil lobbyist in appreciation for his anticipated vote in favor of the natural gas bill. Senators will recall that on February 6, the distinguished majority leader called for an investigation of the incident reported by Senator CASE. Senators will recall that on the same day I attempted to have the resolution to make such an investigation broadened to cover the entire subject of the influence of money to influence legislation in the Congress and Federal elections. Senators will recall that, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, I announced on February 7 that this subcommittee would hold a meeting while the Senate was in session to investigate Senator CASE's charges, and that I obtained unanimous consent for the subcommittee to meet for this purpose. Senators will recall that simultaneously a select committee was appointed pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Senate to investigate the charges of Senator CASE, and that this select committee claimed exclusive jurisdiction over the subject matter, and that the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was, in effect, thwarted in its efforts to conduct its investigation of the general subject, beginning with the charges of Senator CASE. Senators will recall that President Eisenhower vetoed the natural gas bill, charging arrogance on the part of certain lobbyists. Senators will recall that, pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Senate, a select committee of eight Senators was chosen to make a broad investigation into lobbying and campaign contributions. Senators will recall that the select committee had great difficulty in agreeing on rules of procedure, and that on March 8, I gave notice during a session of the Senate that I would move at the end of one week to discharge the committee if it had not organized itself as a committee, with a chairman and committee rules and was ready to proceed with a thorough investigation. Senators will recall that thereafter it appears that the Select Committee To Investigate Lobbying has been functioning quietly and has issued a few reports.

JOHNSON-KNOWLAND BILL OBTAINS 85 COSPONSORS—LEGISLATION BY ACCLAMATION

During the time that these events which I have listed were transpiring, there appeared to be more and more interest in the enactment of adequate Federal election laws, and on February 28, 1956, another bill, S. 3308, known as the Johnson-Knowland bill, was introduced by the distinguished majority leader on behalf of himself and the distinguished minority leader, and a good many other Senators on both sides of the aisle. This bill was permitted to lie on the table for an extended period to enable other Senators to add their names to the list of cosponsors. At the time, it was introduced on February 28, it had 20 cosponsors. On March 5, 49 Senators were cosponsors, and on the 6th of March 62 Senators had signified their sponsorship. By the 14th of March, at least 85 Members of this body joined the list of cosponsors of this bill. The situation created by the new and overwhelming enthusiasm for this bill amounted to a new kind of legislative or parliamentary action—legislation by acclamation. Mr. President, I do not exaggerate. At the time that this bill was cosponsored by the 85th Senator, the Senate consisted of only 95 Senators—the seat which had been occupied by the late Senator Harley Kilgore was still vacant. Therefore, if only 10 more Senators had signed the list of cosponsors, we would have had a parliamentary situation which I dare say would have been unique in the history of legislative bodies. Often, when an idea occurs to a legislator which he feels is likely to be overwhelmingly popular, he is apt to restrict its sponsorship to himself alone, or to his committee handling this type of legislation, or at the very outside, to Members of his own party. But here we were presented with no such ordinary situation. Here the principal sponsor sought the counsel and advice not only of Members of his own party, but the leadership of the opposing party. In concert, the Senate leaders used their great persuasive powers in an effort to induce all Senators to become cosponsors of this bill.

HENNINGS DECLINED TO BE COSPONSOR

As much as I would have liked to join with the 85 Senators in the mounting drive to reform the election laws, I declined to become a cosponsor because even though S. 3308 was in fact in most respects almost a carbon copy of S. 636, which I had introduced myself more than a year earlier, it did not cover primary elections and was in my opinion deficient in certain other respects. Senator MARGARET CHASE SMITH, who had felt the effects of large campaign contributions used against her in the 1954 primary election in her State, also declined to become a cosponsor of the Johnson-Knowland bill, S. 3308. I do not have personal knowledge as to the reasons why the other few remaining Senators failed to join.

Now let it be clearly understood that I am, in no sense critical, of the efforts of the majority and minority leaders to win universal approval for their bill. Quite the contrary, in fact—I am full of admiration for their large success in obtaining 85 names as cosponsors of this legislation—I imagine an all-time high in cosponsorship in the history of the United States Senate. It behooves any legislator to win as many adherents as possible to his cause.

As a Senator who sponsored a bill which was reported to the Senate only after long months of hearings and study in committee, I was greatly impressed by the enthusiasm and speed with which the 85 Senators put forward their bill. Mr. President, I must confess that at times I was filled with concern lest I be the only Senator not to sign my name to the list of cosponsors.

SENATE APPEARED TO LOSE INTEREST IN ELECTION REFORM

However, time passed. The Senate chose a select committee of eight distinguished Senators to make a broad investigation of lobbying activities of all kinds, and that committee has been at work for some months now. Knowing that the select committee was at its job of ferreting out, in every nook and cranny, the full story of lobbying activities, the Senate, as a body, appears to have relaxed from the tension of modernizing the Federal election laws and, I think it is fair to say, for the last 3 or 4 months has made no further move toward reforming the Federal election laws. S. 3308 has been resting with the committee to which it was referred and where it did languish, and languishing, it did die.

Mr. President, I have outlined—as briefly as I can—the inadequacies of our present election laws, and the reforms contained in the bill which I sponsored along with other Senators, S. 636, which is now on the Senate Calendar. I have also, Mr. President, briefly outlined the legislative history of these bills and the interest of Senators in enacting amendments to the Federal election laws, which reached its zenith at the time when the 85th Senator added his name to the list of cosponsors of S. 3308, and which appears to have since declined.

Does the failure of the Senate to debate and pass an honest-election bill reflect a lack of interest in this subject on the part of people, generally, in the country. I think not. We cannot expect the public to maintain their interest in a subject constantly in a state of white-hot heat. The public will focus its attention on particular legislative problems from time to time. Under our political system, there are always many problems to be solved. Each day brings new crises and new problems. The attention of the public can be centered on these problems, not all at one time, but one after another.

I have referred to a number of recent editorials in metropolitan papers as indicating the continuing interest in this subject by thoughtful people. I say, Mr. President, that it is in order for the Senate to adopt some substantial legislation amending the Federal election laws. It seems to me we must, at the very least, enact a law which would provide for a full disclosure on the part of substantial contributors to campaign funds, and the expenditures of campaign funds by candidates and political committees. In addition, it is obvious to everybody that we should amend our Federal election laws to lift the ceilings on the maximum amounts that can be expended by candidates and political committees to realistic limits. With these basic reforms enacted during this session, Congress would have gone a long way toward enacting an adequate Federal election law. The responsibility for failing to enact such legislation will rest with both political parties if we adjourn without enacting such legislation.

Therefore, at this late hour, when we have heard that there is a possibility of the Senate adjourning sine die tomorrow or the next day, I call upon Senators to come forward with their suggestions and with their assurances of support for enacting, at the very least, a few reforms in the Federal Corrupt Practices Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD following my remarks some newspaper headlines which will provide a bare outline of the course of events. In this way, Senators can get a full and graphic picture concerning the course of the proposed Federal elections reform legislation during the 84th Congress.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD three editorials relating to this subject.

ACTION FOR HONEST ELECTIONS

A fellow who won't mend his roof before it rains sometimes has to get wet in doing the job. That's the position of Congress today regarding election law reform.

For years there has been wide agreement that repairs are necessary. More than a year ago Senator HENNINGS introduced a bill on which hearings were held and committee approval obtained. But Senate leaders thought the bill needed revision. Also, it was raining—the partisan atmosphere and the campaign contributions of an election year were already in evidence.

Then, in February, came the sensational disclosure that $2,500 gifts were being offered Senators whose thinking about the natural gas bill was satisfactory. Congress—and especially the Senate—decided something would have to be done.

Two investigations were started. That headed by Senator GEORGE was limited to ramifications of the Case case. A select committee to deal with the broader questions first was stymied to force the shelving of the energetic Senator GORE as prospective chairman, then was bogged down in side issues under the chairmanship of Senator MCCLELLAN.

Senate leadership also went to work on a second course—legislation. Senator JOHNSON, majority leader, and Senator KNOWLAND, minority leader joined in offering an alternative to the Hennings bill. There had been objections that the latter failed to deal with labor union contributions and would regulate primaries as well as elections.

The primaries feature was dropped in the Johnson-Knowland bill, and it was shaped mainly along lines of insuring honest reporting of contributions. Within a few days 85 Senators put their endorsement on this bill. But 4 months later it hasn't gotten out of committee.

This is not due merely to a desire to put off the roof mending. Earnest study has been given to improving the bill. Clarifying and useful changes have been made. But between those who want one or another controversial extension of the measure and those who have no enthusiasm for fixing roofs—especially when election-year campaign gifts have begun to shower down—the bill appears blockaded.

If anything at all is to be done this year to help make elections more honest, quick and vigorous action will be required. Prompt passage by the Senate would give the Johnson-Knowland bill a chance to get through the House before adjournment at the month's end.

It seems to us that the good faith of the Senate is now involved. Under the last of scandal it made a great show of willingness to expose abuses and enact reforms. With exposure having been maneuvered into a quiet backwater of committee inaction, only the chance for improved legislation remains. The very least the Senate can honorably do is insure the better reporting of campaign contributions provided in the Johnson-Knowland bill.

[From the Washington Post and Times Herald of July 19, 1956]

CLEAN ELECTIONS IN THE CLOSET

In the absence of any apparent effort to bring the honest elections bill to the floor, we conclude most reluctantly that the Senate leadership has no intention of seeking action on this essential corrective. We earnestly hope we are wrong. It would be sad to think that the fine spate of senatorial indignation, following the disclosure by Senator FRANCIS CASE of the brazen attempt to influence his vote on the natural-gas bill, was merely for effect. Yet what is the public to think of the failure to take any effective steps to check this kind of corruption?

The honest elections bill, as drawn up by Majority Leader JOHNSON and Minority Leader KNOWLAND themselves and indorsed by 83 other Senators, has 2 essentially simple objectives. It would require far more comprehensive reporting of campaign contributions and would set more realistic limits on campaign expenditures. It also would empower television and radio stations to make time available to the candidates of major parties without the obligation to make equal time available to the nominee of every last splinter group. A third desirable objective—an income-tax deduction of up to $100 for political contributions—was eliminated from the Senate bill in the expectation that the House, which must initiate money bills, would act on it.

These are not radical objectives; but the Johnson-Knowland bill, which is in the form of a substitute for the Hennings bill, probably represents the most that realistically could be accomplished at this session of Congress. Even this mild reform has run into some trouble. Senator GOLDWATER has threatened to introduce an amendment drastically restricting the campaign participation of organized labor. Some unions in turn object to the language of the bill as already too restrictive on them and too weak in other particulars.

But none of these difficulties furnishes a valid excuse for the failure to extract the bill from the Rules Committee for a vote on the floor. There is good reason to think that some of the objections could be overridden or compromised as in the case of at least one previous question. Even if the difficulties should prove insurmountable, the leadership could at least say honorably that it had done its best. As things look now, citizens who are disturbed by the smudge written over the good name of Congress by the improprieties in the gas bill fight and by other long-recognized abuses will have to voice their protests during the campaign and at the polls. Perhaps it will be necessary to remind Senators that if they are too reluctant to clean house the voters can do it for them.

[From the New York Times of July 21, 1956]

ELECTION SPENDING

Existing legislation to control campaign expenditures in national elections has for years been hopelessly ineffective and totally unrealistic. Although present laws limit a candidate to spending $25,000 and $5,000 for Senate and House respectively, it is known that actual expenditures often run much higher—over $100,000 per candidate for the Senate in one recent case.

Present law limits the national committee's expenditures to $3 million each; but it is estimated that the real cost of electing the 83d Congress ran anywhere from $75 to $200 million. Individual contributions are supposedly limited to $5,000; but it is easy to evade this legal restraint.

At the time of the furor last winter over the natural gas bill public interest was aroused once again in the necessity of bringing campaign-control laws up to date. The Senate leaders had at their hand the Hennings bill which had been reported by the Rules Committee in June 1955. In addition to raising the monetary limitations and making other changes, that bill also covered primaries—an important point that made it both more effective and less popular.

The Senate leaders have had plenty of time to get action on the election bill they themselves introduced that excluded consideration of the primaries. What has happened? Nothing, except a desultory and pointless "inquiry" by Senator MCCLELLAN into lobbying on the natural gas bill.

While one may fairly have doubts as to the effectiveness of any campaign-expenditures control bill at all, the least that both parties owe the public is a law as stringent as the Hennings bill, with the additional provision that small political contributions be deductible from income tax. It is incumbent on Congress—in its own as well as the public interest—to give us a decent, workable revision of existing campaign expenditure laws and give it to us before the presidential election.

Mr. HENNINGS. I thank the distinguished occupant of the chair for his indulgence at this late hour.

I also thank my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CLEMENTS] for remaining.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I was glad to be on the floor when the Senator from Missouri spoke.

Mr. HENNINGS. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for his observation.

TRANSACTION OF ADDITIONAL ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following additional routine business was transacted:

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. EASTLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment:

H. R. 6586. An act to amend section 7 of the War Claims Act of 1948, with respect to claims of certain religious organizations functioning in the Philippine Islands (Rept. No. 2813).

By Mr. CLEMENTS (for Mr. EASTLAND), from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment;

H. R. 10898. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Randall McMahon (Rept. No. 2814); and

H. R. 11911. An act to authorize negotiations with respect to a compact to provide for a definition or relocation of the common boundary between Arizona and California, and for the appointment by the President of a Federal representative to the compact negotiations (Rept. No. 2812).

By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas (for Mr. CHAVEZ), from the Committee on Public Works, without amendment:

H. R. 10468. No. 2815); and

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS AND A SPECIAL SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS TO SUBMIT A REPORT AFTER ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I request unanimous consent to file for printing, after adjournment, a brief report on the subject of Upper Columbia River Development, on which hearings were held this session by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and a special subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I send to the desk 34 nominations of postmasters, unanimously approved by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I believe that in all the strain under which we work, it is worth while once in a while to remember that occasionally a bright ray of sunshine comes through.

Yesterday when the able Senator from South Carolina reported the nominations of 100 postmasters the able minority leader came over to him and said, "I take this is a part of the bill for aid to distressed areas." [Laughter.]

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico said, on the same day, that inasmuch as 100 postmaster nominations had been reported, he took it for granted that there were 100 distressed areas. There are 34 postmaster nominations on this list, so evidently 34 more distressed areas have been found. [Laughter.]

BILL INTRODUCED

A bill was introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON:

S. 4298. A bill to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954; to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

(See the remarks of Mr. ANDERSON when he introduced the above bill, which appear under a separate heading.)

RESOLUTION

The following resolution was submitted, and unanimously agreed to:

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

S. Res. 324. Resolution expressing the appreciation of the Senate for the services rendered by James W. Murphy and members of his family as Official Reporters of Debates.

(See the remarks of Mr. O'MAHONEY when he submitted the above resolution, which appear under a separate heading.)

AMENDMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1954

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954. This is a bill dealing with the cooperation of the States. It is not my hope or expectation that any consideration will be given to the bill at this time. It is being introduced merely for the purpose of submitting it to the States and getting the ideas of State officials as to the type of legislation which should be enacted to provide for cooperation between the States and the Federal Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 4298) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, introduced by Mr. ANDERSON, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. HAYDEN submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1256) to provide for the appointment of additional circuit and district judges, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, July 26, 1956, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 497. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Washoe reclamation project, Nevada and California;

S. 1161. An act to abolish the Fossil Cycad National Monument, S. Dak., and for other purposes;

S. 1243. An act for the relief of certain aliens;

S. 1324. An act to waive certain provisions of section 212 (a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act in behalf of certain aliens;

S. 1400. An act to protect the integrity of grade certificates under the United States Grain Standards Act;

S. 1873. An act to increase the minimum postal savings deposit, and for other purposes;
